Perry arrested for DUI

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Marcus Perry, junior in pre-professional architectural engineering and linebacker for the K-State football team, was arrested early Sunday morning in the 1100 block of Poyntz Avenue for DUI, said Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department.

Perry was westbound on Poyntz Avenue when a Riley County Police officer stopped him for traffic violations, Quintanar said.

"Perry was observed driving left of center, and was stopped for that infraction," Quintanar said.

Bond was set at $750.

Would-be robber targets students

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two K-State students were the victims of an attempted robbery as they withdrew money from the Commerce Bank ATM at 1350 Westloop Place on Saturday.

Clancey Livingston, junior in biology, and Aaron Tygart, junior in computer science, were attempting to withdraw money from the Commerce Bank ATM when they were approached by a juvenile demanding money.

"While I was trying to get money, this guy came up and demanded money," Livingston said.

While typing in his personal identification number, he deliberately made a mistake, causing the assailant to believe he didn't have any money in his account, Livingston said.

The juvenile ran away and jumped into a car that was waiting for him, but didn't get very far, Livingston said.

A Riley County Police officer was in the area, and Livingston and Tygart flagged him down, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said.

"He didn't even make it out of Westloop," Livingston said.

The juvenile was wearing a heavy coat and had his hand in his pocket, telling Livingston and Tygart he had a gun.

"They demanded money, or said they would shoot them," Quintanar said.

One juvenile was released to his parents, and the other was released to Geary County Juvenile Corrections.

While the assailant wanted to make them believe there was a gun, Livingston said he wasn't very scared.

"The guy just wasn't very intimidating," Livingston said.

Long hours online, neglect of responsibilities, erosion of personal life could indicate addiction to Internet

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The encyclopedia, the almanac and the card catalog: three useful research tools whose function is easily fulfilled by the Internet, which, for the most part, has made the research process faster and easier. One distinct advantage of those old methods, however, is the very slight chance that anyone could ever become addicted to them.

Internet Addiction Disorder (IAD) is an obsessive behavior regarding the Internet, whereupon the person affected spends hours online outside of what is considered normal and become irritable and angry when they don't have access to a computer.

Symptoms of a serious problem:

- They have a preoccupation in which the Internet becomes "irresistible."
- Using the Internet for longer periods than planned.
- Preoccupation causes significant problems in relationships, work, or other important areas of functioning.
- They try to cut back but can't.
- They have excessive thoughts about it.
- They get a sense of tension or arousal before doing it, and get pleasure afterward [illegible] after doing something.
- Their other responsibilities, such as paying the bills, get neglected.

Source: www.webmd.com

IAD is not recognized as an official mental disorder.

Ken Culton, coordinator of drug and alcohol prevention programs at the University of Southern Illinois, said college students use the computer and the Internet more than other people.

"The computer is something that is a necessary tool," Culton said. "It's an extension for all of us, but for college students it's so integrated into what's necessary for success."

Culton said Internet addiction is a compulsive behavior, similar to pathological gambling.

"The first thing that makes that connection is those that are gambling addicts, especially students, do so via the Internet," he said.

According to www.psychcentral.com, behavior that could be described as addictive regarding the Internet has several ties to pathological gambling disorder, because the criteria for the disorders are very similar. This similar criteria, however, is what makes IAD not a very credible mental disorder, because "borrowing" criteria from one disorder doesn't make another one legitimate.

Another reason IAD is not classified as a mental disorder is because researchers disagree on whether it is a disorder or a symptom of another problem.

According to psychcentral.com, many people who think they are addicted to the Internet are most likely suffering from a hesitancy to address other problems in their lives, known as avoidance behavior. Other methods of avoidance behavior are watching television, reading books and putting in extra hours at work.

"I started noticing a lot of students who were missing classes, ruining relationships – self-medicating using the Internet," Culton said.

He said self-medicating could cause a dependence, with some people using the Internet as an "inappropriate replacement for actual

Primary elections begin for SGA president

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eight presidential and vice presidential candidate teams will be narrowed down to two in today and Wednesday's primary elections.

Voting begins at 8 a.m. today and ends at 6 p.m. Wednesday.

Elections '06

Voting for SGA primary elections begins Feb. 28 and ends March 1. Vote at sgaelections.k-state.edu.

Elections Commissioner Tanner Banion said students should vote in primaries since they are choosing the leaders of the campus.

"It would be a wise decision to pick the smartest and most capable candidates to show your views to the administration, local and state officials," Banion said.

K-State-Salina will not have a primary election since only two pairs filed to run for student body president and vice president.

K-State-Salina will be allowed to vote in primary elections for K-State-Manhattan.

Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator in the Office of Student Activities and Services, said he encourages students to vote since there are eight pairs that all have a chance to be on the general election ballot.

"If students don't vote in the primary, there is a chance they won't vote for who they think would make the best student body president and vice president," Harlan said.

Candidates spend the most money on T-shirts

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

T-shirts are the biggest expense for presidential candidates in their campaign spending.

Elections Commissioner Tanner Banion said T-shirts are an easy way to campaign and get a campaign noticed.

"You can hand it to anyone, and they become a walking billboard for your campaign," Banion said.

Presidential candidate pair Matt King and Emily Besler spent the most on shirts, with $1,821.63 for 425 T-shirts, which were purchased at Pfeifley Jewelers and screen printed at Ballard Sporting Goods.

In comparison to 2005 elections, former presidential candidate pair Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner spent $1,644.50 T-shirts, which was the most spending for candidate pairs on T-shirts.

Student Body President Michael Burns said one difference in campaigning for student body president and a senate position is reaching the entire student body. T-shirts are one way to campaign outside of a candidate's college, he said.

Candidate spending:

- Matt King and Emily Besler
  T-shirts: $1,821.63
  Total expenses: $3,050.36
- Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy
  T-shirts: $896.78

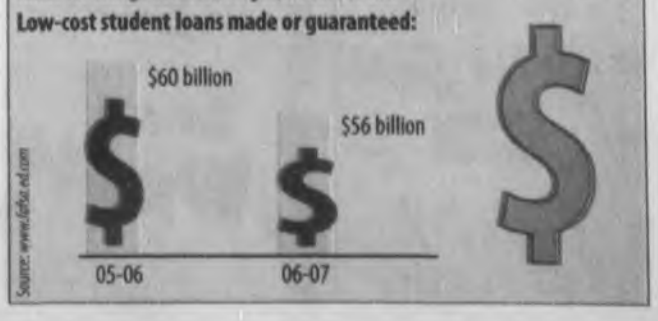
Zarqawi aide captured

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Interior Ministry forces captured a top aide to al-Qaeda in Iraq, leader Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, during a raid in western Iraq, a security official said. The official, a member of the ministry's counterinsurgency Wolf Brigade, identified the al-Qaeda figure as Abu al-Farouq, who was previously unknown. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak to the media.

Bird flu spreads

PARIS — The deadly H5N1 strain of bird flu was confirmed Monday in birds in a third African country, deepening experts' fears that the disease may be more widespread on the continent. Poor veterinary services, a shortage of laboratories, farmers' lack of knowledge and their fear that they will not be compensated if they report sick birds could be masking the extent of H5N1's spread in Africa, according to experts.



Sen. Clinton reacts

ALBANY, N.Y. — Reacting to a new book quoting Karl Rove as saying she will be the 2008 Democratic nominee for president, Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton said Monday that President Bush's chief political strategist "spends a lot of time obsessing about me." The former first lady also said she believed Rove and other Republicans are using her to divert attention from Republican problems as elections approach.

Students deal with eating disorders

As many as 10 percent of college women suffer from a clinical or nearly clinical eating disorder, according to www.womensissues.about.com.

Courtney Gilman, graduate assistant at the Women's Outreach Center, said eating disorders are in three categories: anorexia nervosa, bulimia nervosa and binge eating disorder.

"People who suffer from anorexia see themselves as obese when in reality they are extremely thin," Allen Knehans, nutrition professor, said.

People who suffer from bulimia nervosa binge and purge by eating large amounts and then vomiting or using laxatives to rid their body of the food they just ate, Knehans said.

Illustration by Elvis Achelpohl | COLLEGIAN

Binge-eating disorder is the most common eating disorder in the United States, Knehans said. Binge-eaters eat when they're not hungry.

The most common problems with this disorder are obesity, heart disease and diabetes.

Knehans said eating disorders are mental illnesses, and they have to be treated as such by psychologists and counselors.

BOOK TAX COULD GO IN UTAH

SALT LAKE CITY – The Utah legislature is considering a bill that would eliminate the sales tax on textbooks.

Rep. Duane Bourdeaux, D-Salt Lake City, said he is proposing House Bill 273 to ease financial burden on college students.

The House Revenue and Taxation Committee approved HB 273 by a 6-to-4 vote at a Feb. 22 meeting.

The official fiscal estimate for the bill indicates that about $4 million in revenue from would be lost.

Pam Hendrickson, chair of the Utah State Tax Commission, expressed concern that the bill did not limit the exemption to campus bookstores.

"The sales tax that's removed on the textbooks would go to the general fund, so there's not a direct result of lost revenue for the universities. It's the income tax that goes for higher education," Rep. Tim Cosgrove, D-Murray, said.

Union 50th anniversary events begin Wednesday

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Through the decades, the K-State and Manhattan communities have frequented the K-State Student Union for events and performances – including then-unknown acts from performers such as Bill Cosby, Jimmy Buffet and Steve Martin.

Students voted in favor of a student fee for a student union in 1938; however, they never got to experience the result.

"Students from 1941-1956 had been paying for a union they never got to use," said Bill Wisdom, assistant director of special projects at the Union, said. "You have a lot of debt to pay to these students."

A book on the history of the Union is now on sale for $25. Students can order their copies in the Director's Office of the Union from Doris Arnold.

The book includes a timeline of the development of the Union and the visitors who have come. There are excerpts from students and staff about what the Union means to them.

Beth Bailey, assistant director of the Union, said planning for the 50th anniversary has been going on since before she started working there in July 2004.

"UPC has worked really hard to plan two weeks of celebration," said Nacole Boan, junior in political science and president of Union Program Council. "We look forward to student participation in the 50th anniversary of the Union."

During the week, the 50th Anniversary of the Union Art Exhibit presented by the UPC Arts Committee and Union Graphics will be on display from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Union art gallery.

The Kansas Arts Commission, a state agency, and the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency, will present "The Mystical Arts of Tibet" sand painting exhibit in the Union Courtyard Wednesday through Friday. The opening ceremony and blessing for the Union will take place from noon to 1 p.m. Wednesday, and the monks will work until 7 p.m. On Thursday, they will be there from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. They will be making a Mandala sand painting.

"We are going to do our own Mandala," Bailey said. "Students can try it on their own. The nice thing about having it in the courtyard is that you can see the progress from above."

- The UPC Films Committee will present "Syriana" in Forum Hall this weekend. It will cost $1 at 8 p.m. Friday, and $2 on Saturday at 7 p.m. and 9:45 p.m. and Sunday at 8 p.m.
- UPC After Hours on Friday will have Robert Channing, a mind reader, at 9:30 p.m. in the Courtyard.
- The UPC Multicultural Committee will present on Monday the Festival of Nations in the Courtyard. The Peters Recreation Complex also will have specials from 8 to 11 p.m. There will be 50-cent bowling, shoe rental and billiards per half hour. There will be 50-cent medium fountain drinks all day.
- From 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. March 7, the Bluemont Buffet will cost $6.75 in the Bluemont Room and Ballroom. Crimpers Too will offer a 50-cent eyebrow wax with any service. The Tuesday Night Buzz, presented by the UPC Arts Committee, will feature The Benders from 7 to 8:30 p.m. in the Courtyard. "Twelve O'Clock High," the first movie ever shown in the Union, will be at 8:30 p.m. in the Little Theatre for 25 cents, the 1956 admission price.
- On March 8, the actual birthday of the Union, there will be a celebration with free cake from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. There also will be a live remote broadcast and a Mountain Dew sampling from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Courtyard. There also will be circus-theme activities and is called "A Night at the Circus," the program title of the 1956 opening of the Union. Taco Bell will have 50-cent tacos from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., and the Cat's Den will have 50-cent 24-ounce drinks. Panda Express will have two crab rangoons for 50 cents.
- There will be a KQLA-FM 103.5 remote broadcast from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. March 9 in the Union Bookstore. A limited number of Q Bucks will be distributed. The Cat's Den will also have 50-cent hot dogs. David Eisenhower will give a Lou Douglas Lecture at 7 p.m. in Forum Hall.
- March 10, the Union Food Court will have coffee for 50 cents off of a 12-ounce cup. After Hours will be Magicians Spike and Hammer in a Harry Potter Extravaganza at 7 p.m. in Forum Hall. That weekend the movie will be "Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire." The UPC Films Committee will present the movie at 9:30 p.m. in Forum Hall for $1. It will also be shown at 9:30 p.m. on March 11 and 8 p.m. on March 12 for $2.
- March 11 is the Union's 50th Anniversary Celebration. Tours of the Union will begin at 4 p.m. A reception will be from 5 to 6 p.m. in the Cat's Pause Lounge and the banquet will begin at 6 p.m. in the Ballroom. These are invite-only events.

Colloquium addresses difference between men's, women's roles

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's studies faculty colloquium on Monday afternoon compared the lives of two designers at the 1876 Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition in the late 19th century and discussed the role and status of the two genders in society.

The colloquium, "Men's Space, Women's Place: A Metaphor from the Centennial Exposition," refers to how, historically, being a man has been considered normative, while the women just occupy a place in the man's space.

"This is a good way to get to know about interesting research that faculty members undertake outside of day-to-day classes," said Angela Hubler, associate professor of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The presenters, Karen DeBres, associate professor of geography, and Laura Moley, visiting assistant professor of geography, talked about the lives of Henry Worrall and Martha Maxwell, respectively.

Worrall was an artist who lived in Kansas and produced landscapes, satirical works and portraits, DeBres said.

"Maxwell was a naturalist and a taxidermist who created dynamic displays of Colorado's wildlife," Moley said. "Maxwell's diorama at the Philadelphia Centennial was titled 'Woman's Work.'"

While Worrall was the chief designer of the Kansas exhibition, Maxwell was the chief designer of the Colorado exhibition at the Kansas-Colorado State Building for the 1876 Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition. The Colorado exhibits had a fourth of the area that the Kansas exhibits occupied.

The discussion revolved around how the two artists, who presumably met for the first time at the 1876 exhibition, led seemingly similar lives. In reality, their lives were starkly different, the presenters said.

The presenters emphasized on the unconventional paths that the two designers had opted for.

"Worrall chose a career in art, which was not traditionally male-dominated," DeBres said.

Moley said Maxwell's life revolved around the sciences, which, at the time, was unusual for women.

At the Philadelphia Exhibition, Worrall received a sizable salary for displaying his ornamental work. His "liberty bell," which he made out of woven grass, was given a prime location in the building.

Maxwell on the other hand, was not paid the amount she had been promised by the authorities at the exhibition and had to raise money by selling photographs.

Comparing the state of the two individuals, the presenters talked about the lavish life Worrall led compared to the financial and familial struggles Maxwell had to battle.

"These differences were mainly caused by the society's larger understanding of gender," Moley said.

DeBres said that in his last days, Worrall owned an art gallery on Kansas Avenue in Topeka and died peacefully in his Topeka home surrounded by his children and grandchildren.

"Maxwell was in debt and struggled to make ends meet," Moley said.

Angela Hubler, acting director of women's studies, laughs during a presentation about "Men's space, women's place: a metaphor from the centennial expansion." The presentation provided a slide show and readings for the audience.

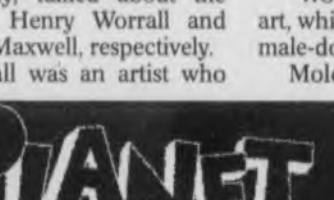
She had to juggle her marriage, her penchant for the study of science, and her daughter, Mabel. Maxwell finally died of a kind of cancer.



"The presentation clearly showed that it's a man's world and women have a small place," Jennifer Newberry, senior in mass communications, said.

She said viewing the presentation was interesting because the presenters used old, rare photographs, which lent greater understanding to the topic.

"Things have both changed and not changed in today's world," said Valerie Carroll, instructor in the College of Arts and Sciences dean's office. "Hillary Clinton is expected to know how to bake cookies, raise a family and be a politician."

TO THE POINT

Addiction to Internet can ruin students' lives

As students, we use the Internet at least once a day and often more. Turning to the computer for any answer we seek, it is easy to become lost in the information available on the Internet. A non-classified mental disorder known as Internet Addiction Disorder is still debated but the possibility of becoming addicted to the Internet exists.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Internet addiction can ruin relationships, school, work and take over a person's life. People should be able to recognize the signs and find help if necessary, but prevention is the best option.

Many other media provide the barrage of information, but the Internet seduces people with entertainment, news, e-mail and Facebook.com.

None of these activities are bad, they are relaxing, informative, entertaining and useful when used in moderation. Approaching the Internet cautiously and recognizing the power it has to suck in even the most time-pressed surfer can help prevent spending too much time on the Internet.

Be aware of the pitfalls and use the Internet with moderation. Instead of looking at Web sites or playing online games, read a book or give your instant messaging friend a phone call.

In college there isn't anybody to tell you to go to bed anymore, so exercise self-control and use the Internet wisely.

Bad for business

U.S. officials must stop insulting Arab partners

JONAS HOGG

We see with sadness that United States seaports are doomed; bureaucrats will see them pillaged and burnt in a manner that will shock everyone but the Mongols and Texas.

A business based in the United Arab Emirates is scheduled to take over security in U.S. ports, which has created a buffet table of pundits telling us this is a bad idea.

Someone shoot me, abandonment of rational thought in favor of the abused reasoning of, "Arabs! Ruuuuun!"

They point out that the UAE is in the Middle East, as if that were some well-guarded fact, and due to its geography must be full to the brim of people who look funny, can't speak American and don't eat Big Macs; therefore, they cannot be trusted.

Those who don't rely solely on the tube for information tell you that two of the Sept. 11 hijackers were from the UAE. Oh.

Yes, evidence concludes that the UAE, a country of 2.5 million people, has produced at least two terrorists – God save us all.

We need not mention that the contract is being taken over from a British firm, Britain having no terrorist, of course.

Britain does not have, for example, a citizen by the name of Richard Reid who attempted to blow up an airplane mid-flight by hiding explosives in his shoes.

Nor does Britain have an Irish Republican Army that has been merrily incinerating cars for several decades, nor does Britain have numerous supremacist groups on terrorist watch lists.

Neither, for that matter, does the U.S. have terrorist groups, other than the federal government.

The U.S. has not, in recent history, had a building bombed in, say, Oklahoma for instance.

So with the western world so well insulated from terrorism, it is understandable they would not want to subject themselves to the evil-doings of foreigners -- most of whom are brown and rub their hands together while saying "heh, heh, heh."

So telling people they're untrustworthy hurts business relations. Who knew?

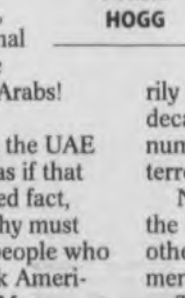
In response, we will feign indignation and pretend we weren't really insinuating that all Arabs are terrorists when we insinuated that all Arabs are terrorists.

Rapidly the pundits are trying to solidify their position on grounds other than "Arabs can't be trusted." But they do it in the same sort of twitchy nervous way as a man who started telling a racist joke only to realize someone of the joke's target race is only a few seats down and listening intently.

"I mean, what I really wanted to say, is, uhhhh ..."

Meanwhile, the UAE continues its support of the west and of free markets wondering, perhaps, why they even bother.

Decades worth of Washington's façade of tolerance and multiculturalism burns up like a fart in a firestorm, while silver-spoon bureaucrats and CNN's Lou Dobbs warn us of the danger inherent in having a Middle Eastern country doing port security. All the while oblivious of the fact that our own security lost four fricking airplanes and couldn't find them again until they started lawn-darting into things.



In a gesture of supreme graciousness, the UAE firm keeps allowing delays, keeps allowing greater inquiry into their records, keeps giving and giving and giving, which they soon will realize is a bad idea, as bureaucrats keep taking and taking.

So we stagnate, insult our business partners and allies and keep primetime cable occupied with the drivel that we so love. Coming to the least thought out conclusion imaginable:

"Arabs! Ruuuuun!"

Quitting, giving up activities causes regret

I ran across this quote by Harriet Beecher Stowe on a random Web surfing trip the other day, and it got me thinking. I don't think I'm alone when I say that there are a lot of things I should have said and a lot of things I should have done in certain situations that never quite happened.

Regret is a monster with many heads. It does not have to involve a major life decision, or be something that changed who you were. The only criteria regret has to follow is the ability to bring you back to that moment, time and time again.

When I think of regret, I think of my senior year in high school. I lived for softball, and for that fabulous day in March when we began practice. I was never the most athletic kid growing up, as my friends and family have had pleasure in reminding me through the years. In junior high basketball, the first day I had braces, I forgot to catch the ball and upon hitting me in the mouth, I received a permanent imprint of the brackets in my lower lip. No, I was not very athletic.

Then I discovered softball, and that I could play. I wasn't incredible, but I got the job done. I loved it and played my heart out.

I played third base and relished my time there. In my younger years, I didn't do much but warm the bench, but I knew I was working my way up.

I played a decent amount on the varsity team my junior year, and my mind raced when I thought of the possibilities for the next year. It didn't quite pan out that way though.

My senior year, a freshman girl came onto the team that I was pretty sure had never had a basketball hit her square in the face. She was an incredible athlete, and was immediately elevated to the status of "Probably the Best Player on the Team." I wasn't worried, though – she pitched, and I had my spot, on that little bag of heaven they call third, firmly cemented. Nope.

She decided she wanted to play third base. I was devastated and wanted to hate her so badly, but she was so nice that it was impossible. My coach promised equal playing time, and for awhile I believed her. I had my best season ever that year, pushed harder by anger and the desire to show everyone that I had what it took.

I really believe that I did. However, my coach didn't share that opinion. I soon found myself in right field, which is pretty much like a big red sign saying "Why Bother." It was breaking my heart, and I couldn't take anymore long bus rides home, wondering what I did wrong.

It sounds pathetic, I know, but when you work years for something you care about, and you feel it slide out of your reach, it kills you, no matter how trivial it may be. So I did the one thing I had always sworn I would never do, in any aspect of my life. I quit.

I cried when I told my coach, and I don't think I've played since. At the time, I told myself that it was becoming a waste of my time, and if softball was out of the way, maybe I could work more, or focus on school.

Now I just see it as a cop-out. Yes, it sucked, and yes, I still think it was entirely unfair, but I should have stuck it out. My love for the game should have driven me to practice, every day, and just be happy I had a glove on my hand and cleats on my feet, and not worry about where or if I was playing.

I can honestly say I think about it every day and kick myself for it just as often. I consider myself to be a stronger person than that, and the fact that I gave up and let somebody else win is my biggest regret as of yet in my life. My softball team went to state that year, and I was at home watching television.

Students get creative with scrapbooking club

By Kelsey Childress
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new group on campus calls for students to unite in their common interest of preserving memories on paper.

Scrapbookers Unite, which was created in fall 2005 as a place for students to meet and scrapbook together.

After becoming a large group on Facebook.com, Brie Handgraaf, junior in mass communications, started Scrapbookers Unite as an official club at K-State.

Handgraaf said she is passionate about her club, and she created it so she could scrapbook with other college students.

"I started Scrapbookers Unite because I hardly knew anyone my age who scrapbooked, and I knew there had to be more college students who scrapbooked," she said.

The club meets twice a month in the K-State Student Union.

"We just get together and scrapbook," Handgraaf said. "People bring whatever they want to work on, and we just enjoy the time getting together and having fun. I generally bring a movie to watch, and we just devote the time to working on our pages."

"I had just begun scrapbooking (when I joined the club), and I wanted to be around people who had done it for awhile so that I could get more ideas," Joleen Wilson, junior in food and nutrition and exercise science, said. "(Scrapbooking) is a way to preserve memories so I can look back on them in years to come."

Many members said they enjoy scrapbooking because it's a great way to relax.

"I enjoy the creative aspect of scrapbooking, and it's easy to get lost in cropping -- it's really relaxing and a good thing to do on a rainy day," Wilson said.

Other members said they like meeting new people who share their love of scrapbooking.

"I thought it'd be fun to get to work on my scrapbook with other people, and it gave me a chance to meet some new people and make great friends," Amy Troutman, freshman in fine arts, said. "I take tons of pictures, and (scrapbooking) gives me a good way to show them off."

As for the future of the club, Handgraaf said she has a lot of opportunities and goals ahead of her.

She has been working with a company in the Kansas City area because she has found that many scrapbooking and craft stores only have supplies for scrapbooks about weddings and baby showers.

"I contacted the store manager at the North Kansas City Archiver's store, which is located off of Barry Road, and she has been a big help," Handgraaf said. "She has donated supplies for our crops and whenever a customer comes into her store with something from K-State, she mentions our club to them."

The store's promotion of her club has given Scrapbookers Unite the opportunity to be a focus group for a scrapbooking company.

They also helped them to start creating scrapbooking supplies for college-aged scrapbookers.

Balance needed between state, religion

Editor,

To use the powers of government to pass science off as religion or religion off as science is wrongheaded. A free and thinking people do not need the government telling them that their faith in God is nothing more than a scientific theory or that their scientific theories must conform to another person's religious beliefs.

Within his first encyclical since being elevated to the Chair of Peter, Pope Benedict XVI uses some words that echo the United States Constitution's First and 14th Amendments' guarantee of freedom from state-sponsored religion. In this moving epistle on the faithful leading lives within God's gift of love, Deus Caritas Est, the supreme pontiff writes, "The State may not impose religion, yet it must guarantee religious freedom and harmony between followers of different religions."

Counter to this, some religious zealots are currently bent on pressuring local public school boards into requiring teachers to insert into their lesson plans a new certitude of these true believers, intelligent-design creationism. They are free to believe what they will. However, this attempt to use government to promote their religious ideology should be troubling to all people who prize freedom of conscience.

State-sponsored proselytization is a greater threat to our religious freedom than it is a mistaken sally into the domain of science. Science has and will continue to weather all sorts of misdirected and dead-ended efforts, however, our freedom of conscience may not fare so well. The override of this liberty would mark the entry of our nation into an intolerant period in which all sorts of intellectual and spiritual pursuits were subject to suppression.

Brownback shows 2 sides to Kansans

Editor,

After hearing Sen. Sam Brownback's Landon Lecture, students and faculty owe it to Kansas to do a Google search on the following: Senator Sam Brownback Rolling Stone.

They will learn about the Constitution Restoration Act that Senator Brownback has introduced. This congressional act prevents the courts from interpreting the First Amendment establishment clause in any way that prevents any federal, state or local body or officer from officially declaring God to be "the sovereign source of law, liberty, or government."

The purpose of this act, according to its text, is to "promote federalism." Kansans may be surprised to think through what the kind of federalism their senator has in mind will look like. It will be open to our legislators to define Kansas as a "Christian state" – at least until demographic changes result in a majority that prefers to make it into, say, an Islamic one.

By congressional act, the senator would restore the U.S. Constitution to what it "originally" was - back before the First Amendment (or rather, before that unfortunate establishment clause part).

More generally, they will begin to appreciate that the senator's public face is not the same one he shows to True Believers on the religious right and to powerful economic interests who pay big bucks for the right to do things that Kansans would regard as dangerous to their quality of life.

Finally, that little Google search will also wise them up as to how Brownback morphed from a congressman who won his seat campaigning as a moderate into a stealth politician, who believes the majority of Kansans are too benighted to be treated with the guileless candor he adopts with his true constituency.

Cats, time for some tradition

MATTHEW GIRARD

I'm not going to lie, I'm looking right past K-State's game against Nebraska on Wednesday.

In fact, a win or a loss to the Cornshuckers doesn't even matter. My focus is on the second installment of the 2006 Sunflower Showdown against Kansas on Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum and the path the two schools have taken since the Wildcats shocked the state of Kansas.

The path is significant because it shows exactly why K-State is destined to be an underachieving team under its leadership and will once again not participate in any postseason tournaments.

One would think the momentum of beating your in-state rival for the first time in 31 games and on their home court would propel an underachieving team to greater things, but not K-State.

Since beating the Jayhawks 59-55 Jan. 14, the Wildcats have gone 4-7, with five of those losses coming by three points or less. For the season, K-State is nine points from being a 20-win basketball team heading into the final two games of the season.

On the flip side, the Jayhawks, who lost to Missouri just two days after losing to K-State and were seemingly at one of the lowest points in school history – rattled off 10-consecutive wins before losing 80-55 to No. 7-ranked Texas on Saturday and sit in second-place in the Big 12 Conference.

Another amazing fact about the recent run by the Jayhawks is the team is led by mainly freshman and sophomores – and this, my friends, is why Kansas has one of the nation's best basketball programs, and K-State is just a wanna-be.

This season, Coach Jim Wooldridge has arguably one of his most talented teams, led by junior Cartier Martin and sophomore David Hoskins. Martin and Hoskins are both in the top 20 of the league in scoring, but even having these two great players on the floor

K-State tennis sweeps Wichita

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia impatiently moved her feet and ran her fingers along the strings of her racket in anticipation of the next serve.

She knew any slip-up might give her opponent, Wichita State's Madina Rakhim, the opening she would need to get back in the match Saturday.

Kvaratskhelia would not back down to Rakhim, ranked No. 47 in the country, until the match was over.

She finally cracked a smile as Rakhim's final shot went into the net, giving Kvaratskhelia the victory (6-2, 6-4).

"After every single point I knew that I could not relax," Kvaratskhelia said. "The game can change at every single moment, so I played every single point."

Kvaratskhelia was not satisfied during her match with Rakhim, who suffered her first loss of the season, despite leading the entire time.

"Even when I was up in the second set and had won the first set, I was still waiting to see if she was going to do something else," Kvaratskhelia said. "I just wanted to jump on her and not let her do anything that she wanted to do."

That same killer instinct allowed the K-State women's tennis team to sweep Wichita State, coach Steve Bietau said. The Wildcats won 7-0 on Saturday at Ahearn Field house, while not yielding a single set to the Shockers.

The Wildcats' dominant theme for the day began when senior Jessica Simosa and freshman Katerina Kudlackova defeated Rakhim and Wendi Webster, 8-6, in No. 1 doubles. The loss, like the one in singles, was Rakhim's first of the year.

Despite the victory, playing against Rakhim took effort and thought, Simosa said.

"At times, we doubted what we could do in our match," Simosa said. "We didn't know if we were playing the right game, but coach would push us to do it anyway. At the end it became natural."

Kudlackova breezed past Ana Ines Exeni in the first set 6-0 before struggling to a 6-4 victory in the second in No. 4 singles.

"I think I lost my concentration a little bit, but I came back at the right time," Kudlackova said. "It was a serious situation at 5-4, so I had to focus."

The victory was a milestone for Bietau -- number 200 in his career.

"I'm obviously happy that I've gotten this far," Bietau said. "I'm glad to still be standing and hopeful to add to the list and thankful to all the players who have helped do that."

Equestrian team dominates event, ending season

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State equestrian team gained its second-straight victory by taking first in 16 events at the KSU Western Show on Saturday at the Fox Creek Stables in Manhattan.

The Wildcats (2-1) wrapped up the regular season by winning the morning and afternoon shows in its final home event of the regular season.

K-State was the High Point Team in both the morning and afternoon shows, scoring 32 points in both events. The Reserve High Point Team in the morning was Black Hawk College and Missouri State in the afternoon. Coach Teresa Slough said she was pleased with her team's performance

"Today, we rode well. We do have some things to fix before the post season," Slough said. "We need to sharpen up, ride more precise."

K-State riders swept the top spots in the morning and afternoon. In the morning, sophomore Lindsey Salsbury was the High Point Rider; the Reserve High Point Rider resulted in a three-way tie between senior Lindsey Hicks, junior Sara Weller and senior Shanda Draper. The afternoon High Rider was a tie between Draper and Salsbury. Weller was the Reserve High Point rider.

"I came in second place (which helped) K-State place first," Sherck said. "We want our people to do well to bump down points for the other team. It was good that I placed."

K-State finished with 16 first-place competitors during the two shows, including; Draper, who won twice in Class 1 and Class 14 Reining Section A; Salsbury in Reining Section B and Open Horsemanship Section A; junior Valerie Meyer in Novice Horsemanship Section A; sophomore Dana Totten in Advanced Horsemanship Section A and B; freshman Camille Thibault in Intermediate I Horsemanship Section A; freshman Erin Paulsen in Intermediate II Horsemanship Section B; sophomore Emily Wolfe (twice) in Beginner Horsemanship Section B; senior Sarah Haltom in Novice Horsemanship Section C; junior Dennon Zimbelman in Open Horsemanship Section A and Reining Section A; freshman Jana Lechtenberg in Open Horsemanship Section B and junior Katie Steinle in Intermediate Horsemanship Section B.

K-State will enter the post season looking to improve on last year's fifth-place finish.

"Last year we were fifth," Slough said. "We want to finish in the top five again this year."

The next home event for K-State will be the KSU Hunt Show on March 11 for the ISHA Regional Qualifying Competition at Fox Creek Stables.

Home opener pits Wildcats against rival South Dakota

Staff reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team will compete in its home opener today against the Jackrabbits of South Dakota State University.

Starting with today's outings, 18 of the next 21 games will be played at home at Tointon Stadium.

The Wildcats (3-1) are coming off an offensive onslaught after scoring 19 runs in 18 innings last weekend, en route to besting Purdue and winless Louisiana-Monroe.

The Jackrabbits have gone untested this year and will open their season in Manhattan. Finishing 17-38 last year, the Rabbits return no offensive player hitting above .300, no returning pitcher with more than three wins and no pitcher with a career estimated run average under 6.0.

In all five contests between the two teams, K-State has walked away victorious, outscoring the Rabbits by at least seven runs every time.

MLB | 1st woman elected to Hall of Fame

TAMPA — Effa Manley became the first woman elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame when the former Newark Eagles executive was among 17 people from the Negro Leagues and pre-Negro Leagues chosen Monday by a special committee.

Manley

Manley co-owned the Eagles with her husband, Abe, and ran the business end of the team for more than a decade. The Eagles won the Negro Leagues World Series in 1946 — one year before Jackie Robinson broke the major league color barrier.

Buck O'Neil and Minnie Minoso, the only living members among the 39 candidates on the ballot, were not elected by the 12-person panel.

Agassi

The 35-year-old Agassi is playing only his second tournament of the season and third since his loss to Roger Federer in the final of the U.S. Open last September. Agassi pulled out of the SAP Open with a lower back injury earlier this month, and was sidelined by a sprained left ankle last fall.

Tim Henman moved into the second round with a 6-2, 7-6 (6) win against Feliciano Lopez. Henman, who received a wild card when Ivan Ljubicic of Croatia withdrew, rallied from 0-3 down in the second-set tiebreaker.

NFL | Jets player involved in drug test controversy

NEW YORK, N.Y. — Upset at having been tagged as a franchise player for a second straight year, New York Jets defensive end John Abraham told the New York Post over the weekend that he has "overstayed [his] welcome" with the club and that "it's time to move on."

Abraham

Team officials apparently agree.

Multiple league sources said the Jets have been offering Abraham in trade talks during the NFL scouting combine in Indianapolis, and have discussed potential scenarios with a number of teams.

Among the several teams with whom the Jets have spoken in recent days are the Washington Redskins and the Denver Broncos.

BKC | Coach's sentencing rescheduled

WICHITA — Sentencing for former Barton County Community College basketball coach Ryan Wolf has been postponed until May 1 to give him time to testify against his colleagues in a widespread investigation into financial aid for athletes.

Wolf's indictment in December 2004 was the first in a scandal that has resulted in charges against seven coaches and the athletic director and led to the firing of its president.

Coaches have been accused of getting athletes grants they were not qualified to receive and campus jobs that paid them for work they did not perform; of helping athletes with correspondence courses and tests and of sending false academic credentials to other schools on the athletes' behalf.

Surreal sounds

"Hypermagic Mountain"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

When we were young, our parents had plenty of sound advice to help us make it through life. One such example is the infamous, "don't judge a book by its cover."

It's a dandy slogan that reminds us outward appearances should not influence our judgement.

But if you'll indulge me for a moment, I would like to show that sometimes judging a book by its cover (or a CD by its album art) actually can be rather helpful.

For example, consider "Hypermagic Mountain," the fourth and latest album by noise-rock duo Lightning Bolt. Take a good, long look at the album's cover – but not too long or your eyes blur and your brain hemorrhages.

The cover art probably is the best visual representation of the aural experience this album has to offer.

With all that talk of vision loss and brain aneurysm, you are probably thinking that I am about to launch a tirade against "Hypermagic Mountain," but don't be so quick to judge this review by its opening paragraphs.

With its latest album, Lightning Bolt offers all the fun and excitement of severe head trauma without the hassle of near-death experiences and permanent brain damage.

For the uninitiated, the first few spins of "Hypermagic Mountain" will not be very rewarding. Many listeners most likely will throw up their hands in disgust at the pure racket that Lightning Bolt creates.

Just as the cover art looks like a bunch of squiggles and color splotches, so too will the album sound like a bunch of random banging and guitar-wankery. But I will try to parallel the similarities between cover art and the actual album in an attempt to convince you that there is so much more to Lightning Bolt's shtick than impenetrable noise.

First, the album art is deceptively simple. Its surreal images almost have a Dada-like quality in that it doesn't look like it took more than five minutes to create.

Lightning Bolt's arrangement also is deceptively simple.

The band is composed of two members, both named Brian. Brian Gibson bassist, and Brian Chippendale, percussionist and lead vocals.

It doesn't seem like this collection would present too many opportunities for variety, but make no mistake, with some distortion pedals and superhuman drumming skills, these Brians create a powerful and compelling sound.

Secondly, the cover is (figuratively) very loud. I'm sure you've already figured out from the style of this review, that Lightning Bolt's album is also very noisy.

"Hypermagic Mountain" is not the type of album that will come up and shake your hand; rather, it is more content going straight for a knee to the groin. From the thunderous opening salvo of "2morrow Morrow Land," the album grabs you by the cojones and does not let go.

The most common criticism I have seen leveled against "Hypermagic Mountain" is, "it's not music; it's just noise."

While it is true that Lightning Bolt at its most boisterous sounds like a squadron of Boeing B-29 bombers, an attentive listen to "Hypermagic Mountain" will result in the discovery of hooks and grooves savagely plucked from the strings of Gibson's bass and thwacked from Chippendale's drums.

The more you stare at the album cover, the more images drift out of the foggy drawing; the more listens and attention paid to "Hypermagic Mountain" will also result in the listener finding riffs – albeit fractured ones – to hold their attention.

Courtesy art

The final similarity between the album and its cover is they are both brilliant. I wish this newspaper could print in color and display the intense colors used for the album's sleeve.

Nevertheless, the comparison holds true; "Hypermagic Mountain" – save for a few spots in "Bizarro Zarro Land" and "Magic Mountain" when it sounds like the band is spinning its wheels – is also brilliant.

At nearly 57 minutes, Lightning Bolt's music can be an endurance test, especially to the uninitiated, but if the listener can abandon previous notions of what music is, its music is also one hell of a ride.

For those who need an album that they can crank up the volume and zone out the world, I couldn't think of a better thing to do than take a journey to "Hypermagic Mountain."

Country artists to play in Manhattan during tour

The Eli Young Band is a mix of guitar-driven rock 'n' roll with a Texas influence. In April, they will release their debut "Level," with Carnival Recording Company.

By Lauren Rohrer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Making their first trip to Manhattan this week are Carnival recording artists, the members of Eli Young Band.

"We've had a lot of requests to play in Manhattan, and now that we are on our first big tour we are excited to be able to do it," Mike Eli, lead vocals and guitar player, said.

The show Wednesday night at Longhorn's Bar and Grill is one of many events going on with the band.

According to www.cmt.com, the group was just selected to be the Country Music Television's featured band on its Web site.

The band is anticipating the premiere of its first video on Great American Country on Saturday, Eli said.

"We definitely have the country thing working for us but we've been influenced from everything to the Beatles to more modern rock," Eli said. "I think that it comes across on our album, 'Level,'"

"Carnival Records agreed to release this album, and they are also planning on producing our next album, which will be released in 2007," he said.

Eli said the band was discovered while playing in Dallas in 2003 with Miranda Lambert from the television show, "Nashville Star."

"Carnival Records producer, Frank Liddell (husband of country music artist Lee Ann Womack), was there to see Miranda and really liked our music," Eli said.

"(He) asked if he could release the album we had already finished," he said. "We feel really blessed and lucky."

Eli Young Band will play at 9 p.m. Wednesday at Longhorn's in Aggieville. Tickets are $12. The band will be followed by recording artist Randy Rogers.

MARDI GRAS

General facts

Also known as "fat Tuesday," this pre-Lenten festival is celebrated in Roman Catholic countries.

In a strict sense, Mardi Gras, or Shrove Tuesday, is celebrated by the French as the last of the three days of Shrovetide and is a time of preparation before Ash Wednesday and the start of the fast of Lent.

Mardi Gras is marked by spectacular parades featuring floats, pageants, elaborate costumes, masked balls and people dancing in the streets.

Like Ash Wednesday, the date Mardi Gras falls on depends on the date of Easter — always occurring 46 days before Easter.

Future Mardi Gras Dates:

- Feb. 20, 2007
- Feb. 5, 2008
- Feb. 24, 2009
- Feb. 16, 2010
- March 8, 2011

Professors compare class, teaching styles

By Adam Monroe
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State professors have a variety of teaching styles and are coming together to study one another's differences.

"I don't like to just lecture straight from the books," said Ki-Joon Back, assistant professor of hotel and restaurant management. "I feel the students can read the book and synthesize the material for themselves."

Back teaches Lodging Management Theory, Hotel Marketing and Sales, and Casino Management, among other courses.

"In my Casino Management class, for example, I feel the main objective of class is to understand what's going on in the real world, so I supplement my lectures with personal stories," Back said.

Back worked in the casino industry for several years and had positions in both the MGM Grand and the Imperial Palace in Las Vegas.

"I also ask students to come out and do research projects in my course," Back said. "We need an active environment in classes so I can learn from students while they learn from each other."

Back said he tries to schedule at least one field trip per semester for his Casino Management students.

"Field trips are important in a gaming management course because it allows students to confirm what they have learned and observe it in action," Back said.

Patricia Staver, assistant professor of secondary education, teaches a course called Core Teaching Skills, that addresses some common teaching and learning strategies.

"We've spent the last month in our class learning different learning styles," Staver said.

The course follows and teaches the Dunn and Dunn model, which was developed by professor Rita Dunn in 1967. The model contains two theories: the Cognitive Style theory, which is the idea that people process information differently, and the Brain Lateralization theory, which address different processes taking place in the brain's left and right hemispheres.

"There are four different modalities in learning styles," Staver said. "They are visual, audio, kinesthetic and tactual."

Staver said these ideas are taught to students so they better understand their learning styles and adapt to different students.

Michael Wesch, assistant professor of anthropology, said he is striving to provide a more active learning environment.

"As an alternative to the lecture-centered model, I use a model based on conversation," Wesch said. "The key is giving each student a fair number of turns in the conversation."

Wesch said his Cultural Anthropology class does this through online discussions, class journals, quizzes and a two-day interactive game that takes place at the end of the semester, intended to simulate the history of the world.

"The World Simulation is the hallmark of the Introduction to Cultural Anthropology course," Wesch said.

Wesch said his conversation model focuses less on formal testing and more on allowing students to personalize the material.

"I hate the question, 'What do I need to know for the test?'" Wesch said. "Though the lecture format cannot be entirely abandoned, there needs to be some transformation of the learning environment in such a way that fosters critical and creative thinking."

Wesch is one of the K-State professors involved in the Peer Review of Teaching.

"This project pairs up faculty from different departments so they can observe each others' teaching and class techniques," Wesch said.

The program is administered through the University of Nebraska and is practiced at several universities throughout the United States.

Education majors gain experience as substitutes

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Meghan Travers began her substitute teaching experience in Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 with high expectations.

"I'm gonna be the best sub ever," Travers, senior in elementary education, said.

The students are relaxed, and the substitute teacher is able to joke around with the students without worrying much about lesson plans or ultimate goals for the semester, Travers said.

The emergency substitute teaching program is open to everyone who goes through the application process and is approved by USD 383 and the state of Kansas, Travers said.

"Any major can do it as long as they have 60 (academic credit) hours," she said.

Travers said she spent between $60 and $70 for certification to substitute teach in USD 383.

"I made it up the first day I taught," Travers said of the money spent on the certificate.

The application that is sent into the state costs $36, and the fingerprinting is about $44, Monta Harris, director of personnel for USD 383, said.

Students interested in being emergency substitute teachers can fill out an application and get their fingerprints taken at Robinson Education Center, 2031 Poyntz Ave.

After that, the applicant meets with two administrators.

"We schedule an interview with two of our school district principals," Harris said.

When Travers is needed by the school district as an emergency substitute teacher, she said she is called the day she is needed to teach. Sometimes she is called 30 minutes before school starts, she said.

This is her first semester being an emergency substitute teacher, and so far she has taught three times, she said.

"Mostly I'm in it for the experience," Travers said.

The College of Education does not take an official position on students in substitute teaching positions, said Paul Burden, assistant dean and professor of elementary education.

The experience of substitute teaching might seem daunting to some students who attempt it, Burden said.

When a student goes through the entire education program, they gain the experience needed in those areas to feel well-equipped to deal with the classroom, he said.

"We see the value in having a person going through the entire program and getting their certificate," Burden said.

COLUMN | Wildcats should look to history for guidance

every night hasn't equaled success.

The Jayhawks can't even boast having one player making the top 20 list of scoring and yet Kansas is once again in the Associated Press' Top 25 and ESPN has them listed as a possible No. 5 seed in the NCAA Tournament.

The bottom line is: the Jayhawks know how to win and have the tradition of being a winner. Third-year coach Bill Self was able to keep the tradition by bringing in former Kansas-great, Danny Manning. With Manning on the bench, the younger Jayhawks can learn from the former national champion and what it takes to be a winner.

Regardless of whether or not Wooldridge is around for another season, Athletics Director Tim Weiser and President Jon Wefald need to look for a former K-State great, like Steve Henson for example, to put on staff in some capacity to give the Wildcats a winning shot in the arm.

For students, time spent online is often unavoidable, with many classes requiring assignments that must be completed online, along with research they might have to conduct. In addition, the Internet offers a myriad of options for students to occupy their time out of class, such as e-mail and Facebook.com.

"I'm probably online for an hour to 1 1/2 hours a night," Lizzy Walter, sophomore in family studies and human services, said. "I use it (the Internet) to check my mail, for research, and for K-State Online."

Walter said she used to frequent Facebook, but got tired of it because it "was like the same thing, over and over." She said she knows people, though, who spend upwards of two hours a night online.

Seth Hoskins, senior in computer engineering, said he uses the computer frequently, but really only uses the Internet for research.

"I don't use Facebook or anything like that," he said.

Hoskins said he could see how students could become addicted to the Internet, but he didn't know "whether it's being in college, or if people have addictive personalities to begin with."

Culton said that because student life necessitates computer usage, it makes it difficult to see when it becomes problematic. However, he said, with the appropriate appreciation for the Internet and all it has to offer, a student can go through college without experiencing an addiction.

"What I've seen is, the student who has put the computer in its place and only uses it as a tool, isn't as susceptible to addiction and is unlikely to have problems," he said.

Both fugitives waive extradition

By Bill Poovey
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Tenn. – A prison volunteer who helped a convicted killer escape from a Kansas prison in a dog crate and then hid out with him in a Tennessee cabin apologized Monday for hurting her father, her sister, her sons and her husband.

"I'm sorry that I let them down," a somber Toby Young, 48, told Kansas City television station KCTV during a jailhouse interview after waiving extradition. "I miss them, and I'm coming home as soon as I can."

Young wore a striped prisoner jumpsuit to the hearing in Athens and told a judge she wanted to return to Kansas.

Young ran a dog rehabilitation program working with inmates at the Lansing Correctional Facility. Authorities said she used her access to sneak John Manard, 27, out of the prison Feb. 12 in a Safe Harbor Prison Dog Program van.

"I'm just sorry," she told reporters outside the courtroom.

Back at the jail, she could not explain what had happened.

"How I got to this point, I don't know," she said. She also couldn't explain her attraction to Manard.

"I don't want to talk about that right now," she said. "I want to go home and see what we can do to fix this the best I can."

She also said she hoped the prison dog program she once led would continue without her.

"It's a good program," she said.

Unlike Young, Manard was smiling when he waived extradition Monday in a separate court appearance in Chattanooga, about 45 miles southwest of Athens. Manard was being held in the Hamilton County jail because of security concerns, officials said.

While signing the extradition waiver, Manard asked Hamilton County General Sessions Court Judge Ron Durby a question that couldn't be heard clearly by spectators. The judge responded: "Put you in another dog cage and send you back, I imagine."

Young and Manard were captured late Friday after an interstate highway chase that ended near Athens. The chase began after officers spotted the pair outside a Chattanooga mall more than 90 miles south of the cabin where they were staying.

"After being locked up for 10 years, not seeing the world at all since he was first locked up, he probably wanted to get out and see some places," Deputy U.S. Marshal Danny Shelton said in a telephone interview.

Shelton said that in their two weeks as fugitives, Manard and Young accumulated electronics, musical instruments and a parakeet while hiding out in a vacation cabin.

Coast Guard warned of intelligence gaps

By Liz Sidoti
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

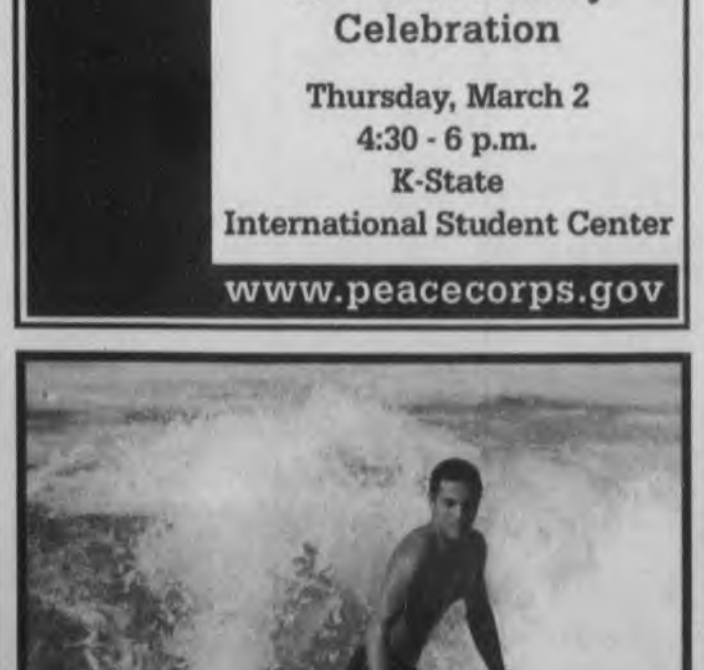
WASHINGTON, D.C. – Citing broad gaps in U.S. intelligence, the Coast Guard raised concerns weeks ago that it could not determine whether a United Arab Emirates-based company seeking a stake in some U.S. port operations might support terrorist operations.

The disclosure came during a hearing Monday on Dubai-owned DP World's plans to assume significant operations at six leading U.S. ports. It also clouded whether the Bush administration's agreement to conduct an unusual investigation into the pending takeover's security risks would allay lawmakers' concerns.

The administration said the Coast Guard's concerns were raised during its review of the deal, which it approved Jan. 17, and that all those questions were resolved. London-based Peninsular & Oriental Steam Navigation Co. now handles the port operations.

"There are many intelligence gaps, concerning the potential for DPW or P&O assets to support terrorist operations, that precludes an overall threat assessment" of the potential merger, an unclassified Coast Guard intelligence assessment said.

"The breadth of the intelligence gaps also infer potential unknown threats against a large number of potential vulnerabilities," said the half-page assessment. Officials said it was an unclassified excerpt from a larger document.



In a statement, the Coast Guard said the concerns reflected in the excerpt ultimately were addressed and that other U.S. intelligence agencies answered the questions raised.

The Coast Guard assessment raised questions about the security of the companies' operations, the backgrounds of people working for the companies, and whether other foreign countries influenced operations that affect security.

"We were never told about this and have no information about it," Michael Moore, DP World's senior vice president, said of the excerpt. However, he said it shows "serious and probing" questions were asked and that the initial approval of the deal indicates those questions were answered.

Sen. Susan Collins, chairwoman of the Senate Homeland Security Committee, released the excerpt at a briefing Monday. The Bush administration agreed Sunday to DP World's request for a 45-day investigation of the potential security risks related to the deal. The government did not do such an investigation before approving the deal, even though critics say the law required it.

"I am more convinced than ever that the process was truly flawed," Collins, R-Maine, said

Pride in history

Bobby Seale, a former chairman and founder of the Black Panthers party, speaks to attendees Tuesday evening in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union about the origins and history of the Black Panthers. The event was held by the Black Student Union.

The finale of Black History Month featured a speech by Bobby Seale, former chairman, founder and national organizer of the Black Panther Party USA at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Forum Hall.

The Black Student Union, the Office of Diversity and Dual Career Development, and the Student Governing Association presented the speaker.

"Tonight we are fortunate to have with us a precious piece of history," said Mark Nelson, sophomore in philosophy and political actions chair of the BSU.

Throughout his speech, Seale recounted the history behind the Black Panther Party and its struggles and triumphs.

In spring 1962, Seale said he became interested in the history of his people. He saw a rally when he was an engineering design major at Merritt College in Oakland, Calif. He heard students yelling about the rights of "afro-americans." Seale said people didn't know about this term at the time.

"Black folks were beginning to call themselves the social science correct way," Seale said.

Seeing their passion for black history, and aware of his lack of knowledge in the area, he said he started researching.

"When I say this history is of all history of America,

91.9 to air results of primaries

Elections '06

Voting for SGA primary elections ends at 6 tonight. Vote at sgaelections.k-state.edu.

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KSDM-FM 91.9 will announce primary election results tonight shortly after 6 p.m. when polls close.

Chris Swick, news director at 91.9, said the results will be announced as soon as the station receives them.

Elections Commissioner Tanner Banion said the results will be known at 6 p.m., and e-mails with the results will be sent to the campus media outlets.

"We will then post them online at 6:15 on the elections Web site," Banion said.

The numbers are monitored by the Office of Mediated Education as they come in and are distributed to Office of Student Activities and Services when the polls close at 6 p.m., Banion said.

Swick said he will be in the 91.9 studio and will host the elections coverage show. All eight pairs will have a 91.9 reporter with them starting at 5:30 p.m. until the results are announced, he said.

Primary elections, which began Tuesday at 8 a.m., will narrow the eight presidential pairs down to two for Tuesday and Wednesday's general elections.

Swick said the station will have interviews with the two advancing pairs following the announcement.

"We will have live call-ins from each candidate pair from where they are at," Swick said.

FAFSA applications due today

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The priority deadline for the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) is today.

The FAFSA is the way in which students and their parents can apply for federal aid money for their college education. The amount of grants and federal loans a student is eligible for is determined by both their own and their parents' income tax information from the previous year.

Larry Moeder, assistant vice president of student financial assistance, said it is important for students to meet the March 1 deadline because K-State will begin awarding federal financial aid for the next academic year starting the first of April.

"Some of the federal aid that's available will be awarded, and gone, as we consider all applications received by the March 1 deadline," Moeder said. "Students can apply after that, but there are limited amounts of funds in some of the programs."

Moeder said K-State will distribute approximately $150

K-State, Manhattan community offer free tax preparation services

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Free income tax preparation services are available through the Internal Revenue Service's Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) services.

The services are offered through K-State Research and Extension, UFM and the Ogden (Kan.) Community Center.

Jennifer Wilson, director of Research and Extension, said services are offered to people earning low to moderate income at $38,000 or less a year.

Several students from the College of Business Administration and local retired senior volunteers have offered their time to work as VITA volunteers.

On average, Wilson said people might pay $100 to have someone do their taxes when simple tax refunds could be done for less.

"Your tax refund is your money all along," she said. "I hate it for people to pay to get taxes done. It's important to keep people's money in their pockets."

For those wanting to electronically file returns, Wilson said refund checks come faster, sometimes within a two-week period.

Wilson said about $20,000 to $25,000 already has been refunded locally through VITA.

Sites opened Feb. 6 and will be open until April 15.

Those seeking assistance should make appointments to ensure they have time to meet with a volunteer, Wilson said.

"Even if they owe money to the IRS, they can still have their taxes done," Wilson said. "They don't have to pay on the spot."

Austin Delimont, senior in accounting, said he is acting as a volunteer for VITA.

"I thought it would be a good way to use my skills to

Two VITA sites will be opened to the public at the UFM Community Learning Center, 1221 Thurston St., and the Ogden Community Center, 220 Willow St., Ogden, Kan. The Ogden site will be open 4 to 7 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays and 1 to 5 p.m. on Saturdays. The UFM site will be open from 4 to 7 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays. Both sites will be closed between March 18 to 25 for spring break.

BSU receives awards for work

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members of K-State's Black Student Union were recognized as some of the best in the nation this weekend.

K-State's BSU was awarded most outstanding BSU in the Big 12 Conference during its annual conference, demonstrating a commitment to unity, academic achievement, scholarship, campus programming and community service.

Josh Criswell, junior in social sciences and BSU President, said the honor was received based on the activities K-State students have done to create community on campus.

But receiving the honor is an encouragement as well as a challenge, he said

"It means we are restoring ourselves to our former glory," he said. "We're the top dogs, but we have to continue the good work we've done."

Criswell said getting more students involved and participating in BSU has been a reason the group has seen success.

At the conference, Criswell was elected parliamentarian of the Big 12 Council on Black Student Government Executive Board for 2006-2007.

K-State's BSU also was honored when Abdul Yahaya, junior in civil engineering, was chosen as the Mordean Taylor-Archer Council Executive Board Member of the year at the conference, receiving a $1,000 scholarship.

Yahaya also was re-elected as chair of the Big 12 Council on Black Student Government Executive Board for 2006-07.

Yahaya said receiving the scholarship and position as chair made him feel his work has not been in vain.

"It just makes me feel like my leadership serves a purpose," Yahaya said.

The conference helps enrich community and offer encouragement and scholarship to students, Yahaya said.

As chair, Yahaya said an awareness of the needs of those at in the Conference is vital.

"I have to make sure I'm listening to the concerns and trying to solve the different issues on respective universities," Yahaya said. "We have to come together to solve issues."

Gloria Conner, junior in accounting, said receiving the most outstanding BSU shows how far the group has come.

"I'm kind of proud of us," Conner said. "We don't always get recognized, and I just know how hard we work."

As head delegate of K-State's BSU, Conner said late nights of work paid off to exhibit how K-State students have excelled.

"I think we had a goal, and it was a very defined goal," she said. "We had strong leadership."

Animal shelter facilitates pet adoptions

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After reclaiming her cat, Kristy Layman of Manhattan holds her cat Meatball Tuesday afternoon at the T. Russell Reitz Animal Shelter. The shelter helps people to adopt and reclaim their pets.

For those interested in adopting a puppy, it might prove wise for them to clear their schedule before heading over to the T. Russell Reitz Animal Shelter, 605 Levee Drive.

"(Last) Friday we had two puppies who were AKC - (American Kennel Club) certified become available," Barbara Smith, technician at the shelter, said. "People showed up to wait in line at 2:30 (p.m.) on Thursday."

Smith said those interested in adopting an animal, should bring two forms of identification with them, one of which includes a picture. They also need to have cash or checks, because the shelter doesn't accept credit or debit cards.

Smith said all animals adopted from the shelter are required by law to be spayed or neutered and have rabies vaccinations. She said the shelter's veterinarian can perform the spay or neuter, or owners can sign a contract and take their animal to their personal vet.

If the owner doesn't do those things, it is punishable by a $500 fine and six months in jail, according to the shelter adoption contract. Smith said the shelter does prosecute.

If people find there is a wait when they arrive, they need to make sure they stay on shelter grounds until all of the available puppies have been adopted, Smith said.

Smith said on occasions in which a number of puppies become available for adoption at the same time, or a large amount of interest has been expressed, the shelter will assign potential owners a number when they arrive.

"We don't normally do that, most of the time it's just first-come, first-serve, but we give numbers to make sure we're being fair," she said. "If, for example, we have four puppies available, we'll probably give out eight numbers."

Smith said the shelter has an 82-percent adoption and reclaim rate for dogs and 49 percent for cats.

Tim McGlachlin, junior in statistics, said he was one of those waiting in line last week, when a litter of four became available for adoption.

"We had to stand outside for an hour-and-a-half to get a number, but they didn't tell us we couldn't leave, so we went to Wal-Mart to get stuff for the dog," McGlachlin said. "When we got back, they told us we had lost our spot in line.

"We were fourth in line – it was a sad day."

Kellie Hays, senior at Manhattan High School, said she has gone through the adoption process at the shelter before.

"My mom got my first cat here when I was 13," she said.

Hays said she is volunteering at the shelter, where she will perform cleaning duties.

"I know I won't really interact with the animals, but I like them – I have cats and a German Shepherd," Hays said.

Smith said people don't have to fill out an application in order to adopt an animal, unless they are wanting to adopt a dog that falls under the category of "bully breeds," such as Mastiffs and Rottweilers.

The clinic can refuse an adoption, she said.

"But that's usually when someone with small children wants to adopt an adult Siberian Husky, or something like that," she said. "Those are the animals with the highest rate of mauling young children."

Events to honor women

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Women's Center will observe Women's History Month during March, focusing on the contributions women have made. Events are free and open to the public.

Susan Allen, director of the Women's Center, said acknowledging women's influence on society should be ingrained, but taking a month is a step.

"We're not there yet," Allen said. "It should be something that's built into the structure of society. It gives us a time to focus on the ideals that society should be focusing on full-time."

The Women's Center will begin the month with a discussion about Vipassana Meditation, one of India's ancient meditation techniques, at 7 p.m. March 6 at the Manhattan Public Library, 629 Poyntz Ave.

Ordinary Women will present the film "Iron Jawed Angels" at 7 p.m. March 7 in the Big 12 Room of the K-State Student Union.

A Privilege Forum will be at 3:30 p.m. March 29 in the Little Theatre.

Megan Challender, senior in political science, said the forum will be a discussion of oppression and privilege.

"I think it's really important for privileged individuals to confront their privilege," Challender said.

Mary Todd, assistant director of the Women's Center, will present "The Art of Rape" at 7 p.m. March 30 at the Union Station in the Union.

Mary Stolz, senior in women's studies and journalism, said events tie women's history into what is currently happening.

TO THE POINT

Animal shelters should be tried before breeders

Hundreds of loving and affectionate animals from the T. Russell Reitz Animal Shelter are looking for homes. These pets are just waiting for compassionate people to take them in.

Those looking for a new pet should take the time to visit the shelter first, before looking into other options.

Think of the money you can save by adopting a pet from the local shelter. Hundreds of dollars are spent buying pure breeds from pet stores and breeders, when the perfect pet could be waiting for you at the shelter.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Typically, people buy animals from pet stores and breeders under the assumption that pure breeds are better and that they are able to pick the exact breed they want.

However, this is not always the case. You can still get a pure-breed pet from a shelter, and not only have you found a new best friend but also have saved a homeless animal in the process.

Pet stores offer animals, but they are still in it to make a profit.

Not all breeders are trustworthy either. Some breeders are in the business strictly to make money. They turn their business into a puppy mill and force animals to live in horrifying conditions.

If you are in the market for a new addition to your household, stop by the local shelter before you spend an outrageous amount somewhere else.

Unjust ugliness

Unattractive people deserve equal opportunity

KODY COOPER

Crime doesn't pay. It seems that neither does ugliness.

Two economists recently released a decade-long case study of young adults. They found that ugly youth are uniformly more likely than attractive youth to commit various felonious crimes.

Does this mean that my high school crush wasn't lying when she rejected my invitation to the Senior Prom? I never did believe her 'I can't go because I have a criminal trial hearing that night' excuse. Wait, that would imply – never mind.

I guess I've never had much luck with the ladies. Indeed, my all-time date count is eerily similar to Iran's all-time Olympic medal count (End pause).

So, a scientific study says the dogfaced are privy to delinquency – but why? The answer is obvious. No one wants to hire a gargoyle to work the cash register. It's nearly impossible for the ugly downtrodden to get a job. Crime is their only alternative.

We can't just sit by and let our fellow man (or thing) be treated this way, can we? Discrimination upon basis of hotness isn't fair. Doesn't America care for her grisly citizenry?

Perhaps a comprehensive affirmative action program for ugly people would solve the problem. The National Organization of Women, usually against adoption, adopted this policy years ago. Amazingly however, some ugly women are still jobless.

Therefore, I propose a simple solution. Immediately outlaw all cosmetics.

That's right. No more foundation, powder, eyeliner, eyeshadow, lipstick or lipgloss. Disadvantaged, unemployed, ugly women can't afford such crapulence. These amenities disproportionately benefit the beautiful elite and reinforce the ugly-poverty gap.

Therefore, the fair remedy is to strip all women of their makeup masks. Only then will all American women be equally hideous. Instead of perfecting their mascara, they will be forced to perfect their character. Employment will be based on merit, not Maybelline.

What? Is the columnist imposing his male-chauvinist views? How dare he. I don't care if Proverbs 31 defines the truly beautiful woman as she of virtue, modesty, and fear of the Lord. I don't want Christian doctrine – I want Christian Dior.

The policy benefits the heathen, too – think of all the time and money that would be saved by foregoing face fakery. Plus, less cochineal insects, herring fish and castor oil actually may improve complexion.

As great as the idea sounds, my nagging internal libertarian whispers about 'unintended consequences.' Granted, America would have a sudden surplus of several million pounds of cosmetics just going to waste.

Ah, but this plan also is dually purposed toward rebuilding alienated alliances. All that unused makeup will be donated as an emergency aid package to the women of France.

That ought to take care of it – wait. We've completely forgotten about all the ugly men out there. Naturally more beautiful than women, men don't have the cosmetic complex.

Ugly men used to be relegated to the ranks of nerd-dom. With their thick glasses and gangly underbites, they hid in their parents' garages and played video games. Instead of committing crimes, they created companies like Apple and Microsoft.

It seems the homely nerds of today are more likely to steal computers rather than create them. What respectable organization would offer employment to such ugly criminals?

There is one outfit desperate for employees. The ugliest of all criminal organizations – the Republican Party.

World population demands attention, action

KELSEY CHILDRESS

An estimate by the International Programs Center at the United States Census Bureau claims that the world population hit 6.5 billion on Feb. 25, 2006. That is a whole lot of people. Also, according to the Population Reference Bureau, as of 2002, there have been 106 billion people born in the world since human's existence began.

It is staggering to think that less than 10 percent of the entire human population is now alive on planet Earth. There are about 261 people born every minute. So by the time you finished reading this column, about 520 people would have been born.

Why does this matter? Well, as hard as it is to believe, we are all connected. Unfortunately, as much as we would like to believe, when babies are born, they are not all equal. Some are born into poverty, while others automatically have everything provided for them as long as they live.

The issue now is whether our world is becoming overpopulated. As our population keeps increasing, scientists begin to wonder what the earth's limit will be.

When China became overpopulated, they placed the "one child per family" rule, but this has created problems. Baby girls are dumped in forests because the family wants to have a boy to carry on the family name. Now the population has become unbalanced, because there are more boys than girls, which will make coupling harder when these children reach the age to be married.

Beijing has eased the rule, hoping to increase the female population, but this dilemma shows that there may not be a solution to concerns about the world becoming overpopulated.

However, sooner or later, the world's natural resources will run out, and we will be left wondering how to survive. Scientists are trying to discover the maximum number of people the earth will support, but it is hard to exactly calculate this, considering that new natural resources and ways of life are found almost every day.

If and when scientists do discover the maximum number of people who can live in the world, how can they mandate this number? It will surely be hard to regulate every family to only having one or two children, and considering the problems China had, what are some other ways to safely curb the growing population, which will reach an estimated 7 billion by the end of 2012?

While many people and government officials feel there are many other issues, like finding new places to drill for oil or setting up democracies in foreign countries, the world population is an important problem that needs our consideration. This will influence every aspect of the other social, political and health problems the United States and other countries will be facing.

More babies and people equals a greater need for health care, rising poverty levels and a greater demand for food and other resources.

If the world cannot take care of the people who are alive now by providing adequate water, food and health care, how can we take care of 500,000,000 more people in six years?

Men explore feminine side in drag queen competition

By Yiyi Chen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Watch out, tomboys – drag queens are coming.

The fifth annual Moore Hall drag queen contest took place at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Moore basement, featuring six contestants and 12 female co-sponsors who helped with the contest. All contestants competed for a $50 shopping spree at Wal-Mart.

After a one-hour competition, Kyle Harriss, whose stage name was 'Kylie Clarkson,' won the top prize. Harriss performed a ribbon dance inspired by the comedy flick 'Old School,' and donned a pink gown for the evening wear category.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

At the fifth-annual Moore Hall Drag Queen Contest, Bryant Laude, freshman in art education, as Cookie Cummings, performs a dance as his talent portion of the show. Laude represented Haymaker's sixth floor and won third place.

"I prepared for three or four days," said Harriss, freshman in nutrition and exercise sciences. "I shaved my chest, because I really want to look more feminine when I put on the dress."

Jessica Creel, sophomore in pre-professional business administration, and Maggie Fisher, freshman in journalism and mass communications, helped Harriss with his hair, make-up and dress. They said they pushed Harris to perform in the drag queen contest.

"We had him dress up like a woman at a Halloween party," Creel said. "When he put on the clothes, he really looked like a woman."

Courtney Shriver, sophomore in interior design, was one of the chairpersons of the contest. She said the goal of the contest is to promote diversity, uphold an annual tradition, and, more importantly, bring fun to the residence halls.

Shriver said contestants show talents like singing and dancing in a feminine way, with two dress changes.

Beth Uden, one of the three judges, said she has been a judge for three years and said the contest usually is popular with Moore residents.

"More guys are taking their risks," Uden said. "They make me laugh. It's fun to see the guys step out of their comfort zones."

Second and third places, respectively, went to Josh McGinn, aka Jossica Simpson, sophomore in history, and Bryant Laude, aka Cookie Cummings, freshman in art education.

House passes inspection bill, Senate committee to consider

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas House Bill 2829, which deals with required inspections for free-standing health clinics that provide any type of surgical care, passed in the House with a vote of 63-62 Friday.

The bill is in the Kansas Senate and has been referred to the Senate Public Health and Welfare Committee.

House bills 2176 and 2503 were similar versions of the bill and were introduced in 2003 and 2005. They were both vetoed by Gov. Kathleen Sebelius.

House bills 2176 and 2503 pertained only to abortion clinics. Bill 2829, however, states "the secretary (of Department of Health and Environment) shall conduct unannounced inspections of any clinic or facility where office-based surgery or special procedures are performed at least every five years on a routine basis."

The bill also includes a list of regulations clinics would have to follow in order to be in compliance with the law.

In the governor's veto, signed April 21, 2003, Sebelius said she has "fought long and hard to ensure doctors and patients, not insurance companies and not the Kansas legislature, make decisions regarding an individual's health care procedures." Sebelius reiterated her stance in her April 15, 2005, veto of House Bill 2503.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said she witnessed the debate regarding House Bills 2503 and 2829.

"It has always been that both the governor and moderates in the legislature not wanting it to be a bill only about abortion clinics, but all free-standing clinics in the state, which this bill is," Carlin said.

Carlin said while there are about five abortion clinics in Kansas, there are between 250 and 300 clinics that are not being inspected at this time.

Sen. Roger Reitz, R-Manhattan, said like the recent bills regarding animal cruelty, the issue of inspecting clinics, especially abortion clinics, didn't move to the forefront of the legislature until a publicized event drew statewide outrage.

That event was the discovery of conditions in a Kansas City, Kan., abortion clinic operated by Krishna Rajanna, who has since lost his license to practice medicine, according to the Associated Press.

Pictures that surfaced in 2005 showed fetal body parts being stored in a refrigerator along with food, surgical tools being kept in a bathroom, a dead mouse in a hallway, along with other health and safety hazards at the clinic, Affordable Medical and Surgical.

Rajanna denied that such conditions existed, the article said.

"After that, the genie was out of the bottle," Reitz said. "I think there's a general consensus that these things have been ignored by the legislature for years, and now there's enough publicity to bring it to the front."

Reitz said when House Bill 2503 reached the Senate last year, an amendment was added to it covering all clinics in the state, not just abortion clinics.

"I support that concept, because I think if we're going to have abortion clinics inspected, we should have everything else inspected," he said.

The amendment was removed from the bill before it was confirmed by the Senate, however.

Reitz said he believed the only downside to the current bill is that doctors and surgeons probably will not like it, because they will have to bear the cost of the inspections.

"I think it is an idea whose time has come. I think the governor will support it, and I think it will satisfy those who have been uneasy about abortion clinics," Reitz said of the bill. "I think there will be a tidying-up of all of these clinics, although I think most of them are probably operating under good standards."

Groups both against and in support of abortion are split amongst their membership as far as their opinion of the bill, Carlin said.

While some abortion proponents are uneasy about the state monitoring abortion clinics, some abortion opponents are unhappy with the inclusion of all clinics in the bill, she said.

Carlin said she has voted for the bill, in its various forms, every time the issue has come up during her years in office.

"If we care about women and Kansans' quality of life and health care, this is what we need to do," she said.

Alumni Fellows meet with students, share experiences, tour campus

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ten former K-State students were honored at a banquet last night at the K-State Alumni Center.

Jodi Weiberg, director of alumni programs, said eight of the nine colleges select one recipient, with the College of Arts and Sciences selecting two.

"The K-State Alumni Association works with the academic colleges to select a Fellow each year to come back to Kansas," she said. "They must be a graduate of that college and in the work force."

This year's Alumni Fellows are: F. Warren Weiber from the College of Agriculture; John Hedeen from the College of Architecture, Planning and Design; John D. Hofmeister and H. Duane Saunders from the College of Arts and Sciences; Rand C. Berney from the College of Business Administration; Kevin Weiberg from the College of Education; Michelle C. Munson from the College of Engineering; Mary Montgomery-Scatz from the College of Human Ecology; Terry L. Krause from the College of Technology and Aviation; and David R. Franz from the College of Veterinary Medicine.

In the two days they spend on campus, Weiberg said the fellows are very busy.

"Those two days are packed with events targeted toward the college," she said. "They meet with the advisory council, student honorary groups and current students."

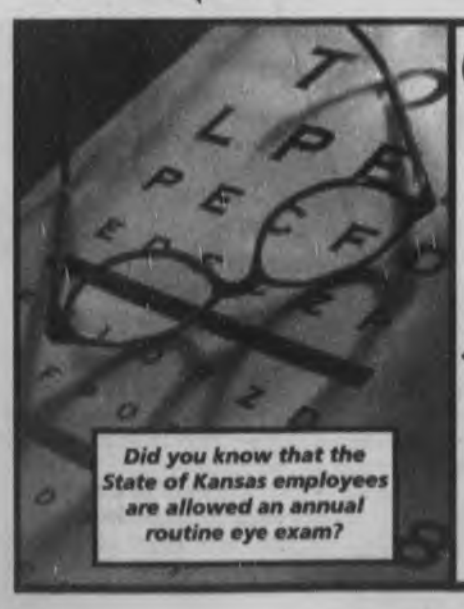
Weiberg said the program gives students the chance to see alumni from their college.

"It recognizes some of our truly outstanding alumni," she said. "It provides the opportunity for students to see and hear directly from graduates in their field being successful."



Stephen White, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said having successful alumni on campus is beneficial for several groups.

"It's the alumni's chance to meet with students and student groups," he said. "It's also a chance for them to meet with faculty members. It provides an opportunity to become reengaged with their former program and for students to have access to the alumni."

Ruth Dyer, associate provost, said the program helps the university's image.

"It's a way to showcase the accomplishments of our alumni," she said. "It's a great way to show what a K-State education has done for their career."

O'Neil deserves Hall of Fame

ANTHONY MENDOZA

More than 50 people got it wrong.

Historians, authors and researchers mulled through newspaper clippings and box scores, but one name on Monday was not announced for induction into the Baseball Hall of Fame.

Buck O'Neil.

One of 39 candidates up for election into the Hall – and one of the two people still living up until the nomination – did not make the 17-person cut, which includes reliever Bruce Sutter in this year's class.

O'Neil's career batting average of .288 is not impressive.

He was not one of the greatest Negro League players, but his contribution to the game is what has transcended O'Neil into what should have been a Hall of Fame career.

Instead, similar to his days in high school when he was not allowed to attend school in Sarasota, Fla., because of racial segregation, or play in the major leagues for the same reason, O'Neil will be on the outside looking in, once again.

This time, he will not get a chance to break down the barrier because this induction class is the culmination of the Hall of Fame project, which compiled a complete history of blacks in the game from 1860 to 1960.

He should have made the Hall of Fame for one reason alone.

His contribution to the game, through his words in interviews and documentaries, gives a vision into one of the greatest leagues ever, with talented players who never got a chance to showcase it because of their skin tone.

O'Neil broke barriers during his career. He became the first black coach, when he led the Chicago Cubs in 1962. Before that, he was a scout in 1956, and eventually was named "Midwest Scout of the Year," in 1998, while with the Kansas City Royals.

Throw the accolades aside, and forget about the batting title he won in 1946 or the fact that while a manager for the Kansas City Monarchs, his teams won four Negro League titles in five years.

It does not measure up to a bigger title O'Neil has carried around for more than 20 years.

He has been the spokesperson for the Negro Leagues.

O'Neil served on the Baseball Hall of Fame Veteran's Committee for nearly two decades, pushing for the integration of Negro League players into Cooperstown, N.Y.

He also serves as Board Chairman for the Negro League Baseball Museum in Kansas City, Mo., a baseball historical paradise he played a key role in building.

But, like his bronze statue join located on 18th and Vine in Kansas City, Mo.

Maybe you should drop a few dollars and take it in and listen to what is said.

It's less than two hours away, and then you will know why, first-hand, they made a mistake by not selecting O'Neil into the Hall of Fame.

Men's golf takes 7th in South Carolina

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team went into the Wexford Plantation Intercollegiate ranked higher than 13 of the 14 other teams competing, but did not live up to the expectations that came with such a high ranking.

"Overall, I was disappointed in how we performed in this tournament," senior Tyler Cummins said. "We were ranked above most of the teams, and I thought we had a good chance to win, but we just didn't get it done."

The Wildcats finished seventh at the Wexford Plantation Intercollegiate in Hilton Head, S.C., Tuesday by coming back in the final round to shoot a team score of 301, which helped K-State bounce back from opening rounds of 310 and 312, respectively.

South Carolina-Aiken won the tournament after firing a 36-over-par 900. The Pacers were the only team who could muster more than one round under 300.

By carding a 301, the Wildcats tied for the second-best final round score of the tournament, and Coach Tim Norris said he hopes this is a good sign, after his team struggled during final rounds in the fall season.

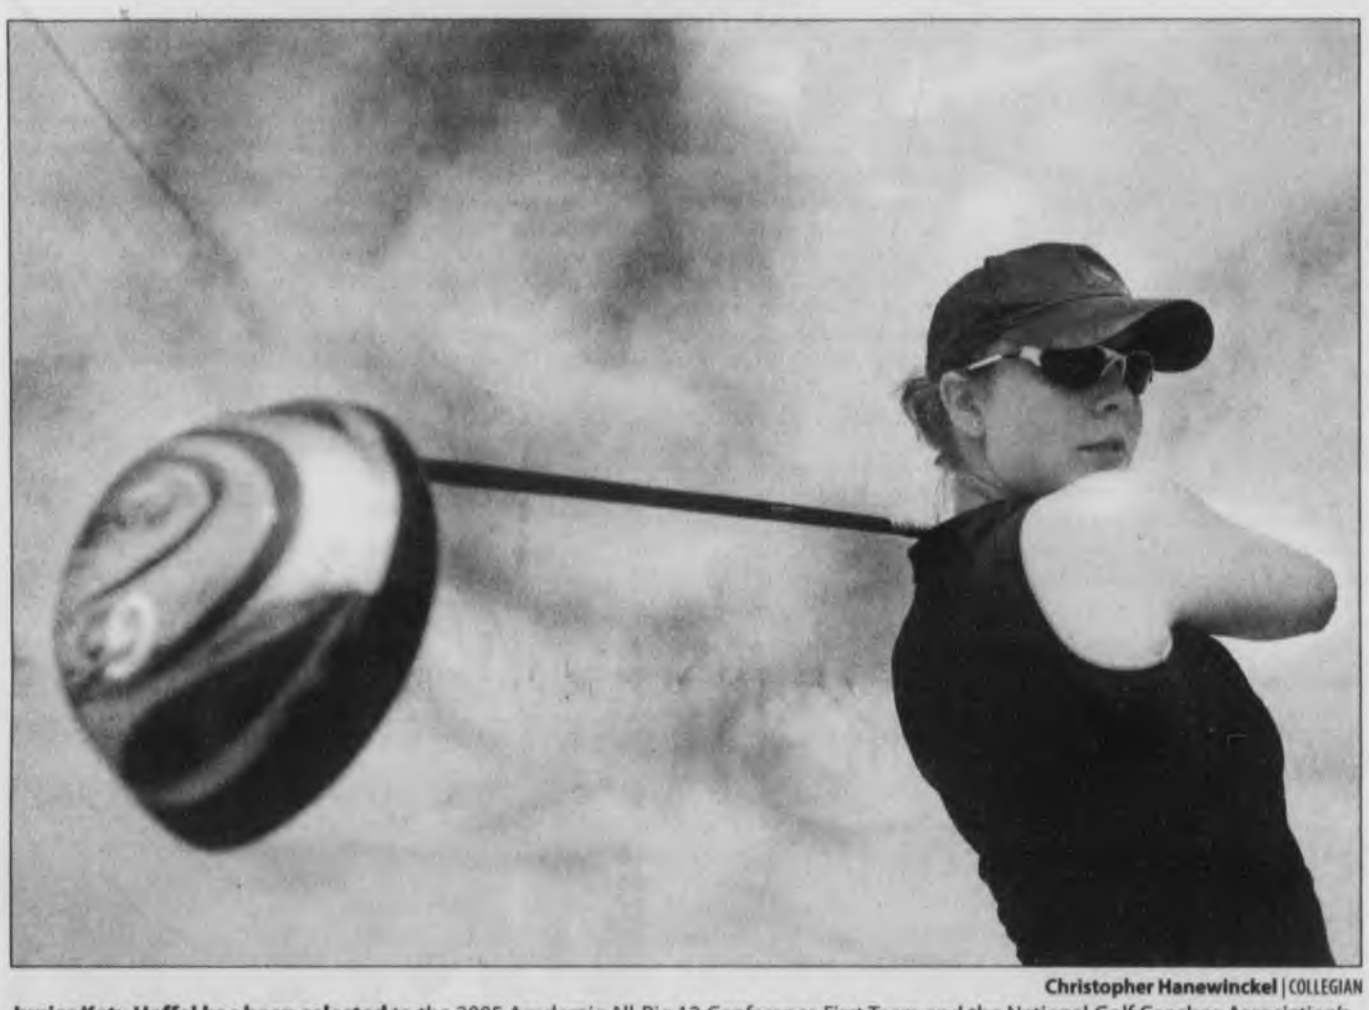
"We did a little bit better in the final round," Norris said. "Everybody had a better sense of where their game is, and the guys showed a lot of pride."

A one-under 215 was good enough for Korey Mahoney of Eastern Michigan to clear the nearest competitor by seven strokes, giving him the individual title.

K-State senior Ben Kern was the low Wildcat in his first tournament of the spring, shooting a 14-over 230 to tie for 20th. Cummins and freshman Joe Kinney each shot rounds of 77-80-75 for a 16-over 232 to tie for 25th.

Kinney said he was not prepared for the way the course was playing and felt like he could have performed better.

"I am pleased with taking 25th, but at the same time, I know I could have played better," Kinney said. "I heard this course was tight, but I was not expecting it to be claustrophobic, which is how it played.



"I did not feel comfortable with my game to begin with, and adding that to the unexpected tightness of the course made for a difficult three rounds."

Freshman Robert Streb ended one shot behind Cummins and Kinney, as he finished tied for 33rd after a 17-over 233. Rookie junior Jay Kramer shot a 32-over 248 to round out the Wildcats.

K-State will head back to South Carolina from March 12-13 to participate in the General Jim Hackler Invitational at Myrtle Beach – a place Norris said is very similar to the Wexford Plantation course.

"The course in Myrtle Beach is similar to this one," Norris said. "The fairways and the speed of the greens are very similar, and hopefully today's experience will prepare us for our next tournament."

Junior Katy Heffel has been selected to the 2005 Academic All-Big 12 Conference First Team and the National Golf Coaches Association's All-American Scholar Team during her time at K-State.

Junior's mental, physical drive contributes to team's success

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Junior Katy Heffel brings drive to the game of golf. Literally.

"A big plus with her is that she hits it long off the tee," Coach Kristi Knight said. "Usually someone either hits it a long way or they don't. It's a big plus with her."

While at K-State, Heffel has been selected to the 2005 Academic All-Big 12 Conference First Team and the National Golf Coaches Association's All-American Scholar Team. Her best outing was a tie for 13th at the Edwin Watts/Palmetto Collegiate Tournament last fall.

Heffel's older sister, Sarah, also played golf for K-State before graduating last May. Heffel, a Mesa, Ariz., native, was glad to come to Kansas.

"I was excited when I decided to come," she said. "We had a really close family, so I was happy that I was coming to join Sarah at K-State."

Having an older sister in the program made the transition to college life easier, Heffel said.

"Sarah showed me around, and having family around really helped me," Heffel said.

Although Heffel's sister was a member of the team, she was not automatically recruited, Knight said.

"I knew that [Sarah] had a younger sister, so that's how I knew about her," she said. "I still had to go watch her play. Just because you're someone's sister isn't reason enough to recruit them.

"I went out and watched her play a few times, and I saw talent there and someone who was a good student, and those are always two good qualities in prospects."

Heffel said it's difficult at times not having her sister around anymore, but she's still focusing on the task at hand.

"It was nice having her on the team, but now I have to do things by myself," she said. "I now know what it's like to be on my own completely."

While Heffel has enjoyed her time here so far, coming from Arizona was not easy in some respects, she said.

"I learned how to play in the wind and other different conditions," Heffel said.

Knight said she agreed with Heffel that the change from Arizona to Kansas weather was difficult.

"In Arizona, the two weather conditions are hot and hotter," Knight said. "She had never played in a lot of wind. She had to get where she was more comfortable with the weather conditions and hitting the ball in the wind."

Despite the difficult golfing conditions, Heffel was greeted in Manhattan by friendly folks, which made the transition from Mesa (population of more than 340,000) more pleasant, she said.

"I don't have it all figured out yet. It's hard being away from home. I've enjoyed my time here, but I'm looking forward to graduating."

Katy Heffel
JUNIOR

"There's a real sense of community here," Heffel said. "In Mesa, people aren't as nice or friendly. Here, everybody is all about K-State."

"She's been the stable one this year, and she's there to regroup the team all the time," she said. "She's the strong one that keeps everyone together.

"She's that calm girl that, if you have a problem, you know who you can go talk to."

After graduating, Heffel said she hopes to return to Arizona and possibly attend graduate school in non-profit management or possibly get her teaching certificate.

"I don't have it all figured out yet," she said. "It's hard being away from home. I've enjoyed my time here, but I'm looking forward to graduating."

Baseball wins series home opener with late inning output

By K. Jordan Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team won its home opener against South Dakota State 6-5 Tuesday, as late-inning heroics propelled a victory against the Jackrabbits.

Sophomore first baseman Cris Tapia hit a line drive down the right field line in the bottom of the ninth to score senior Brandon Farr from first, giving the Cats (4-1) their first walk-off victory of the season.

"I just saw a good pitch," he said. "I tried to get something elevated and put a good swing on it to get things happening. I just tried to put some runs together in a low-scoring game."

The Jackrabbits, who do not belong to a conference, struggled on the offensive front, as K-State pitchers struck out 15 South Dakota hitters.

Sophomore pitcher Dan Edwards picked up his first win of the season and improved to 1-1 on the year, working two innings in relief, striking out four and allowing only one hit.

"We had a bad third inning," Edwards said, "so we knew we had to come in and get our jobs done. That's something we've been working on, coming in and throwing zeros up on the board, trying to keep us in the game and let our offense do their job."

Edwards combined with sophomore lefty Chase Bayuk (1-0 with a 1.29 earned run average) to throw the final four innings of the game allowing only two hits, producing an 8-to-1 strikeout to walk ratio.

Bayuk and Edwards' pitching allowed time for the Wildcat bats to wake up, but Coach Brad Hill said his team needs to stay up all nine innings.

"We were pretty tentative," Hill said. "Not very aggressive, but we learned from previous at-bats, made some adjustments, and later in the game got some good pitches to hit."

Tapia, senior outfielder Joe Roundy, and Big 12 Conference hit leader junior Jared Goedert each had two hits each. Goedert extended his career-best hitting-streak to 10 games.

TEN | Federer, Nadal, Safin advance at Dubai

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — Roger Federer began the defense of his Dubai Open title with a 7-6, 6-3 win against Swiss compatriot Stanislas Wawrinka on Tuesday in his first match since winning the Australian Open.

Federer

He was joined in the second round by second-seeded Rafael Nadal, who was stretched by Frenchman Paul-Henri Mathieu before winning 6-7, 6-1, 6-2.

The Spanish teenager received a walkover into the quarterfinals after his next opponent, Younes El Aynaoui of Morocco, withdrew from the tournament for personal reasons.

Russia's Marat Safin made an impressive return from a six-month injury layoff to beat compatriot and world number five Nikolay Davydenko 4-6, 6-2, 6-2.

BKH| The word in Greece: Disney among suitors

The 17-year-old senior, manager of the Greece Athena High School basketball team, drained a 3-pointer, a double-pump layup and a free throw, kissed the back of his ring finger at center court and sped off to the dressing room to exhort and amuse his teammates.

McElwain, who is autistic, was back in his role as an all-around motivator on the eve of a sectional semifinal game Tuesday night — handing out water bottles, dispensing tips, helping run drills. Two weeks earlier, he suited up for a game and delivered a jaw-dropping performance.

His play drew national attention and a flood of calls from Hollywood. His parents have received inquiries from about 25 production companies ranging from The Walt Disney Co., parent of ESPN, and Warner Bros. to independent documentary filmmakers.

ST. LOUIS — Paul Miller, who led the Wichita State Shockers to their best season and a conference title in more than 20 years, was named Missouri Valley Conference player of the year Tuesday.

Miller

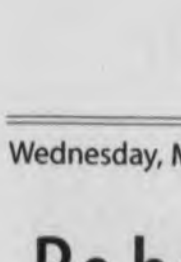
The 6-foot-10 center from Jefferson City is the first Shocker since 1985 to be named player of the year and only the third in team history.

Wichita State is the top seed in the conference tournament this weekend.

Miller is joined on the Missouri Valley all-conference team by MVC scoring leader Blake Ahearn of Missouri State, Ben Jacobson and Grant Stout of Northern Iowa and Tony Young of Southern Illinois, the MVC said.

NHL | Primeau done for season after concussion

VOORHEES, N.J. — Keith Primeau promised his wife he wouldn't break down while talking about the premature end of his season because of lingering symptoms from a concussion four months ago.



Primeau

He had good reason to keep his word. His wife, Lisa, threatened to come into the news conference and smack him on the head if he was too emotional.

Primeau won't be taking any whacks to the head soon. The Philadelphia Flyers captain is done for the season.

Be bold and stop taking his calls

My ex-boyfriend continues to call me, even though we have been broken up for more than a year now. I don't really think we could be friends, so how do I make it clear to him to stop contacting me?

LAUREN ROHRER

He keeps calling because you keep accepting the calls. He wouldn't keep bothering you if he didn't feel there was still something there.

Odds are you're being polite, and by being polite, you're giving off the wrong signal.

You are going to have to either get some balls, or turn off your phone.

My roommates are fighting over whose turn it is to wash the dishes, and it is making our living situation uncomfortable. How can we settle this, and perhaps avoid being in this position again?

I would love to tell you that making a list and taking turns would be a solution.

However, I know how I am, and if it were me, I would do whatever it took to get out of that one, and I don't think I am alone.

If they're resisting, just have everyone do their own dishes as they use them. This way you aren't cleaning up someone else's mess.

My parents are always calling me, asking me to come home for the weekend. I am genuinely too busy to go home, but I get the feeling that I am hurting their feelings when I can't make it home. Any suggestions on how to handle this?

I completely understand. I haven't been home since Thanksgiving and my parents are flipping out.

Honestly, do what you can and make it a priority.

Family is family, and yeah, they can drive you insane.

Just remember, they are probably the ones driving to the bank when you've spent your last dollar at the bar.

Libido brewing

New study suggests coffee increases sexual stimulation in women

Illustration by Loni Woolery | COLLEGIAN

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The solution to female sexual problems might be found in a machiatto.

A recent study suggests coffee increases sexual stimulation in women.

The research was conducted by Fay Guarraci, an assistant professor of psychology at Southwestern University, and Anastasia Benson, a 2005 Southwestern graduate. Their study, titled "Coffee, Tea and Me: Moderate doses of caffeine affect sexual behavior in female rats," is the first to examine how caffeine influences the female libido.

Guarraci and Benson gave about 100 female rats a moderate dose of caffeine before administering a mating test to determine if the caffeine had any effect on female mating behavior.

After the year long study, the researchers concluded caffeinated female rats mated quicker than uncaffeinated females. In most cases, the caffeinated rat scurried back to a male rat after sex, suggesting the females were more than sexually motivated to be with the males.

Although the research suggests the female libido is influenced by caffeine in products like coffee, Benson cautioned that similar results aren't likely in all humans.

"These rats had never had caffeine before," Benson said. "If you drink a cup of coffee every day, your brain becomes more adjusted to the caffeine intake. You can have withdrawal, and you drink more and more so you have the same effects. It does have an effect. It does change your behavior."

Effects on the female rats are likely to be similar to women who do drink coffee regularly.

"I think it's really exciting to hear about other ways for women to get sexually stimulated," Amanda Wilkins, Manhattan resident, said "Though the study isn't conclusive, I like the fact that sc' entists are researching something that seems so practical to know. Without sex, we all wouldn't be here."

Some coffee companies like Java Sutra have introduced a nutrient-infused coffee the company says can boost sexual energy in men and women.

The coffee is infused with organic Peruvian Maca, a potent elixir which leads to a gentle and sustained boost in sex drive, through regular drinking, the company stated in a report.

The company also said the specialized coffee not only boosts sexual energy, but also is thought to increase energy, balance hormone levels and comes with nutrients, vitamins, anti-oxidants and calcium.

"Sex drive is an indicator of a person's overall state of health," Derek Jurovich, Java Sutra president, said. "Java Sutra provides the proper nutrients to support this key factor in a medium that people drink every day. The long R&D process was in finding a blend that would not effect the great flavor of our artisan-roasted coffee."

As for Guarraci and Benson's research, the study should at least give basic understanding of the relationship between the brain and animal behavior.

"Understanding the circuits that control this behavior will help us understand how the brain works and what part of the brain mediates motivation, because sexual behavior is a motivative behavior," Guarraci stated in a press release.

Guarraci said she doesn't advise any women to use caffeine as an aphrodisiac – at least, not yet.

"My caution in terms of directly applying the caffeine or the coffee before sex to enhance your sexual drive or motivation would be that in this experiment, we gave only one dose of caffeine to animals who had never had caffeine before," Guarraci said. "Most of the time, women drink coffee on a daily basis or ingest caffeine in cola beverages."

Warm up with a meatless main course

When it's cold outside, I like to go home and eat something that will spice up my day.

I have made this chili numerous times this year, dazzling even some of my male friends with a more animal-friendly meal. Most of them don't even notice the absence of meat.

In this recipe, adapted from a family recipe and one from www.allrecipes.com, I include a spread of ingredients that bring out the flavors of the tomatoes, peppers and beans. Feel free to alter the recipe, adding your favorite seasonings and taking out other ingredients.

Though leftovers are unlikely, this chili can be stored in a seal-tight container for a few days. Keep in mind the longer you store it, the peppers are likely to become more potent.

Vegetarian chili

Time
Preparation: 15 minutes
Ready in: About one hour
Yield: About six hearty servings

Ingredients
2 tablespoons olive oil
1/2 medium onion, chopped
1 bay leaf
1 1/2 teaspoons ground cumin
1 tablespoon dried oregano
1 1/2 teaspoons salt
2 stalks of celery, chopped
1 green bell pepper, chopped
2 jalapeno peppers, chopped
2 teaspoons minced garlic, chopped
1 (12-ounce) package vegetarian burger crumbles
2 medium tomatoes, diced
3 tablespoons Mexican chili powder
1 1/2 teaspoons ground black pepper
1/2 teaspoons cayenne pepper
1 (15-ounce) can kidney beans
1 (15-ounce) can garbanzo beans
1 (15-ounce) can whole kernel corn

Cooking instructions

1. Heat the olive oil in a large pot over medium heat. Stir in the onion, and season with bay leaf, cumin, oregano and salt. Cook and stir until onion is tender.
2. Mix in bell peppers, jalapeno peppers, celery and garlic. Let vegetables heat through and tenderize. Add vegetarian burger crumbles.
3. Reduce heat to low and cover pot. Let simmer for 8 minutes.
4. Add tomatoes to pot. Season with Mexican chili powder, black and cayenne pepper.
5. Stir in kidney beans, garbanzo beans and black beans.
6. Bring to boil and reduce heat to low. Simmer 40 minutes.
7. Stir in corn and continue cooking 6 minutes before serving.

Change it up
- Top the chili off with your soup favorites, including crackers, cheddar cheeses, sour cream, or extra jalapenos.
- Not feeling vegetarian? Substitute the vegetarian burger crumbles with half a pound of ground hamburger, ground turkey or diced chicken chunks.
- For those who prefer a soupier chili, add 1/2 cup of water. Be sure to add a couple extra dashes of cumin, oregano, salt, garlic, Mexican chili powder, cayenne and black pepper. Adding extra spices will help maintain good flavor.

DAILY HOROSCOPES

Aries
(March 21 - April 19)
Good time to be happy-go-lucky! You'll find that works out a lot better than the sad-go-accident-prone you've been trying.

Taurus
(April 20 - May 20)
Bad news: People think you're becoming paranoid. Isn't that just typical, though? I mean, they don't even have invisible malevolent air-squids spying on them, do they?

Gemini
(May 21 - June 20)
It's time to start setting higher goals. Don't get stuff to make a salad and then let it rot in the fridge. Get stuff to make several salads, and start your own compost pile.

Cancer
(June 21 - July 22)
Time for a career change. Have you considered the exciting and lucrative career of "despot"? One of the nice perks about that is that you can wear a ridiculous hat without people laughing at you.

Leo
(July 23 - August 22)
Today you will find a really big piece of lint in your pocket. That's it, though, for today's excitement.

Virgo
(August 23 - September 22)
Family problems again. It'll be just like that Rolling Stones song, about how you "Can't Always Get What You Waant", except that in your case, you can replace one of the words with "Ever." Try being positive and future-focused.

Libra
(September 22 - October 22)
You will hear a strange "clicking" sound today, as you are walking through the kitchen. Time to trim the toenails, don't you think?

Scorpio
(October 23 - November 21)
This will be a very happy week for you. And you know what they've been saying about that for thousands of years, don't you? "Happy Good! Me Like Happy!"

Sagittarius
(November 22 - December 21)
Good day to let sleeping dogs lie. After all, the poor things seem to be completely exhausted, most of the time. It's a tough life, but someone's got to do it.

Capricorn
(December 22 - January 20)
You've been finding that the best-laid plans of mice and men often go astray. Or is that awry? Awiggly? It's something along those lines. Anyway, the thing to do is to fire your mice.

Aquarius
(January 21 - February 18)
In a strange turn of events, it will turn out that people wearing glasses not only look smarter, they are smarter (and have better memories). You'll forget all about that when you take off your reading glasses, of course.

Pisces
(February 19 - March 20)
You will find yourself in a huge handbasket, before the end of the day, and it will be getting much warmer than you like.

House Bill allows women to breast-feed in public

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A bill giving women the right to breast-feed in public won Senate approval last week and is on its way to Gov. Kathleen Sebelius.

House Bill 2284 states a mother may breast-feed in any public place. The bill also acknowledges the nutritional benefits of nursing.

Sen. Jim Barnett (R-Emporia) said breast-feeding is important to a mother-child relationship.

"I am a physician as well as a senator, and I strongly support breast-feeding for the health and well-being of both the baby and the mother," said Barnett, chairperson of the Public Health and Welfare Committee. "I think anything that Kansas can do to promote breast-feeding is good public policy."

The current law is unclear about a woman's rights, Barnett said.

"The law is silenced right now, and because of that, the law is actually somewhat unclear," Barnett said. "At this point, if a business owner would not want a woman to breast-feed on their premises, they have the right to ask them to leave or to stop breast-feeding."

The bill was initiated by a Lawrence woman who was asked to leave a business because she was nursing.

Wal-Mart already has a policy in place allowing women to breast-feed within its businesses, said Kevin Thornton, spokesperson for Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.

"We respect any customer who chooses to breast-feed in a public place," Thornton said. "So if the law is passed, we will continue to comply with that policy."

The bill also states that women who are breast-feeding will be excused from jury duty.

"It was problematic for some women to be involved in court proceedings all day long and still be able to breast-feed," Barnett said.

The bill was passed out of the House, Health and Human Services Committee last year into the Public Health and Welfare Committee.

The bill has experienced several setbacks because of debate over the language in the bill.

"The language just kept changing," said Sen. Roger Reitz (R-Manhattan). "It just kept coming back because of language changes, and the vote was always very close."

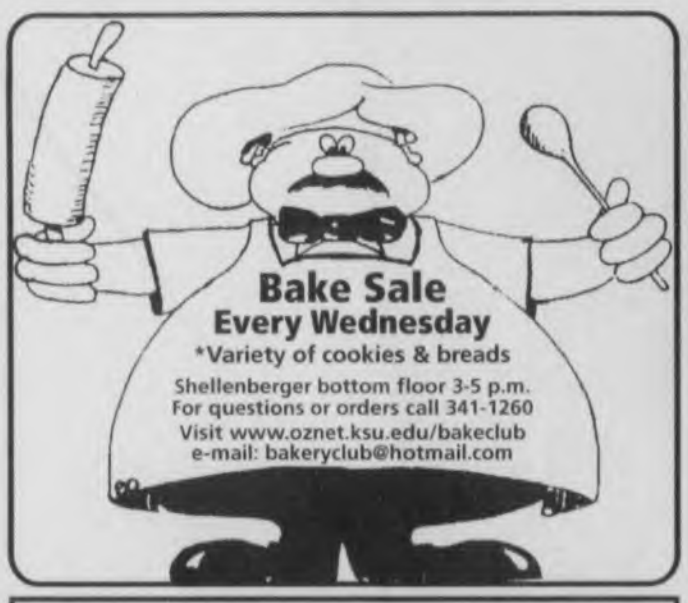
Some senators wanted to include the words "appropriately" and "discreetly" in the bill, restricting how women could breast-feed in public.

"The bill was languished because of this position," Reitz said. "And (the position) had a lot of supporters."

One of the conflicts was over how to define these words.

"Who is to say exactly what those words mean?" Reitz said. "It's tough to define, and it's a judgement call on a number of people of what those words mean."

Ultimately, these words were omitted from the bill.



"I certainly trust women to know where and when to breast-feed," Barnett said.

The bill is expected to become law very soon, Reitz said.

"This is something that, in this day and age, is long past its time," Reitz said. "This is a call a woman should make."

help people," Delimont said. "Sometimes people bring in some things that are out of our league."

When preparing to have taxes done, Delimont said people need to have all W-2 forms, 2004 Adjusted Gross Income, social security card and information on dependence.

"If you think you're going to get a refund, come in as soon as possible," he said.

Mariah Bracebridge, director of the Ogden Community Center, said pairing volunteers with those needing tax help locally is what the program is all about.

"It is a way for people to get out and give back," Bracebridge said.

And getting taxes done doesn't have to cost a fortune, she said.

"Sometimes, it costs more than you're going to get back," Bracebridge said. "Where else can you get anything else for free?"

SEALE | Speaker inspired by historic black leaders

it's important to understand," Seale said. "It just threw me to understand that."

He said he was further inspired by Martin Luther King Jr., Malcom X and Nelson Mandela.

Multiple times, Seale stressed the importance for history to be taught thoroughly to students, and black history is part of world history.

"It's good to be out here," he said. "I periodically come to the Midwest. This is the last day of Black History Month, in terms of its designation. It's important for all humanity. We cannot talk about African American people not contributing to the evolvement of this country. This is profound human history."

After attending a speech by Martin Luther King Jr., Seale said he knew he wanted to continue in learning about black history. He said he quit his job, and dedicated himself to the civil rights movement.

The first project he was involved with was a tutorial program.

"We wrote our own proposals and created our own program in a low-income community, where we took high school youths and got them minimum-wage jobs as tutors," Seale said.

He told of Huey Newton, co-founder of the Black Panther Party, and his experiences with legally patrolling police and winning 95 percent of their court cases.

"My father taught me to defend myself," Seale said. "We were students who knew our laws. We were sticklers about the law. We were academics, we were researchers. This was not about machoism."

He mentioned the requirements that were set for its members, like knowing the Ten-Point Program, which outlined their goals.

"We were defending the original Constitution as it is written in the original Constituion of this country," Seale said.

Seale explained why they decided on the black panther for their logo.

"You keep pushing it in its corner, eventually it's not gonna take any more crap," Seale said.

He said this was comparable to black people at the time. He explained that a main focus was institutionalized racism.

"Our analysis is that the crooks of institutionalized racism is manifested in its laws," Seale said. "They're making these laws with white supremacy and black inferiority."

He spoke of Newton's adventures with the cops, and how they legally patrolled the police.

"We had one of the best legal teams in this country," Seale said. "We didn't care whether you were white, black, yellow, purple, or polka dot. What we worried about was where your heart, mind and soul was at."

Seale told the audience these issues still face us today.

"We were working with the progressive movement of humanity," Seale said. "Racism is not a date. We were struggling for a future world of descent relationships between people, and to get rid of bigotry and other kinds of racism."

He also gave the students some advice.

"This is people's politics here," Seale said. "Your heart, mind and soul should be about continuing human liberation struggle."

Criswell and three of his friends said they asked to have Seale speak his freshman year.

"We've been fighting a lot for it to happen, and it finally happened this year," Criswell said.

Criswell said he appreciated Seale's straightforwardness.

"A lot of times, we, as a generation, have been disconnected from previous movements," Criswell said. "I think it's important for us to see that we've come a long way, but we have an even farther way to go."

"I'm really happy with the response of the entire month," Letitia Tajuba, junior in political science and special programs director of BSU said.

Tajuba said she thought Seale brought out the truth.

"A lot of the misconceptions, he abolished," she said. "I think having people like him, with his caliber will bring out more of our history that we need to have."

Before and after the speech, Seale sold a book and DVD about his experiences. His book, "Ceize the Time," is the first book written by him about the history of the party.

FASFA | Most students apply for financial aid online

million of federal aid for students next year, in the form of grants, scholarships, work-study and loans.

Students can pick up an application in the financial aid office in Fairchild Hall, or they can apply online at www.fafsa.ed.gov, Moeder said.

"There are student and parent portions of the application, and the benefit of the online application is that the student can do their part here (in Manhattan) and their parents can finish their part wherever they are," he said. "To do that though, the student and the parent both need a PIN number ... They would apply for that number at that same Web site."

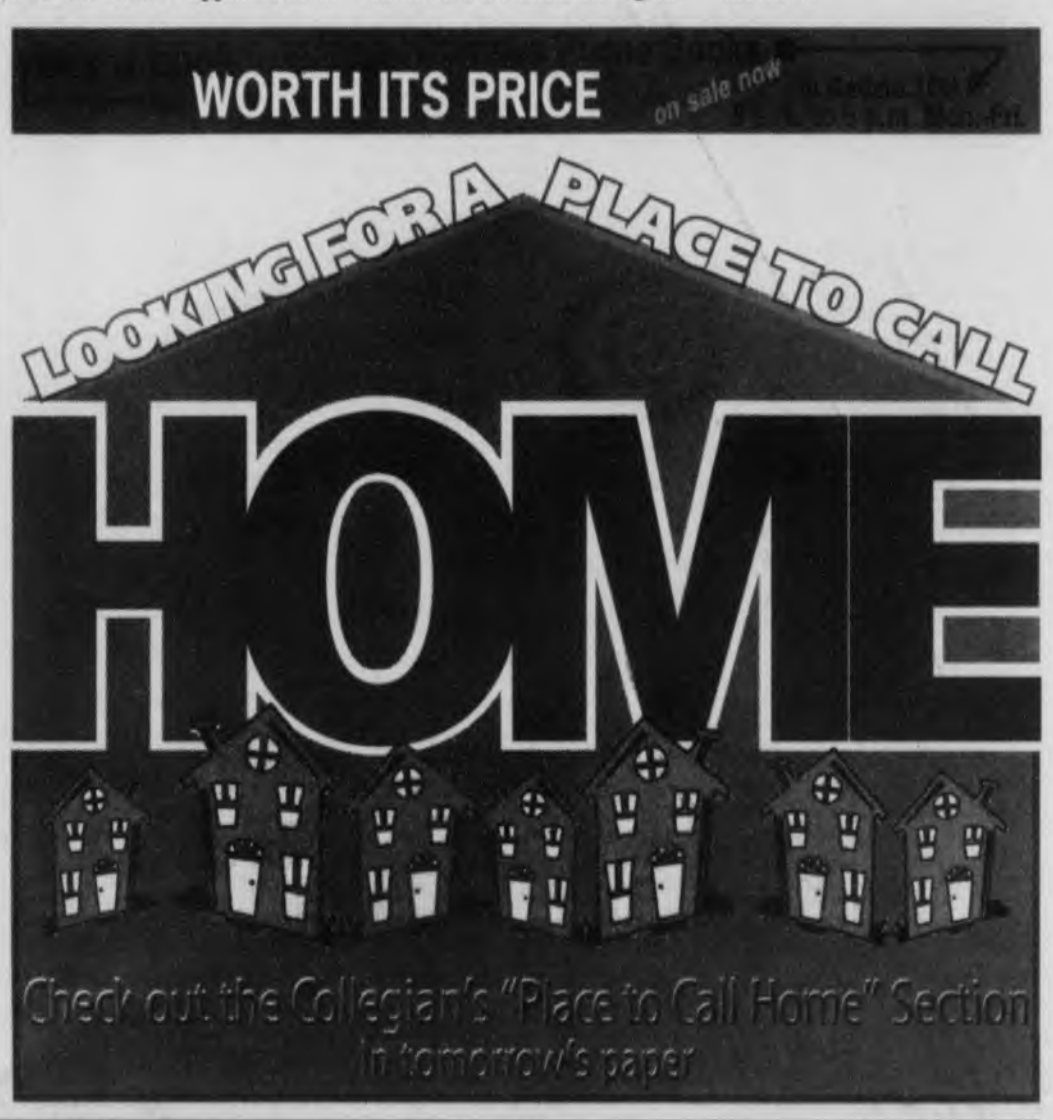
Moeder said most students at K-State have applied online, and the online application is useful because students and parents can use their PIN-number the next time they apply, and all they have to do is update their tax information.

Bryan Williams, freshman in open-option, said he receives federal financial aid.

Williams, who also works in the financial aid office, said he met the March 1 deadline last year.

"I got the Kansas Comprehensive Grant, the SEOC Grant, Perkins loans, which are offered through K-State, tuition waivers and work-study," Williams said. "I have most of those because I met that deadline."

Williams said the financial aid office sent an e-mail to everyone who receives financial aid, reminding them of the deadline, about a week ago. He said the office also does presentations for different organizations regarding financial aid.



Students who miss the March 1 deadline can still apply, Moeder said. He said he would encourage those students who haven't applied to do so.

"Aid for many programs is available all year long," he said.

For those planning ahead for next year, Moeder said students should keep in mind that it takes the federal government time to process their information, so they shouldn't wait until the last minute before March 1.

Williams said he believes it's important for students to apply, and to do so before March 1 if they can.

"By reaching that deadline, you can qualify for so many more programs," he said. "There's a lot of nice money out there."

Sweeping season?

K-State hasn't swept Kansas since 1983. After a win Jan. 14 in Lawrence, there's a possibility for the Cats to go 2-0, when the two teams meet on Saturday.

Off The Court
with Shalee Lehning

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As a freshman, Shalee Lehning has become one of the most recognizable members of the K-State women's basketball team.

Lehning
GUARD

If you haven't noticed her, just watch for the player who is constantly on the floor chasing after loose basketballs, running full-speed into the bench to save a ball or the one with too much energy for her own good.

Lehning, a Sublette, Kan., native, has started 20 of the Wildcats' 26 games, is 21 assists shy of breaking Megan Mahoney's freshman record of 157 assists and recently sat down with the Collegian to talk about her obsession with shoes, syrup and the perils of tree-tackling.

Q: If you could play any sport other than basketball, what would it be?
A: I would probably run track because I love the hurdles. I was never fast enough to run sprints and never in good enough shape to run long distance, so they (coaches) threw me into hurdles, and I did pretty good.

Q: How many pairs of shoes do you own?
A: I have a fetish for shoes. Last time I counted, I had 42 pairs, but I've been getting rid of some and buying more, so I've lost track.

Q: Where does all your energy come from, and can I bottle it and sell it?
A: No, you can't sell it, because I don't know where it comes from. It's just something that's inside of me, and I just have a passion for basketball and just love doing what I'm doing.

Q: Why K-State over that other school up the road?
A: K-State just has the total package. It's an amazing atmosphere, the amazing coaching staff is here and the wonderful teammates I've had the opportunity to be with. I love the religious background that this program has and just putting it all together, you just can't go wrong.

Q: When you were a kid, what did you want to be when you grew up?

Q: Any unusual habits?
A: The girls always make fun of me because I put syrup on everything. Any time we have anything to do with breakfast, I just put it on everything and it kind of grosses everybody out.

Q: What's your favorite outdoor sport?
A: I love skiing. I'm a total outdoors person. Snowboarding is something that I'm going to try to do but anything outdoors.

Q: Now, you've been prone to running into things on the court every once in a while – have you ever run into anything on the slopes?
A: Oh yeah. There have been a few trees that I've tackled, and I've won.

Q: What's your favorite TV show?
A: American Idol. My teammates and I watch it together. It hasn't been as good as the last couple of seasons, but we like watching the process of it.

Q: Do your basketball skills come from your father's or mother's side of the family?
A: My dad's side. My mom was the head cheerleader, and she is more of the supporting type, and my dad was more athletic."

Letter to NCAA selection committee: let the K-State women in 'Big Dance'

Dear NCAA selection committee,

MATT GORNEY

I have a favor to ask you.

Please give the K-State Wildcat women's basketball team a bid in this year's NCAA Tournament. You don't have to seed them high – 15th or 16th in a region will be perfectly fine.

Everyone knows the old names synonymous with K-State are gone. The nearly-unbeatable trio of Nicole Ohlde, Kendra Wecker and Laurie Koehn have moved on. It is completely unfair to judge this year's team by the standards of the past few seasons.

The Wildcats are still a force to be reckoned with. At 17-9 overall, the team has proven they have what it takes to compete in the NCAA.

Back in December, K-State played in two tournaments. The first, the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic, saw the Cats take second place. Then, in the Saint Peter's College Holiday Classic, K-State placed first.

Before the Big 12 Conference season, K-State was 10-1. The only loss was to Saint Joseph's, who recently finished its regular season with a 18-9 record.

Still, we all know the conference season is the true template for teams looking to play throughout March. Therefore, I'm not going to blow a bunch of fancy smoke at you. K-State has only been average during this Big 12 season.

However, I do want to point out some key losses the Wildcats have on their record. It is through these recent losses that K-State has proven they have the fire and passion required to play in the tournament.

Look at the caliber of teams that have come to play in Bramlage Coliseum in the past week.

The Oklahoma Sooners came to town Feb. 21, and K-State lost 78-64. At halftime, on a last-second 3-pointer from freshman Danielle Zanotti, K-State snapped a tie and entered the locker room with a 39-36 lead.

Before the beginning of the game, the question that seemed to be on everyone's lips was, "How bad are the Wildcats going to get thumped by the Sooners"?

At halftime, it looked as if K-State was going to hand the Sooners their first loss in conference play. In the second half, Oklahoma tried to run away with the game, going up nine points early in the period.

Again, K-State showed that spark and mounted a comeback, tying the game at 60 with six minutes remaining. Oklahoma maintained its momentum, though, closing the game out 78-64.

The Wildcats' next, and final, home game was against the defending national champion Baylor Bears. After staying close to Oklahoma, there was more optimism entering the Baylor game.

Again, the Cats came out looking and playing like a top-25 team. At the half, they were only down by two points.

To be down by only two points at the half to a team like Baylor shows the maturity and talent required of an NCAA-bound team.

In the end, K-State lost by nine after Baylor successfully scored a barrage of free throws on K-State fouls, as the Cats attempted a late comeback.

Please take these amazing flashes of greatness into account when selecting teams to put on their dancing shoes in March.

Also, consider the make-up of the Wildcats this season – four young, eager freshmen have successfully filled the shoes of players who defined an era in K-State women's basketball.

Freshmen Shalee Lehning, Marlies Gipson, JoAnn Hamlin and Zanotti all donated significant minutes to this year's campaign. Never have there been less than two of the four freshmen starting each game.

Focus on these intangibles when looking at the team for possible selection. Even though their record might not denote the level of improvement the Cats have made as the season progressed, look beyond scores and stats.

Please let the Wildcats dance the Big Dance in March. Most likely, you will be quite surprised with what they have to show you.

Respectfully,
Matt Gorney

Hawks present new challenge

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Allen Fieldhouse has had a tint of purple to it for the past few years, but when K-State travels to Lawrence for its 91st meeting with Kansas on Thursday, "The Phog" might not be the friendliest of places to be for the Wildcats.

In the Wildcats' (17-9, 7-8 Big 12 Conference) last four games in Lawrence, K-State has dominated the Jayhawks (16-10, 5-10) with four-consecutive wins by an average victory margin of 28 points per game.

K-State fans also have traditionally been a visible presence in Allen Fieldhouse, but Coach Deb Patterson said the number of Wildcat fans might be less than in previous years.

"I fully expect that Kansas will be a hostile environment this time around," Patterson said. "The last two years, I think our dominance in there by our fans is something they take personally. They are doing everything they can to equalize the advantage that we've brought to that matchup."

Overall, the Wildcats have won nine-straight games against the Jayhawks, including a 69-63 win Jan. 25 in Manhattan. Despite the win, the six-point margin was the closest the Jayhawks have been during the streak.

"It's going to be a battle of Kansas schools, and it's going to be a packed house, so we just have to come in not intimidated and just be ready to play," said freshman Marlies Gipson, who scored 16 points in the first meeting.

The Jayhawks are 3-6 since losing to the Wildcats earlier in the season, but are coming off of a 81-71 overtime win against Missouri on Saturday. K-State is in the midst of a four-game losing streak, with two of those losses coming at the hands of No. 9 Oklahoma and No. 10 Baylor.

Freshman Shalee Lehning said both Kansas and K-State will have momentum coming into both teams' Big 12 Conference regular-season finale.

"It (the Missouri win) probably gave them a little bit of momentum and some confidence coming in, but at the same time, we just competed against two top-10 teams," said Lehning, who scored 10 points against the Jayhawks in Manhattan. "I know we didn't come out on top, but it gave us a lot of confidence to know we can compete with the best of them."

Along with playing in their final game of the regular season and playing in a hostile environment, the Wildcats also have the added pressure of being a NCAA Tournament bubble team.

"To me it's a huge game because it's our finale in the Big 12 regular season," Patterson said. "It's a great rivalry game. We are coming off a string of losses and we are very hungry to win. It's just a really big game, and I would love for our team to end on a high note."

K-State's, Kansas' different paths

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State and Kansas' paths after the Wildcats' 59-55 win on Jan. 14 in Lawrence, Kan., took distinctly different routes.

The Cats notched two-consecutive victories against Texas A&M and Missouri following the win at Allen Fieldhouse. The Jayhawks, on the other hand, lost to Missouri in Columbia, Mo., two days later.

Then, roles reversed.

The Cats lost three-straight games on the road, including a 72-70 loss to Baylor – who's last in the Big 12 – on Feb. 1.

From there, K-State went 2-4, with both victories coming at home, the most memorable being the Iowa State win Feb. 8, when assistant coach Jimmy Elgas filled in for Coach Jim Wooldridge, who had neck surgery that morning. Wooldridge returned to watch the Wildcats lose at Texas Tech on Feb. 15.

Recently, K-State suffered a one-point loss to Texas on Feb. 22 and a 65-66 setback at Oklahoma on Saturday.

Kansas apparently woke up after losing to K-State. The Jayhawks went on a 10-1 run, which included a 96-54 romp of Nebraska, an 86-52 win against Texas Tech and a one-point win against Oklahoma.

Then, on Saturday, Texas snapped the Jayhawks' hot streak, handling Kansas 80-55 in Austin.

Kansas players to watch in 2nd Sunflower Showdown

< JULIAN WRIGHT

Freshman Julian Wright has made a name for himself as one of the Big 12 Conference's most staunch defenders and penetrators. His ability to play guard and/or forward creates difficulty for many opponents, and his long arms have proven to be blocking and passing weapons. He is averaging 8.7 points per game, but lately, his productivity has skyrocketed, especially against Baylor on Feb. 21 (career-high 20 points) and Texas on Feb. 25 (18 points). For his recent contributions, he was named the Phillips 66 Big 12 Rookie of the Week Feb. 27. Wright also was a pick for the 2006 Big 12 Preseason Freshman of the Year by League Coaches.

^ MARIO CHALMERS

Freshman Mario Chalmers runs Kansas' offense as well as any other guard in the Big 12, largely in part to his quick style and solid court awareness. Chalmers is second behind Rush, averaging 10.7 points per game and is pacing the Jayhawks — and Big 12 — with 2.7 steals per game. He also has earned Phillips 66 Big 12 Conference Rookie of the Week accolades twice this year, on Jan. 30 and Feb. 13.

< Russell Robinson

Sophomore Russell Robinson has refined his overall game in his second year at Kansas. He put on 20 pounds after his freshman season and has developed into a solid sixth man off the bench. Robinson has the ability to run the point, leading the Jayhawks in assists with 111 on the season, while averaging 8.7 points per game.

v BRANDON RUSH

Freshman Brandon Rush is arguably the Jayhawk's most athletic player, known for his ball-handling skills and versatility around the perimeter and down low. He has emerged as a consistent player for Kansas and is leading KU in scoring (13.7 points per game) and rebounding (6 per game). He has been tabbed the Phillips 66 Big 12 Conference Rookie of the Week twice on Jan. 9 and Feb. 6.

Cats hope to avenge loss to Nebraska

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State at Nebraska
When: 7 tonight
Where: Bob Devaney Sports Center Lincoln, Neb.
TV/Radio: Fox Sports Midwest/101.5 KROK-FM

In anticipation of Saturday's Sunflower Showdown, some K-State fans might be tempted to overlook tonight's rematch against Nebraska in Lincoln.

However, junior forward Cartier Martin said the Wildcats (14-11, 5-9 Big 12 Conference) can't afford to look past the Huskers (17-10, 7-7).

"I'm not thinking about KU because I'm really more worried about this game on the road against Nebraska," Martin said.

Perhaps Martin should be worried. After all, the Wildcats own a 1-8 road record, and the Huskers defeated K-State 57-42 on Jan. 11 in Manhattan for its largest loss of the season.

"Last time we played them, we didn't play well on our defensive game," Martin said. "We've got to keep them off the boards and stop them early, run a little bit more, get offensive rebounds."

K-State's previous performance against Nebraska could have been a fluke, since the Wildcats shot a season-low 23.4 percent and only made 11 field goals.

Still, junior guard Mario Taybron said Nebraska deserved to win.

"They out-rebounded us, and they were playing hard," Taybron said. "They just outplayed us. This time, we'll be more prepared."

K-State has dropped seven of its last nine games, including two in the past week by one point each.

This season, K-State has lost nine games by five points or less, the most losses by that margin in school history.

Junior guard Akeem Wright said losing is tough, but it is not as difficult to bounce back as some might think.

"We don't want to lose, so we're looking at this game as a winnable game," Wright said. "We want to avenge the loss, so I think everyone's psyched for the game."

Recently, Nebraska also has had trouble winning.

The Huskers have lost four of their last six and are trying to rebound from a 66-55 loss to Texas A&M Saturday.

Nebraska, in sixth place in the Big 12 Conference, has three players averaging double figures in scoring, but none of them are among the conference's top-20 scorers.

Senior Wes Wilkinson leads the Huskers with 11.8 points per game, while sophomore Aleks Maric adds 10.4 points and 8.1 rebounds per game.

Martin leads the Wildcats with an average of 18.4 points, good for fourth in the Big 12. Sophomore guard David Hoskins ranks 19th at 12.8 points per game.

Currently, K-State is in a two-way tie with Iowa State for eighth in the Big 12 standings.

Martin said K-State's post-season chances are slim, but the Cats still have a chance to make the postseason.

"It's frustrating, because at the beginning of the season we had high hopes," Martin said. "(Making the post-season) is still a possibility, and we will fight it out until we know for sure."

Despite the losses, Martin said the Wildcats won't let up.

"We are not the kind of team who's going to give up," he said. "We've just got to keep fighting and keep playing like it's the last game."

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

BRING YOUR Broom

Lately, Bramlage Coliseum has developed a reputation as a difficult place to play. So, let's keep the reputation alive. When K-State faces Kansas on Saturday, cut out this broom to help cheer on the Cats to their first Jayhawk sweep in 23 years.

Directions

1. Cut out broom along the dotted lines.
2. Attach broom to a paint-mixing stick, ruler or piece of cardboard to sturdy.
3. Bring broom to the game to show support and help rally the Cats to a historic sweep against KU.

King, Besler win by 10

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Presidential and vice presidential candidates Matt King and Emily Besler celebrate the announcement of receiving 1,044 votes to advance to the general election next week. King and Besler now look to next week, when they will run against Lucas and Katie Maddy to determine who will be the next student body president and vice president.

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The floor was almost shaking at Kite's Bar and Grill on Wednesday night.

About 80 blue-clad Matt King and Emily Besler supporters literally leapt for joy when King and Besler were announced as the winners of the primary election for student body president and vice president.

"I'm just on cloud nine," said King, senior in political science and natural resources.

King and Besler received 1,044 votes to beat second-place finishers Lucas and Katie Maddy, who received 1,034 votes.

"Ten votes. That says it all," Besler, senior in marketing and political science, said. "Each person matters. Don't underestimate the power of your voice. Students can do a lot on this campus."

King said the Maddys will be solid competitors in next week's general election.

"You can't get better than two pairs who want what's best for the university," he said. "It'll be a tough race to the end."

King and Besler are campaigning on a four-pillar platform of campus safety, academic excellence, the creation of a student pre-game section at Snyder Family Stadium and the "Big Three" issues of tuition, parking and textbooks.

The duo wants to expand SafeRide by establishing a hybrid call system that would use both taxis and larger passenger vehicles.

King and Besler aim to promote academic excellence by increasing involvement in graduate teaching assistant workshops and by adding new technology to more classrooms.

In a student pre-game section, King and Besler said students would be able to enjoy free food, listen to live music and win prizes before home sporting events.

Tuition, parking and textbooks – the "Big Three" issues – all have pending solutions, which King and Besler said they will support.

"We've hit our platform really hard," King said. "I'd like to see our platform expand, the discussion expand."

This week, King and Besler said they want to reiterate their platform, address other issues of importance to students and continue meeting with students and student organizations.

"We've got a laundry list of issues we've been working on," King said.

"I want to reach out to as many people I don't know as possible."

The two agreed that the six pairs of candidates who did not advance all had platforms that could benefit the university and said they want to see some of those ideas incorporated into future Student Governing Association legislation.

"I still think their ideas are really valuable," Besler said. "We've had some wonderful competition."

	Number of votes	Percent
Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy	1,034	24.0
Ashley Boldt and Anthony Carter	722	16.8
Zach Hauser and Erica Boatman	552	12.8
Ryan Collett and Emily Mayfield	312	7.3
Amanda Hoffman and Amir Bahadori	291	6.8
Chris Gigstad and Nick Durand	188	4.4
John Wallisch and Steve Hilburn	78	1.8

Maddy pair advances

Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN

Presidential candidate Lucas Maddy, right, gives a hug to vice presidential candidate Katie Maddy on Wednesday evening at Rusty's Next Door as they celebrate the announcement of receiving 1,034 votes to advance to the general election next week. Lucas and Katie Maddy will face Matt King and Emily Besler in the general election to decide who will be the next student body president and vice president.

By Owen Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Rusty's Next Door was silent Wednesday night, at least for a few seconds.

Presidential candidate pair and siblings Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy waited to hear which candidates for student body president and vice president would challenge Matt King and Emily Besler in next week's general election.

The announcers for KSDB-91.9 said the name "Lucas," and the silence was shattered by cheers and yells.

The Maddys advanced Wednesday in the primary election for student body president and vice president, finishing second behind King and Besler by only 10 votes.

Lucas said hearing his own name was almost a surprise.

"I'm a numbers guy and a pessimist," Lucas, senior in agricultural technology management, said.

"I was worried we didn't get our name out enough because we were working with a limited amount of time."

The brother and sister pair finished the election with a 1,034-vote total, which Lucas said also was a surprise.

"I told everyone here (at the Maddys' watch party) that we would need at least 1,200 votes to get past the primaries," he said. "But this just shows how well-qualified all of the candidates were."

Katie, junior in animal science and industry, said the pair's Campus, Career and Community campaign platform will not change before the general election and said K-State and the Manhattan community are benefits to each other.

"We don't want students and the university to see the community as something they have to deal with, but as an asset," Katie said.

She said she and Lucas would make it their mission to be their constituents' voice.

"We want to be a voice for the university," Katie said, "a voice to the student body and to the community."

Lucas said he is happy he and his sister moved on, but there is still more work to be done and more students' voices to be heard.

"There are so many people, we haven't got to speak to yet," he said.

"We're probably not going to get any sleep (until the general election), but we're thrilled."

After all the high-fives and hugs, the pair went to Kite's Bar and Grill, King and Besler's watch party headquarters, to offer congratulations to the opposition.

Katie said she was glad King and Besler advanced, as well.

"We have a lot of respect for them and their ideas," she said.

6 proposals selected for surplus student fees

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Six proposals for the $1.5 million Student Fee Bond Surplus have been selected and will receive one-time allocations of funding.

Student Body Vice President Grant Groene said the committee's recommendation for project funding will be introduced to Student Senate on March 9 and will be voted on March 16.

"I don't foresee any problems with it going through Senate," he said.

K-State students have been paying off bonds used to fund student-centered expansion and enhancement projects, according to the Student Fee Bond Surplus proposal guidelines.

A large reserve had accumulated in the surplus account, and $1.5 million had been allotted for projects that benefit the entire student body.

After 47 pre-proposals were submitted by Feb. 10, the committee chose 16 proposals for the full proposal review process.

Internet money order scams increase

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A rising trend in fraudulent money order scams has tricked thousands of Americans.

These scams involving the transfer and wiring of counterfeit money orders are best known as "419s" or "Nigerian 419s." This name comes from the legal code assigned to this type of scam in the African country of Nigeria, to which many of the money orders have been traced.

Money order scams usually employ one of two common scenarios. In the first, a criminal agrees to purchase an item from an individual through an advertisement or online auction site and sends fraudulent money orders as payment. In the second scenario, the criminal claims to be a foreigner who needs to cash several money orders but wants to do it in the United States to avoid international fees.

Regardless of which variation the criminal uses, it ends by requesting that the receiver cash the money orders, wire the sender a specified amount of money and pocket the rest.

If the receiver complies and cashes the money orders, several days can pass before a bank discovers they are false. If the excess money already has been wired, the victim is held responsible for the amount lost.

Peterson and her boyfriend placed an ad on Petfinder.com to seek an adoptive home for several gerbils.

Peterson said she received an enthusiastic reply from a family in Canada who wanted to adopt a gerbil.

"They said they were a nice Christian family and that they would give my pet a loving home," she said. "They even sent a picture. It was a little weird."

After Peterson agreed to the adoption, the family told her it would transport the pet through a shipping company in Africa. When she contacted the company, Peterson was told she would receive $2,250 in U.S. Postal money orders,

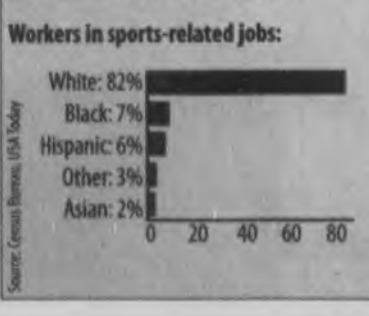
Iraq violence

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Bombings in Baghdad killed 26 people, and four others died when mortar rounds slammed into their homes in a nearby town Wednesday. Saddam Hussein's trial resumed, with the former leader telling judges he ordered the trials of Shiites who eventually were executed in the 1980s but insisted that those actions were not criminal.

Bush protest

NEW DELHI — Tens of thousands of Indians waving black and white flags and chanting "Death to Bush!" rallied Wednesday in New Delhi to protest a visit by President Bush. Surindra Singh Yadav, a senior police officer in charge of crowd control, said as many as 100,000 people, most of them Muslim, had gathered in a fairground in central New Delhi ordinarily used for political rallies.



Consumer spending up

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Consumers, lured out to the stores by the warmest January in more than a century, spent at a rapid clip that outpaced their incomes. However, construction activity decreased to the slowest gain in seven months, indicating the nation's housing boom is easing. The Commerce Department reported Wednesday that personal spending shot up by 0.9 percent, the strongest gain in six months.

Boldt, Carter take 3rd, stay upbeat

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ashley Boldt, junior in family studies and human services, hugged Anthony Carter, sophomore in pre-professional secondary education, Wednesday night when she heard the election results.

Boldt and Carter, presidential and vice presidential candidates, respectively, said they felt a pang of sadness after hearing they would not be advance to the general election.

"It's a disappointment for me," Boldt said. "It's a big release of pressure. It seems like a letdown because it's something you care about."

The pair received 722 votes, 16.8 percent of the total number of votes cast, placing them third in the election.

Boldt said getting third place in the election testified to the help she and Carter received during the campaign.

"We are very blessed to have great supporters," Boldt said. "We really appreciate all the people who supported us."

Carter said he and Boldt plan to endorse seniors Matt King and Emily Besler in the general election.

"We know they have the experience," Boldt said. "We walked into this really good friends, and we'll walk out of it really good friends."

Both Boldt and Carter will run for Student Senate positions in the general election next week.

Carter said he is still looking forward to making a difference in student government in some capacity, even if it is not as vice president.

"Take it a day at a time," Carter said. "We'll see where we're really supposed to be. We are not just going to give up because we didn't get the top two spots."

Collett, Mayfield pair takes 5th

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior Ryan Collett and sophomore Emily Mayfield said they didn't stress about the primary election results.

"You win, or you lose," Collett said. "It's a great experience, and you just have to keep going."

The pair placed fifth with 312 votes or 7.3 percent of the total number. They placed behind seniors Matt King and Emily Besler; senior Lucas Maddy and junior Katie Maddy; junior Ashley Boldt and sophomore Anthony Carter; and senior Zach Hauser and sophomore Erica Boatman. Mayfield said she was not surprised with the results.

"It was a really even race between King and Besler and the Maddys," she said. "I didn't really expect anything for us."

Collett and Mayfield's primary campaign platform was a tuition freeze program, which would have all classes pay the same rate for courses. The overall goal of the pair was to increase the satisfaction of students by having more consistency in the teaching.

Neither Collett nor Mayfield has decided which pair they will back in the general election, but they both said they will support someone.

"I'm going to talk to each one of them individually and decide who to back from there," Collett said.

"I will probably give each of the candidates equal support," Mayfield said.

Collett, majoring in kinesiology, will graduate in May and cannot run again for a Student Governing Association office. Mayfield, an elementary education major, plans to run, but not for an office.

"I am planning to run for the College of Education Council," she said.

Wallisch, Hilburn pleased with results

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Instead of having a watch party while waiting for the results of the primary student body presidential election, John Wallisch and Steve Hilburn were hosts to a defeat party that consisted of studying for exams at Hale Library.

"Nothing depresses you like losing an election and failing a test," Hilburn, sophomore in psychology, said.

The candidate pair received 78 votes, or 1.8 percent, in the primary election but still met the key goal of their presidential campaign, Wallisch, junior in psychology, said.

"Our original goal was double digits, and we were still hoping for that," Wallisch said.

The two candidates launched what they called a grassroots campaign and aimed not to take the election too seriously. Throughout the course of the campaign, the pair focused on two main platforms – the crow problem near Ackert Hall and additional funding for SafeRide, Wallisch said.

The pair's campaigning was minimal – the candidates spent about $74. Materials to make 40 T-shirts cost $69, and all the T-shirts were given away for free last Friday at the K-State Student Union, Wallisch said.

"There is one big plus – we don't have to take down signs or erase chalk," Hilburn said.

The candidates also started a Facebook.com group Feb. 4 that consisted of 112 members at election time and was called "John Wallisch and Steve Hilburn should not be president, vice president."

"It was kind of an anti-campaign," Wallisch said. "(The campaign) was a train wreck of epic proportions, and that is what we were hoping for."

Hauser, Boatman take 4th in primary

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Supporters of presidential candidate pair Zach Hauser and Erica Boatman sighed in disappointment Wednesday night at Purple Pig when the election results were announced.

Hauser and Boatman took fourth place in the primary election, with 552 votes or 12.8 percent of votes.

Hauser said hearing the results was somewhat a relief.

"A lot of us had dedicated our lives to the campaign," he said. "We'd been hoping for some kind of closure and recognition of what's been going on in the past month."

Hauser said he had no regrets about the campaign.

"I think there's something to be said and something to be learned in every experience," he said. "I think everything has been happening for a reason, and I feel like I've grown a lot and learned a lot about K-State and what students value."

Hauser said his favorite part of the campaign was talking to student groups about his vision for K-State.

"Erica and I would say our message to students, and we'd see students' heads nod, and we got this great sense of acknowledgment and agreement," Hauser said. "And that was really encouraging to see students responding with a great sense of affirmation. It really made us feel like our message meant something to people."

Hauser said his future plans with Student Governing Association are uncertain, and he is not prepared to endorse another candidate pair.

"I did not file for Student Senate," Hauser said. "Being involved in general at K-State is my goal for next year."

Gigstad, Durand come in 7th in vote

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Chris Gigstad and Nick Durand, the "Doin' It Big" duo, finished in seventh place Wednesday night.

The pair, whose platform was aimed at freeing up Fridays for students to visit with teachers and do homework, listened to the results with friends at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque.

"We are definitely a little disappointed," Gigstad said, "but we kind of had an idea our chances were slim."

He said he wished students had understood the pair's campaign better. Gigstad said most students did not understand the meaning behind eliminating classes on Fridays. He said not having Friday classes would benefit the entire student body.

"I think people saw two fraternity guys and thought that taking classes away on Fridays is a way to increase partying," Durand said. "That wasn't the case."

Gigstad said the two will support Lucas and Katie Maddy in the general election.

"They spent less money, and I think they will be a better fit for the position," he said. "They both seem really on top of things and are stand-up people."

Gigstad said the pair is thinking about running for president and vice president again next year and said they will keep the free Fridays campaign. Durand said if the two run again they will start their campaign earlier and try to inform students of the logic behind the issue. Gigstad said the pair has no plans to run for any Student Governing Association positions.

"Go big or go home is how I look at it," he said.

End comes for Hoffman, Bahadori

By Ashleigh Williams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A look of exhaustion was on the faces of seniors Amanda Hoffman and Amir Bahadori as the election results were announced Wednesday night.

"It seems like we did a lot of hard work in the past week, and it's very tiring," Hoffman said.

Hoffman and Bahadori took sixth in the primary elections with 291 votes or 6.8 percent of the total voters.

The pair said they were disappointed they didn't advance but hope students will continue to pay heed to the issues.

"I hope students will question the two candidates and focus on the issues. Do not just look at signs and vote; question their issues," Hoffman said.

The pair said they plan to support the Maddys' campaign in the upcoming election.

"We think the Maddys have very strong principles and good student interaction," Hoffman said. "We actually had our booth set up next to them all week and had the chance to talk with them. They have very good intentions."

Bahadori said they appreciated the dedication of their campaign workers.

"We want to thank all of our campaign workers because they put out lots of hard work," he said. "All the people that stopped and talked with us at our booth were great, also."

Neither of the two have thought about their roles in the Student Governing Association next year.

"I definitely plan on paying attention to the issues and being involved somehow," Hoffman said. "I just want to encourage the students to question the school and take ownership."

Richardson, Mikols win Salina primary with 76 votes; Mitchem, Penner finish 17 votes behind for 2nd place

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State-Salina had 160 students vote in the primary election Tuesday and Wednesday even though there are only two presidential candidate pairs.

Lauren Richardson and Robin Mikols finished first with 76 votes. Jacob Mitchem and Robert Penner received 59 votes.

"We decided to have a primary after I got another group that wanted to run after the filing deadline," Andrew Wilber, Salina Elections Committee chair, said.

Wilber said the pair had to run as a write-in group.

Richardson said there was confusion about whether there would be a primary election.

"It was such a mess trying to find out whether or not we were having primaries," Richardson said. "Luckily, we'd put up some signs on Tuesday, which was right on time, and I think that saved us."

Richardson said K-State-Salina had not planned to have a primary election because it is hard to get students to vote.

"We have such a small campus, and it's so difficult to get students to vote in the first place," she said.

Richardson said she will not change her campaign for the general election.

"I'm going to stick with the same platform," Richardson said. "It covers all the bases we want to focus on this year."

Mitchem said he did not run much of a campaign for the primaries since only two pairs had registered.

"We didn't have anything up before the primaries," Mitchem said. "Everyone was just really confused (about primaries)."

TO THE POINT

Things we'd rather do than be inside on a nice, warm day

The weather has been unseasonably warm outside the past few days, and that has our minds on things other than staying inside. Here's what we'd rather do:

- Sleep in a hammock.
- Sunbathe.
- Play horseshoes.
- Have a porch party.
- Mow the lawn.
- Start a garden.
- Play frisbee.
- Go for a walk on a trail.
- Go to the Konza Prairie.
- Climb a tree.
- Go to Pillsbury Crossing.
- Drive around Tuttle Creek with the windows down.
- Play miniature golf.
- Go on a bike ride.
- Play tennis.
- Read a book under a tree.

Mercy killing

Assisted suicide should be de-criminalized when situation is right

I could never be a veterinarian in my lifetime. Taking on the duty of putting loved pets out of their misery would be far too much for me to handle. Death is a part of life, though, and we're lucky to have people with enough mercy to take care of this job.

It's easy to say this while seeing the image of a dog unable to eat any longer, but the issue becomes a lot more complex when extending this mercy to human beings. Suddenly, there is a human life on the line and a swarm of opinions on right and wrong come flying from every direction.

We now have machines that will keep us alive when, by every right, we should be dead. Sometimes, accidents occur in which victims rather would have died. In many countries around the world, the families must watch them suffer, unable to end their suffering. All they want is their right to die.

ZACHARY T. ECKELS

Since her son's road accident in 2000, Marie Humbert has been fighting for this right in France. Her son, Vincent Humbert, spent three years deaf, mute and paralyzed, campaigning for his right to end his life.

He wrote a letter to President Jacques Chirac and his book, "I Ask for the Right to Die," was published in France. He wrote both by moving his right thumb in order to indicate which letter of the alphabet he wanted.

In 2003, for right or wrong, Marie added an overdose of barbiturates into Vincent's drip. I don't think anyone could question that she did this in an act of true love and mercy for her son. She wasn't ending his life; she was ending what he called a living death.

The problem for Marie was she wasn't trained in how to end her son's pain -- the overdose only put him into a coma. It took two more days before Dr. Frederic Chaussoy finished the job and removed Vincent from life support.

Their story was compelling enough that many French citizens began to sympathize with the grieving mother and to call for the decriminalization of euthanasia. Earlier this week, in an attempt to avoid the issue, charges of voluntarily poisoning Vincent were dropped for both Marie and Chaussoy.

Unsatisfied with this decision, Marie spoke out to the press, saying that she would continue to fight for this issue, and who could blame her? Even if you believe she was wrong, Marie was performing an act of love for her son. Her son, who had the full mental capacity to make his decision without the physical ability to carry it through.

Even if the French government still believes Marie's act was wrong, at least it was able to see through it to her good intentions. Just letting her off isn't enough, though – it only could lead to more loving family members or friends having to risk the same charges without a regulated system to make the process more humane.

Maybe the French just understood that it would be wrong to send a compassionate person to prison for trying to help a loved one.

Or maybe they figured out the doctor was doing his job to help Vincent the way he wanted to be helped, an act no country should punish.

Sexuality shouldn't be a factor in adoption

Lisa Johnston holds a degree from the University of Kansas in human development and family with an emphasis on child development. She works in child development and has experience helping abused, neglected and developmentally challenged children.

So one would think she would be overly qualified to be a foster parent for the state of Missouri. An administrative judge found Johnston to be "exceptionally" qualified to be a foster parent, according to the American Civil Liberties Union.

Yet he upheld Missouri's denial of her application in March 2005.

Johnston is a lesbian. Therefore, she's unqualified to raise a child, according to the Missouri Department of Social Services.

The ACLU challenged the denial, and a circuit court judge ruled that Social Services had improperly denied Johnston's application.

The Department of Social Services in Missouri argued that a child raised by a same-sex couple might face social disapproval, the Advocate reported.

This position "is unsupported by competent and substantial evidence and is arbitrary and capricious," Jackson County Circuit Judge Sandra C. Midkiff said.

Johnston's partner, Dawn Roginski, is a chaplain at a psychiatric treatment center for children and adolescents with emotional and behavioral disorders. She works with children assigned to the center by juvenile courts, as well as children who have had difficulty with prior foster care placements, the ACLU said in a press release.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

So, I'm not understanding something here. These two women are exceptionally qualified to be foster parents. In a system where nearly 2,000 Missouri children need foster homes, Social Services is going to deny a child the right to a stable home where one parent is a chaplain and the other is a child development specialist?

And they're denying it because the parents in question don't live the way Social Services thinks they should?

In a Clarksfield Township Ohio case, Michael and Sharen Gravelle were accused of keeping 11 foster children in cages. One child resisted forced visitation with the couple after being removed from the home, according to the Toledo Blade.

In Brownsville, Tenn., Tom and Debra Schmitz were put on trial for physically and mentally abusing 18 children in their care. These children were special-needs children with emotional or physical disabilities.

Prosecutors said the couple took in the children to get about $7,000 in monthly government payments, WREG TV in Memphis said.

Yet these couples were perfectly suited to care for foster children, simply on the basis of their heterosexuality. That is, if you go by Missouri Social Services standards.

When looking at prospective foster parents, does Social Services deny people based on their beliefs?

The Ku Klux Klan is active in Missouri. It has signs along the roads stating it is responsible for keeping them clean.

If members apply for a foster care license, are they denied?

Apparently, that's a requirement in Missouri.

Being qualified and loving and teaching tolerance of differences?

Not so much.

USD 383 discusses growth

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board received a Request For Proposal (RFP) at Wednesday night's meeting.

The proposal discusses the redistricting in order to make room for incoming students, as well as the future of Bluemont School.

With the expansion of Fort Riley, the district has been growing by about two students every day, but long-term growth remains unclear.

"There are so many things that we have absolutely no control over that are going to affect that student population," Board Member Dave Colburn said. "If we knew where everyone was going to land, that would obviously affect us severely for the fall of 2007."

This request was presented by the USD 383 Facilities and Growth Committee, which was appointed Sept. 7, 2005, to evaluate existing facilities in terms of their function in meeting district goals, according to the RFP.

District buildings will be evaluated for efficiency in electrical systems, fire and safety issues, plumbing, technology upgrades, ADA improvements and educational space modifications.

These evaluations should be analyzed in terms of projected enrollments, class scheduling and grade configuration, target class sizes and school capacities.

As the future population is unclear, the board was undecided on which issues need to be resolved first. Opening Bluemont School is being considered as a way to accommodate the student growth.

"I don't see how we can talk about redistricting in 2007 without deciding what we're going to do about Bluemont," Colburn said. "This is a much bigger picture kind of thing."

The district should have enough space to accommodate the students enrolling next fall, USD 383 Superintendent Bob Shannon said.

"I suspect we're going to have some hot spots and temporary arrangements to get through 2006 and 2007," Shannon said. "When we're having those, you might also be aware that we might need Bluemont back on the line at some time – not this fall, but next fall."

The board agreed to divide the overview of the request into two phases. The first will deal with the growing elementary school population where the most growth is occurring. The second will deal with secondary schools.

"We all know if we study this long enough, the decision will be obvious, and it would be too late. We're going to reach a point where we're just going to have to use our best judgment and make a decision," Board Member Randy Martin said. "I've become convinced now that to do the things we want to do for our students, we need to expand the space we have in our buildings. I believe now it's number-driven instead of emotions."

The Facilities and Growth Committee will sort the request into the proposed two parts and present it to the board at the March 15 meeting.

Tibetan Buddhist monks work on the beginning of the mandala, a sand artwork, following the project's opening ceremony Wednesday afternoon in the K-State Student Union Courtyard. The project will span three days, concluding at noon on Friday, and will take 20-24 hours of work to complete.

Tibetan monks open Union anniversary celebration

By Adam Monroe
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The celebration of the 50th anniversary of the K-State Student Union began Wednesday with a ritual performance by Buddhist monks from Tibet.

The performance included ritual meditation music, chanting and decorative symbolic dance.

"The performance was for longevity and good fortune towards the Union," Beth Bailey, assistant director of the Union, said.

The monks began with a piece of traditional Tibetan music and ritual chant. They used an instrument known as a dung-chen, a long trumpet; a rom, a pair of cymbals; and a nga-bom, a large double-faced drum, according to Terry Miller and Andrew Shahriari's book, "World Music: a Global Journey."

The dung-chen produced a deep fog horn sound, while the rom and nga-bom held a free rhythm. After a short period, the dung-chen faded out, and the monks began their chant and ritual throat singing. The sounds are produced deep within the monks' throats and have a deep growling sound.

The chant consisted of five verses, each serving a specific spiritual purpose. Tibetan Buddhist monk Thupten Tendhar explained the symbolism behind each verse.

"The first verse was an invocation of the spirits, and the second was used to make offerings to those spirits," Tendhar said.

Such offerings include certain fruits and flowers.

"The third verse was a blessing of peace and harmony for all society, and the fourth verse was for the specific being, White Tara," Tendhar said.

"The fifth verse was a dedication of good karma to all sentient beings," Tendhar said.

After this chant, the music began again, and several monks entered the Union dressed in colorful traditional attire to perform the "Dance of the Black Hat Masters," Tendhar said.

"Traditional Buddhist dance is used to eliminate obstructions and negativities," Geshe Chodak, a Tibetan monk, said. "In one hand, they carry a skull cup, which represents love and compassion, and in the other, a sword, which represents wisdom."

The dance concluded the opening ceremonies, and the monks began working on their sand artwork, known as a mandala.

The monks will work on this piece of art until it is dismantled, on Friday.

This particular mandala represents the White Tara, the monks said.

"Here we are sharing the mandala as an ancient art form, but in the monastery, the mandalas are done upon completion of a retreat or meditation process that may last for weeks or months," Tendhar said.

Tendhar said the artwork will take 20-24 hours of labor to complete.

"I encourage people to come and watch the progression," Bailey said. "That's half the fun."

The monks will be working until 7 tonight in the Union Courtyard and until noon Friday, when the closing ceremonies begin, Bailey said.

"There are hundreds of mandalas, and the monks memorize each one," she said.

The Union has arranged an area for students and onlookers to produce their own sand art using the Tibetan tools.

Tuition proposal delayed

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Special Committee to Study Long-Term Tuition Strategies has delayed its final proposal announcement for two weeks, Student Body President Michael Burns said.

The committee, which was formed in September by the Student Governing Association, was to submit its final proposal Wednesday, Burns said.

Burns said he and Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore will give a presentation to the dean's council March 13. If all goes well, an announcement will be made on March 15, Moore said.

"I think everybody with the administration and with committee members feels we have something very strong that, if supported by everyone, could be even stronger," Burns said.

The committee was formed to examine the current five-year tuition strategy and form a set of guidelines in considering future tuition strategies.

The announcement will release the projected numbers for the next five-year tuition plan, which encompasses fiscal years 2008 through 2012.

K-State's current five-year tuition plan will expire after FY 2007.

The committee is made up of eight Student Senate members and faculty members Tom Herald, president of Faculty Senate; Ruth Dyer, associate provost; Pat Bosco, dean of Student Life; and Bruce Shubert, associate vice president for Administration and Finance.

"We wanted to get a broad representation from students, faculty and administration," Moore said. "In order to get that broad representation, we decided it would be in the best interest for students to create a special committee."

K-State beats Nebraska 66-64; Cats get 2nd road victory thanks to Wright block

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LINCOLN, Neb. – K-State has made a habit of playing close games this season. The problem is, it has not won many of them.

The win was only the second on the road for the Wildcats (15-11, 6-9 Big 12 Conference) this season. Their other victory came Jan. 14, when the Wildcats defeated Kansas 59-55.

"We've been through a lot of these kind of games," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "I thought we played good basketball. There were moments and enough stretches out there where we stayed under control and played good defense and poised offensively.

"I thought we played good team basketball offensively for most of the night."

The Cornhuskers (17-11, 7-8) had a chance to win the game in the final seconds, but junior Akeem Wright blocked Jamel White's three-point attempt at the buzzer.

"I had a chance to steal it," Wright said. "I didn't want to take a chance and foul him, and I knew it would be tough for him to get a shot over me with my length, so I just put my arm up, and I blocked it."

Leading 65-64 with 7 seconds remaining in the game, sophomore David Hoskins inbounded the ball to junior Cartier Martin, but Martin slipped and the pass got away. Nebraska's White picked up the loose ball and hit a 3-pointer to bring the Cornhuskers within a point.

K-State 66 Nebraska 64

	K-State	Neb.
Field goals	25-55	20-53
3-point	2-8	6-20
Free throws	14-23	18-24
Rebounds	32	38
Assists	16	8
Turnovers	12	15

"I wasn't nervous at all," Martin said. "They hit a shot, but there was only, like, two seconds left, so it would have taken a long shot for them to try to win that one. We felt like we pretty much had the game in hand."

K-State went back to Martin on the next play, and he was immediately fouled.

Martin missed the first free throw but hit the next to give K-State a two-point lead.

The two teams went back and forth for the first 12 minutes of the game, but the Wildcats finished the first half, shooting 9-of-11 from the field – playing without leading scorer Martin who had picked up his second foul – to extend their lead to 33-27.

K-State pushed its lead to as many as 10 points with 16 minutes in the game, but the Cornhuskers took advantage of the Wildcats' foul trouble down the stretch and outscored K-State 10-3 to pull within a point with 12 minutes to play.

The Wildcats also had to play without starting senior center Dramane Diarra for the final 6:20 and back-up junior center Tyler Hughes who fouled with 12 minutes remaining in the game.

"This is a big win," Wright said. "It stops our two-game losing streak, it's another road win, which we needed, and it gives us a little confidence going into the KU game."

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Junior Akeem Wright's efforts weren't enough to get K-State a win against Texas on Feb. 22. On Wednesday night, however, his 11 points on 5-of-6 shooting contributed to the 66-64 win in Lincoln, Neb.

Post player foul trouble nearly costs Wildcats game

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LINCOLN, Neb. – K-State had a problem during its game against Nebraska on Wednesday night.

This time, the trouble was not the final score.

The Wildcats defeated Nebraska 66-64 but ended the game with two players sitting on the bench because of foul trouble.

Hughes tried to fake sitting down, but the Cornhusker fans made sure he heard their version of "sit down."

Coach Jim Wooldridge said having both Diarra and Hughes foul out forced K-State to change its offensive and defensive strategies, but he was proud of how his team played down the stretch without its two big men.

"We put them on the line a lot, and it eventually put us in a different rotation," Wooldridge said. "I'm just happy it did not cost us the game in the end, and I am pleased with how the guys handled the different lineup."

The foul trouble for the first two big men meant more playing time for another backup, freshman Deilvez Yearby. Yearby, a Detroit native, set numerous career highs against Nebraska with his 14 minutes, six points, four successful free throws and two steals. He also tied career highs with one assist and three rebounds.

Yearby said he does not consider himself a low post but is willing to play any position asked of him by Wooldridge to help the team get a win, he said.

"I just tried to do the best I could with the minutes that Coach gave me, and we ended up holding on for the win," Yearby said.

Maric didn't start because it was Nebraska's senior night, but he finished the game with his 10th double-double of the season and his second against K-State, recording 16 points and 12 rebounds.

Maric went to the free-throw line seven times and made 10-of-14 attempts.

The last time Maric and Nebraska faced the Wildcats was in Bramlage on Jan. 11 when he finished with 15 points and a career-high 17 rebounds, leading the Cornhuskers to a 57-42 victory.

Junior Mario Taybron said his team had a hard time figuring Maric out on Wednesday and, as a result, eventually was forced into a smaller lineup because of the foul trouble.

"He could do whatever he wanted down there," Taybron said. "He put us in foul trouble, so we had to make some adjustments to try and limit his touches.

"We used our quickness to try and get around him and held him off long enough to come away with the win."

Baseball team sweeps South Dakota State with 5-3 victory

K-State starter Ben Hornbeck makes his delivery to the plate against South Dakota State. K-State swept the two-game series against the Jackrabbits.

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Freshman Ben Hornbeck grabbed his first win Wednesday afternoon against South Dakota State, throwing nine strikeouts and holding the Jackrabbits to one hit in the first five innings of the game.

The Wildcats (5-1) swept their series against South Dakota State (0-2) with a 5-3 win at Tointon Family Stadium.

Hornbeck said he was a little nervous in the first inning because the offense was kind of sluggish, but he knew players would gain momentum. He was happy with his first start at K-State, the pitcher said.

"It felt good to get the first win," Hornbeck said.

After a slow start, the Wildcats' offense kicked into gear when junior Jared Goedert scored the first run of the game off a hit from senior Joe Roundy in the fourth inning.

The Wildcats sent a total of eight batters to the plate in the fourth inning, which ended with K-State leading 3-0 off runs from Roundy and freshman Byron Wiley.

The Jackrabbits scored their first run in the seventh inning, to which the Wildcats responded with another two runs, when sophomore Matt Marasco scored off a single from freshman pinch hitter Drew Biery, and later when Goedert scored off a wild pitch.

Freshman pitcher Justin Murray, who relieved Hornbeck in the sixth, ran into some trouble after South Dakota junior Cal Lewis hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning with a full count and two outs.

Murray ended with four hits and four strikeouts before being relieved by senior Bryan Peterson, who earned his first save of the season with four strikeouts, holding the Jackrabbits to one hit in the ninth inning.

The win extends the Wildcats to a four-game winning streak, but Coach Brad Hill said he isn't paying much attention to that.

"Are you kidding me?" Hill said. "I

MLB | Many outraged about O'Neil exclusion

O'Neil

Angry calls and furious e-mails have poured into the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum in Kansas City from greats of the game and ordinary fans alike, all with the same question: Can't anything be done about the exclusion of Buck O'Neil from the National Baseball Hall of Fame?

The answer is no, probably not.

Seventeen people from the Negro Leagues and pre-Negro League era were voted into the hall Monday by secret ballot of a special 12-person committee, who were working off a list of 39 candidates.

The 17 voted in are all deceased. Each received at least nine votes. But O'Neil, the ambassador of the game, fell short.

Eli Young Band performs at Longhorns Saloon

By Kelsey Childress
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At Longhorns Saloon in Aggieville on Wednesday night, the Eli Young Band played country-, folk- and rock-style songs to a full audience.

The band, in its first Manhattan appearance, was the opening act for Randy Rogers.

"We have had Randy Rogers before – this is his third time," Patrick Shannon, owner of Longhorns, said. "But we've never had The Eli Young Band play here before."

Since its formation in 2000, the Eli Young Band, which consists of Mike Eli, James Young, Jon Jones and Chris Thompson, has released two albums and is touring the Midwest.

After Manhattan, they take their tour to cities in Missouri and Oklahoma, Ely Gonzales, the band's tour manager, said.

"Usually, we tour (continually), but recently, with the success of the new album and with the new single coming out on Country Music Television this Saturday, we'll be touring out of Texas," Gonzales said. "We will be touring until we go into the studio to record our next album."

He said the band hopes to find more publicity and success as its songs begin to reach a broader audience through radio and television.

Manhattan is the first stop of its three-leg tour with Rogers. Afterward, the band plans to continue to tour the United States.

Longhorns books about 30 shows a year, Shannon said. The ticket prices range from about and shows mostly feature $5 to $15, alternative bands and country bands from Texas, the home state for Eli Young Band.

The band has played in many other venues besides Longhorns, Gonzales said.

"We've played at the Toyota Center in Houston where the Houston Rockets play," Gonzales said. "It's a big venue, seating about 18,000 people. We like the bigger venues. We get to see more of the fans that actually come out to listen to us."

The crowd enjoyed the band and the style of alternative rock country it played.

"This is my first time at Longhorns," Wade Heim, senior in civil engineering, said. "I had heard of the Eli Young Band before but had never seen them play."

Other students come to watch concerts or listen to music more regularly at Longhorns.

"I come here, not frequently, but I like the country atmosphere," Kevin Vanderbilt, junior in kinesiology, said.

Anne, played by Cassie Freyermuth, senior in applied music, is consoled by Hennk, Austin Short, junior in applied music, after she is told her husband might be cheating on her during a scene of "A Little Night Music" that was performed during a dress rehearsal Wednesday evening in Nichols Theater.

"The most enduring thing is that this play is just a play about love," said Ginny Pape, graduate student in speech and stage director. "Everybody deals with love. It shows many variations of love."

Pape said she has directed several plays at K-State, including "The Vagina Monologues," "Two Rooms" and Lunch Bag Theatre plays.

The musical's vivid characters are involved in a web of love and desire. The plot revolves around Fredrik Egerman and Desiree Armfeldt, two people who had a romance before the play began. Henrick is the love child who came from Egerman and Armfeldt's fling.

Actors will perform songs like "The Miller's Son," "A Glamourous" and "Send in the Clowns."

"A Little Night Music"

When: 8 p.m. today through Saturday and March 8-11

Where: Nichols Theater

How much: $9.50 for students, $11.50 for seniors and $13.50 for the public

"My character, Desiree, finds herself in the middle of two men," Anthony said.

This play is all about mismatched couples discovering who they are meant to be with, she said.

"This is the first student-directed opera," said Marci Maullar, associate professor of speech communication, theater and dance.

Since this musical is directed by Pape and consists mostly of a student cast, all the cast members grew close, Austin Short, junior in applied music, said.

Tickets are available from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday at the McCain box office.

Stapp says sex tape was meant to sabotage

"Obviously someone wants to hurt me and doesn't want me to be successful in my solo career," Stapp told AP Radio in a recent interview.

Stapp claims the tape, which was made in 1999, was stolen from him. He and Kid Rock have won a temporary court order preventing World Wide Red Light District from distributing the video or promoting any part of it.

Red Light, which sold the infamous Paris Hilton sex tape in 2004, frame displayed a 40-second preview clip of the video on its Web site. The company has acknowledged that the tape came from a third party, but has denied that it was stolen.

Greek membership remains up despite nationwide decline

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Membership in K-State sororities and fraternities remained stable this year despite reports of a decline in the greek population at many universities across the nation.

An article published in Oregon State University's newspaper, the Daily Barometer, reported greek membership at the university had been steadily declining since 1991.

Students affiliated with a sorority or fraternity made up roughly 20 percent of Oregon State's student body in 1975, but compose less than 10 percent today.

While universities in New York, Washington and Pennsylvania reported similar trends, K-State has avoided this nationwide drop in membership.

Lisa Fant, assistant director of Greek Affairs, said K-State fraternities' and sororities' reputations are responsible for the greek community's stable membership.

"It all goes back to a long tradition of excellence here in the K-State community and the Manhattan community," she said. "People outside of K-State see greek organizations as a great way to get involved and as an opportunity to work with other campus organizations."

The university's greek community consists of 29 fraternities and 16 sororities, with a total membership of more than 3,000 students.

Mandy Stark, senior in agricultural communications and journalism, is a member of Alpha Chi Omega and a representative on Panhellenic Council.

She said a welcoming environment has made the K-State greek community resistant to losses in recruitment and retention.

"We aren't exclusive - if people want to be greek at K-State, they can," she said. "I feel that the quality of membership that our chapters provide keeps our community strong and helps us to avoid drops in membership."

Stark said greek membership actually will increase because of a recent vote to raise the number of women per sorority from 115 to 140. Any chapter whose membership is below 140 can continuously open recruit women to achieve that number.

She said five houses currently have fewer than 140 members and may be adding anywhere from a few members to as many as 30.

"If you are an active and passionate chapter, I don't think you'll have any problems in either recruitment or retention," Stark said. "Luckily, our chapters fit the bill."

Negative stereotypes and portrayals of fraternities and sororities in the media might be contributing to other universities' declining numbers, said Joe Aber, junior in social work and member of Phi Gamma Delta.

"The media and others misunderstand the greek community's purpose and portray greeks in the stereotypical frat fashion," he said. "From drunkenness to date rape to being conceited, we are seen as such."

Aber said he joined his fraternity to find lifelong brotherhood and share experiences hard to find anywhere else, goals he said some greek houses needed to rediscover.

"I feel that a majority of greek communities have lost close contact not only with the community around them, but within the houses themselves," he said.

In order to avoid a decline in membership, Aber said K-State greeks must be more active in the recruiting process.

"We must communicate more effectively as a greek community to welcome and serve the Manhattan community around us and to encourage each other with new ways to attract and retain members," he said.

Professor receives national science grant for chemical analysis tools

By Yiyi Chen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An assistant professor in the Department of Chemistry received an award because of his vision on the future technology trend.

The National Science Foundation gave $530,000 to Christopher Culbertson to develop chemical analysis tools on lab-on-a-chip devices.

The new devices, called microfluidics, will make mobile chemical analysis possible and able to replace the chemistry lab analysis.

When available, the new hand-held devices will create the basis for miniaturized analysis for compounds like proteins and peptides in small sample volumes. "Many proteins that are of interest, in terms of disease, are expressed in very low levels normally," Culbertson said. "We have proposed an analytical method for detecting those proteins at low levels without tagging them first."

Once the new nano-technology becomes available, analysts can take them to the scenes of interest.

"Kansas is the largest wheat producer in the nation," he said. "The new lab-on-a-chip device can determine the wheat quality even along the assembly line."

Culbertson also will invite high school science teachers from Kansas to conduct research in his lab, as per stipulation of the five-year Faculty Early Career Development Award.

"We think the experience in the lab will bolster their enthusiasm for experimental research, and that enthusiasm will carry over into their classes," Culbertson said. "In the long run, we hope the teachers will influence more students towards careers in chemistry."

Greg Roman, graduate student in chemistry, is working with Culbertson on the devices. He said they already have made a lot of progress since the award took effect in February.

"We have had five publications in the research area," Roman said.

Eric Maatta, the chemistry department head, said the department has been won six NSF awards since the 1990s.

"It shows chemistry faculties are among the elite groups nationwide," Maatta said. "It speaks well to the quality of our faculty both as research scientists and as educators for KSU students."

Research forum displays projects

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 11th annual graduate research forum will take place Friday on the second floor of the K-State Student Union.

The forum will include four sessions for graduate research and one session for undergraduate research. The research projects will be presented through oral presentations or posters.

The purpose of the forum is to promote graduate research, said Bala Thiagarajan, president of the Graduate Student Council and chair of the Research Forum Committee.

"The forum helps students learn about the different types of research," said Thiagarajan, who also is a graduate student in biology. "It provides ideas about research and collaboration with other people."

Jeet Sengupta, graduate student in mechanical engineering, has participated in the K-State research forum before and said he enjoyed the experience.

"This is a good forum for presenting because you are presenting amongst your peers," Sengupta said. "The prize money is always a bonus, too."

Sengupta will give an oral presentation titled "CFD Analysis of an Exhaust Silencer Stack." Sengupta said he hopes students will attend the forum.

"I definitely want people to stop by and listen to what I'm saying," Sengupta said. "It's a big learning experience to see the number of times [research] techniques used by others can be used by yourself."

The undergraduate session will be at 9:30 a.m. and the graduate sessions start at 1 p.m. Each student participating in the event has conducted a research project on a different subject.

The subjects are broken up into different sessions, including agricultural sciences, biological sciences, engineering, math and physical sciences, social sciences and humanities. Students have conducted research on topics ranging from racial issues in the Harry Potter books to trauma in military relationships.

Elizabeth Jaggard, senior in physics, will present her research project on magnetic light scattering. She has been working on her project for four years.

"Basically, this is a brand-new phenomena we have discovered," Jaggard said.

This is the first time Jaggard has participated in a research forum.

"I want to go to graduate school, and you have to go to so many conferences [in graduate school]," Jaggard said. "So this is a great warm-up for that and an opportunity to present my project in a professional manner."

Jean Kiekel, graduate student in curriculum and instruction, will present a poster of her research on online teaching. Kiekel said she hopes to inform people of the differences between teaching online and teaching face-to-face.

"It's really not as easy as it sounds," Kiekel said. "Teaching online is new and upcoming, and people who are getting into it need to know that it's just not the same as teaching face-to-face."

Three graduate faculty members will evaluate each graduate session. Undergraduates will be evaluated by post-doctoral fellows, Thiagarajan said.

Students giving oral presentations will have 11 minutes to present. Students presenting posters will be available to answer questions from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

"Judges basically look at content and how students present and explain research," Thiagarajan said.

About 69 students will participate in the event, Thiagarajan said.

The awards ceremony will be at 4 p.m. in the Union Big 12 Room. Each session will receive three awards in the form of gift cards to the Union. First place receives $150, second place receives $100 and third place receives $50.

Study surveys K-State graduates' job path

By Kelsey Childress
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A recent study found the majority of K-State graduates in undergraduate programs end up finding employment or continuing their education within a year of their graduation date.

Students may have a hard time deciding where to go after graduation because the job market can be hard to get into and graduate school usually is more expensive than earning an undergraduate degree.

"I was looking for a very specific type of position, so it definitely took some effort to find a job," said April Chancellor, 2005 graduate in park management and conservation. "It took me about two months to land the position I was looking for. However, I think the amount of time it took to find the job I was looking for was reasonable."

Chancellor moved to Chicago and worked at a coffee shop while searching for her ideal job. She found a job at the Museum of Science and Industry.

"I think my degree played a role in my being hired at the Museum of Science and Industry," Chancellor said.

For students struggling with the job search, Career and Employment Services offers many resources.

"We offer a number of services and programs to help students develop skills for the job search including workshops (behavioral interviewing, dining etiquette, etc.), mock interviews and individual advising," Kerri Day Keller, director of CES, said.

Some students choose graduate school because they think an undergraduate degree will not get them the job they want.

"It was very hard going through the application process," said Alicia Edison, 2005 graduate in psychology and American ethnic studies and current graduate student in psychology at the University of Texas. "It was an evil necessity because getting a good-paying job with just a bachelor's in psychology is not very likely."

"Time management was something I learned in my last two years in the College of Business," Kelly Buckner, 2005 graduate in marketing, said.

BASEBALL | Hill: Baseball team needs to put forth more effort

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

said. "I mean, we're working on that, we'll talk about it, but right now we're learning, and we got a lot of learning to do."

Hill said he was happy for the win, but he wasn't happy with the Wildcats' effort.

"I just think we need to learn from it," he said. "I don't think we had the intensity we needed. I just told them, 'You've got to be better than that.'

"We can't go through three innings with non-competitive at-bats and no pressure at all on the other team.'"

Hill said the team didn't play how he would have wanted it to, but he liked the effort he saw from the freshmen pitchers.

"I thought Ben battled real well, and Justin did a pretty good job – we pitched them pretty good today."

The Wildcats will be back in action at 3 p.m. Friday at Tointon Family Stadium for the opener of a four-game series against Eastern Illinois.

SURPLUS | K-State Challenge Course receives $200,000 in funding proposals then gave presentations to the committee during the week of Feb. 20, and the final proposals were chosen.

Groene said the committee looked at the potential overall effect the projects would have on the K-State student body.

"We had to look at feasibility and which ones would be able to sustain the longest after a one-time allocation," he said. "We wish we'd had more money to allocate to more groups, but we were only allocated $1.5 million."

Student Fee Bond Surplus Committee recommendations for $1.5 million:

Audio and visual enhancements for McCain Auditorium	$23,000
K-State Student Union fire suppression system	$1,000,000
SafeRide (8- and 12-passenger vans)	$142,464
K-State Challenge Course	$200,000
Hale Library (Full-text journal articles electronically and a Google search appliance)	$72,000
International Student Center (renovations)	$50,000
Total:	$1,487,464

Source: Student Body Vice President Grant Groene

One project that will receive funding is the K-State Challenge Course, which was proposed by Emily Lehning, assistant dean of student life. It will provide different elements that encourage teamwork through a challenge obstacle course, Groene said.

"A lot of businesses use them as a team-building activity," he said.

Groene said the committee granted the challenge course proposal $85,000 in addition to its initial requested amount of $115,000.

"It's to allow for students to use it for free and to allow for the alleviation of student fees' costs," he said.

Groene said more than $12,000 remains left over in the reserve account.

"There's a chance we could put it back toward one of the proposals," he said. "It's left over because there really wasn't any where it could go."

Student Fee Bond Surplus Committee member Matt Wagner said narrowing the projects down to six went well.

"All of the projects made good presentations," Wagner said. "Some just didn't qualify since their focus wasn't directly toward students."

Wagner said he thinks the proposals will pass through Senate.

"The committee was focused and put a lot of time into it," he said. "I think that the committee had a pretty strong hold on what was needed to represent the general student body."

$1,400 of which she should wire to the company.

As the shipping date approached, however, Peterson said she felt uneasy.

"I would get two to three e-mails a day, and the amount of the money orders kept going up," she said. "And the family never referred to a gerbil, they always just said 'pet.' They actually told me they had a spacious yard for it to run around in."

Peterson's uneasiness only grew when the money orders arrived in the mail. An envelope postmarked in the Republic of Benin, Africa, arrived with four U.S. Postal money orders valued at $750 each.

"My boyfriend and I just stared at them in awe," she said. "I was thinking, 'There's $3,000 on my coffee table. What do I do?'"

With the arrival of the money orders came an onslaught of phone calls from the African shipping company. Peterson said she first received two or three calls a day, but received 11 calls in one day before the week was over.

Frustrated and scared, Peterson said she told a friend she was going to cash the money orders and end the ordeal. Her friend, however, told her to contact university student lawyer Sarah Barr.

"It's scary how close I was to actually cashing them," she said. "I just wanted the whole thing to be over."

After consulting Barr and her parents, Peterson decided the orders were fake. She never attempted to cash them and never heard from the buyer in Canada or the African shipping company again.

While Peterson did not lose any money to the scam artists, many Americans have not been so lucky. According to statistics released by the National Consumer League, victims of fraudulent money order scams lose an average of $5,000. According to the New York Times, more than 160 arrests involving fraudulent money orders were made in the United States in 2005 alone.

Josh Ballard, network security specialist for the K-State Office of Telecommunications, said university spam filters help protect students from this type of e-mail but cannot catch all of this material.

He said that while this type of scam has been common for the past five years, criminals are coming up with better stories.

"The stories just seem more legitimate," Ballard said. "People are doing a better job covering their tracks and not making their stories seem so out there."

Ballard said students should contact the iTac Help Desk or contact network security specialists at www.abuse.ksu.edu if they encounter questionable e-mails.

Barr said she advises students to use common sense when making any transaction on the Internet.

"There is no legitimate reason for someone who is giving you money to ask you to wire money back," she said.

Barr said students should never respond to e-mails that ask for personal information and should know exactly who they're dealing with before providing payment information.

Peterson said she hopes her close call with Internet scammers will alert other students to the dangers of such fraud.

"I just don't want any college student to have this happen to them and actually have to pay all of that money," she said.

Anniversary of peace

Photos by Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

During the Peace Corps 45th Anniversary celebration, Adam Springer, agriculture and natural resource extension assistant, talks with his brother Job Springer, graduate student in agricultural economics, over some refreshments. Adam was a Peace Corps volunteer in Lesotho from 2003 to 2005 and wore a traditional hat, made by a friend as a present.

Peace Corps celebration includes both past, present organization volunteers

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two years away from home might seem like a lifetime to some, but for these volunteers, it's the time of their lives.

The Peace Corps celebrated the organization's 45th anniversary Thursday in the International Student Center. With every seat in the room filled, past and present volunteers offered history and memories of their time spent serving others.

"The purpose of today's gathering is to acknowledge K-State and Manhattan residents who have served in the Peace Corps," said Stephanie Springer, coordinator for international programs and a returned Peace Corps volunteer.

"A little known fact about the Peace Corps is that is was an idea of John F. Kennedy's, and he signed an executive order establishing it on March 1, 1961," she said.

The original obligatory volunteer time was 10 years, but was thought to be too long to serve, and was shortened to two, as it remains today.

Springer began the discussion with an overview of her own time served in southern Africa, from June 2003 to August 2005, then explained a few of the goals of the organization.

"What it really comes down to is world peace and friendship," Springer said.

There are about 8,000 individuals serving in more than 77 countries, with 28 of them being K-State graduates or graduate alumni. Four hundred eighty-nine K-State alumni have served in the Peace Corps since it began, and 50 of them have returned to the Manhattan area and live there today.

Springer also shared many reasons that the average person would choose to join the Peace Corps. These included traveling to new parts of the world, adventures, immersion in a new culture and learning a new language.

"It is also great for lost souls searching for a career path," Springer said. "You also may join for the prospect of meeting your soulmate, or for the pure joy of serving."

To be eligible, a person must be 18 years of age, a U.S citizen, and in good health. One also should have previous or current volunteer experience, and many programs require a bachelor of arts or bachelor of science degree. It is also necessary to be

2 arrested for theft, meth lab

Several hundred dollars worth of K-State electronic equipment was recovered from a Manhattan apartment Wednesday, Capt. Troy Lane of the K-State Police Department said.

"We've had various pieces of electronic equipment stolen," Lane said.

Lane declined to list the types of electronic equipment recovered, but said most of the missing equipment was from telecommunications.

The equipment was recovered when a search warrant was executed at 1620 Fairchild Ave., Apt. 3.

The search warrant stemmed from an investigation into the importation, manufacture and distribution of meth-amphetamine in Riley County and other surrounding counties, a Riley County Police Department press release said.

Jeffrey Craig Roberts was charged with four counts of theft relating to the disappearance of a USB mini storage disk, a floppy disk, and a propane tank, stolen from K-State Telecommunications, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said.

Additional felony charges of possession of methamphetamine, possession of amphetamine and possession of marijuana resulted from a search of the residence.

A felony and misdemeanor charge of possession of drug paraphernalia also resulted from that search warrant.

Roberts' bond was set at $12,000.

Another resident of the apartment, Maria M. Gauvin, was arrested and charged with two felony counts of possession of meth-amphetamine and possession of amphetamine.

A misdemeanor charge of possession of marijuana and felony and misdemeanor charges of possession of drug paraphernalia were also filed.

Bond for Gauvin was set at $10,000.

Obama to speak tonight in Topeka

By Owen Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

United States Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., will be the keynote speaker at the Kansas Democratic Party's annual Washington Days banquet at 7:30 tonight at the Ramada Inn Downtown, 420 E. Sixth St. in Topeka.

Obama
SEN., D-ILL.

Obama is a first-term senator who was the keynote speaker at the 2004 Democratic National Convention, while he was still an Illinois state senator. In his speech, Obama described himself as a "skinny kid with a funny name" and is considered by some to be a potentially significant factor in the 2008 presidential election.

"Barack Obama is a rising star in the democratic party," said Steve Smethers, associate professor of journalism and mass communications and vice president of the Riley County Democrats. "He will be very, very instrumental in a year when democrats are trying to get organized, nationally and in Kansas where we're trying to re-elect Gov.

Campaign expense reports due today

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Campaign expense and contribution reports are due by 4 p.m. today in the Office of Student Activities and Services for general election candidates.

Elections Commissioner Tanner Banion said those candidates who fail to submit an expense report will be disqualified from elections.

"Disqualified candidates cannot receive write-in votes for the position they were disqualified from," Banion said.

Elections '06

Voting for SGA general elections begins 8 a.m. March 7 and ends 6 p.m. March 8. Vote at sgaelections.k-state.edu.

Campaign spending receipts must be itemized and attached to a summary page, Banion said. Candidates must submit a contribution report and final expense report, he said.

All campaign materials must be purchased before the expense report deadline, according to the Elections Regulations Code.

Candidates for Union Governing Board and the Board of Student Publications cannot contribute more than $125 for their campaigns.

Candidates for Student Senate and College Council cannot contribute more than $50 for their campaigns.

Each candidate for Union Governing Board, the Board of Student Publications, Student Senate, or College Council positions cannot accept more than $5 from a student, according to the Elections Regulations Code.

Banion said candidates can exceed the limit by five percent, but there are minor penalties. The penalties are determined on an individual basis.

Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator of OSAS, said expense reports are simple to fill out.

"They're not difficult, especially now since general election candidates are spending less money than presidential candidates," Harlan said. "It makes it even simpler."

Oklahoma fires

OKLAHOMA CITY — Authorities took one man into custody on suspicion of arson and were searching for another after a wildfire in southwestern Oklahoma destroyed at least 30 homes and forced the evacuation of two schools, a nursing home and area businesses. The fire was one of several fueled by gusty winds and high temperatures, and firefighters remained at the scene for a second day Thursday.

Bush knew of Katrina

WASHINGTON, D.C. — On the eve of Hurricane Katrina's fateful landfall, President Bush was warned of the coming destruction — breached or overrun levees and deaths at the New Orleans Superdome — were delivered in dramatic terms to all involved. All of it was captured on videotape. The Associated Press obtained the confidential government video and made it public Wednesday.

U.S. diplomat killed

KARACHI, Pakistan — A suicide attacker rammed a car packed with explosives into a vehicle carrying an American diplomat in Pakistan's largest city, killing the diplomat and three other people before President Bush's visit to Pakistan. Fifty-two people were wounded. The blast near the U.S. Consulate and the Marriott Hotel propelled cars into the air and flung charred wreckage as far as 200 yards.

Prince addresses Student Senate on leadership

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For one hour during Student Senate's meeting Thursday night, proposed legislation and final action items were set aside for one man.

K-State Football Coach Ron Prince spoke to senate members in the Big 12 Room of the K-State Student Union on the football team's role in the university and leadership roles.

Prince compared the role of a football team and athletic department to that of a house's front porch.

"People drive by your house and they look and they go 'oh, what a nice house' and they keep on driving," he said. "So that snapshot and that moment for many times and for many people will be our football program."

Prince said there will be people who are unaware of the accomplishments of Student Governing Association, academics and research. These people will base their assumptions of K-State off of the football program, he said.

"All they're going to know is that Powercat logo behind a talking head on ESPN or on FOX, and it needs to be a positive experience," Prince said.

Prince was introduced as K-State's 33rd head football coach Dec. 5. He was hired after the retirement of former coach Bill Snyder.

Prince, who was born in Omaha, Neb., said he considers Junction City and K-State his home.

Prince was adopted by Ernest and Georgeanne Prince of Junction City when he was less than a year old. He attended Dodge City Community College and transferred to Appalachian State in Boone, N.C., in 1990.

Prince explained the difference between an ambassador and a representative and the responsibilities of each role.

"An ambassador understands the problems that a person is going to bring to the table and is going to see around corners and is going to have an understanding of what their position is from the beginning," he said.

Prince said a representative speaks for a smaller group of people, while ambassadors see the big picture.

"It's our goal to be recognized as the best football organization — not the best football team — but the best football organization in college."

Ron Prince
FOOTBALL COACH

"I want our players and our program to be ambassadors, not just to Kansas State but to the game of football," he said.

Prince said that while coaching football is his role, his passion is in young people and trying to develop a generation of thinkers.

"The collective mentality on how to play the game of football carries over and really that's what all universities and institutions and bodies (like SGA)... that's what you're hoping to create."

Prince said he is more concerned about how the football program at K-State is perceived in 50 years than it is in five years.

"It's our goal to be recognized as the best football organization – not the best football team – but the best football organization in college," he said.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN
Coach Ron Prince speaks Thursday evening during a Student Governing Association meeting. Prince answered questions after he addressed the students.

Student Body President Michael Burns said he met Prince about a month ago and invited him to visit during a Student Senate meeting. Burns said he thinks Prince has an ability to make people proud of what they do.

"He's very much a team player," Burns said. "A lot of us look up to him, and when we can hear from a person we really respect right now, it gets us all excited."

Senate votes to reconsider combining of committees' bill

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate voted 32-17-1 to reconsider a bill that would combine two of its standing committees at its meeting Thursday night.

The bylaws amendments concerning the combination of duties and responsibilities of the Student Affairs and Social Services Standing Committee and the Academic Affairs and University Relations Standing Committee was referred back to Senate Operations Committee for further discussion.

According to the bill, the two committees would be combined as one and would handle matters of student life, academics and relations between K-State and Student Governing Association.

The bill outlines seven responsibilities of the proposed University Relations Committee.

The constitutional amendment that would make the Student Senate Representative to Faculty Senate the chair of the new Student Academic Affairs Standing Committee passed with a vote of 49-0-1.

Senate had positive and negative debate on the two bills for about one hour before voting.

The combining of the two committees is something Student Senate has been trying to get a focus on for six years, Bill Muir, Student Senate faculty representative, said.

"There has historically been a problem searching for a solution," Muir said during debate. "My suggestion is to re-examine the bill, and if it is a good progressive bill, vote for it."

Academic Affairs and University Relations Chair Nacole Boan said she supported the committee consolidation.

"Under this new committee, we are giving direction and more responsibilities so that time is not wasted in committee meetings," Boan said. "I am willing to sacrifice the rockiness in the first year to create a committee that is overcoming those bumps along the road."

Student Affairs and Social Services Chair Jim Mosimann said there is something wrong with both committees that can be fixed in combining the two.

"It's something different, and I think it's worth a try," said Mosimann, junior in political science. "Something needs to be fixed, and I think this a good step in the right direction."

Combining the two committees into one would also give it more political clout, Mosimann said.

Faculty Senate Representative Alex Lovely supported the combination of the two committees at the beginning of the meeting but said later in the meeting that he has struggled with the issue the last several weeks.

"It has been a struggle of mine seeing how the different committees work and the interaction between the chairs (of the committees)," Lovely said. "Whatever (Student Senate) does, stand up to the decision, and make sure that the committees do their jobs and make accomplishments."

TO THE POINT

Snyder deserves to have highway bear his name

With all of the accolades former football coach Bill Snyder has received at K-State since his retirement in November, it is fitting that he receive widespread recognition on the state level, as well.

A bill is on its way to the Kansas Senate that would rename the stretch of Kansas Highway 177 from Interstate 70 to U.S. Highway 24 and Highway 24 from Manhattan to the Kansas Highway 13 junction "Coach Bill Snyder Highway." The bill will reach the Senate on Tuesday.

Snyder's contributions to this university have been numerous and far-reaching. Not only did he renovate K-State's football program within his 17-year career, but he by doing so, he brought in revenue to K-State and, more importantly, energized the community and made them excited about the school's football program again. Snyder was not merely a coach — he breathed life into multiple facets of the university.

Dissenters of the bill argue that highways should only be named after deceased persons. However, Snyder, and others like him, deserve to know the appreciation and admiration that members of the K-State and Manhattan communities feel for him. Renaming a stretch of highway for him is one of the many ways Snyder's biggest fans can honor him in his retirement.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Television nation

Programing should not be a reality replacement

ALEX PEAK

Television has become more than just a source of entertainment for many people. It seems to have an answer or advice for everything.

It can tell audiences everything from what to wear to how to lose weight or raise children.

Instead of just considering television as something to watch for a few hours a day, the average college student, living away from home, watches 24.3 hours a week, according to Nielsen Media Research. That's more than a part-time job. That's 24.3 hours people aren't reading, exercising, working or socializing with others.

Instead of just watching a show here and there to relax or waste time, some people actually plan their lives around TV-show schedules.

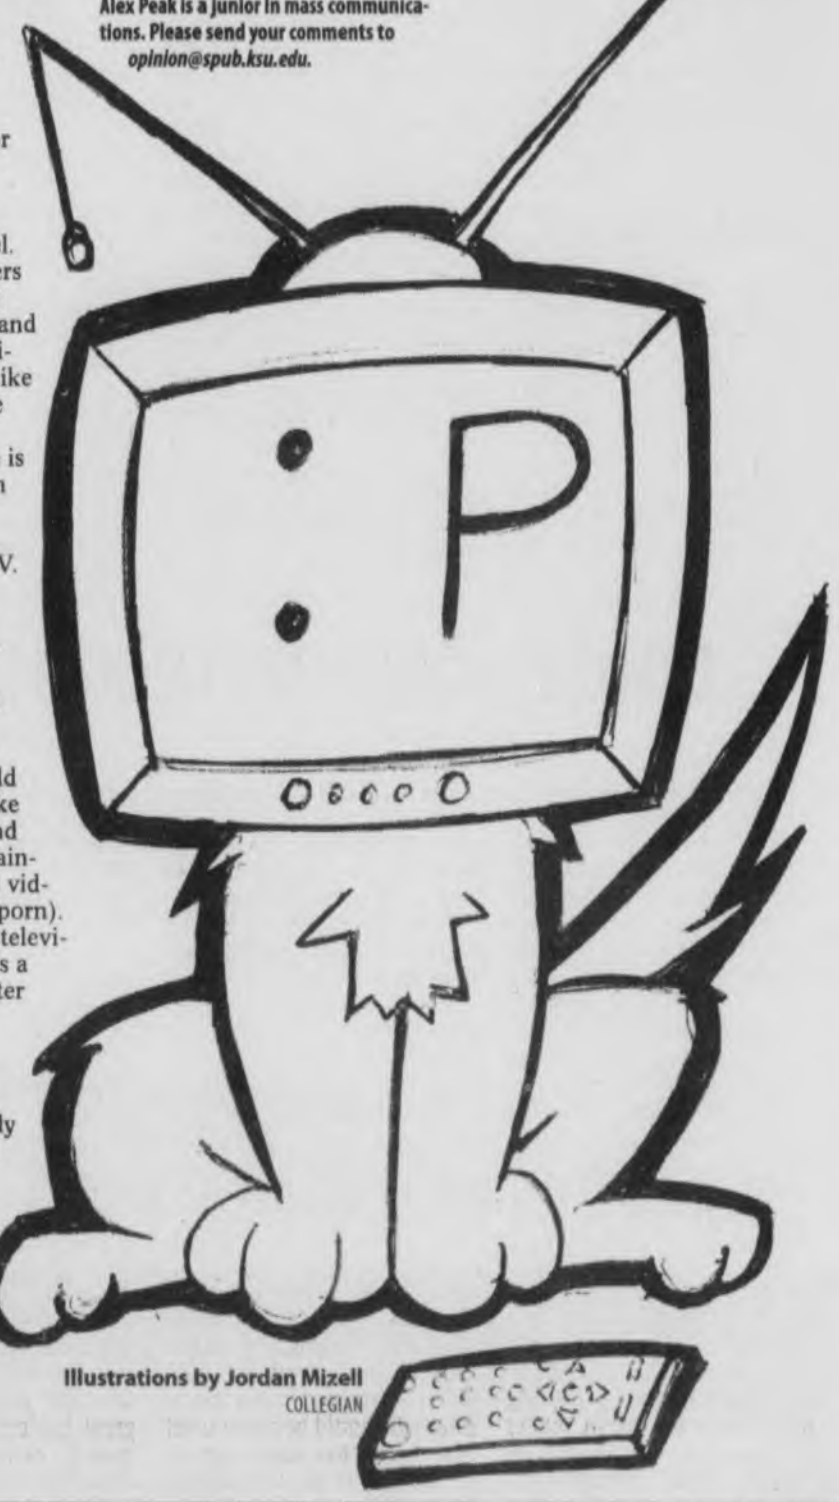
Many people have special get-togethers to watch certain shows. It's not uncommon for people to gather in groups to watch shows like "Desperate Housewives," "The O.C," or sporting events like the Super Bowl.

Whereas many viewers choose to watch in groups, many others watch television alone. The boob tube slowly becomes the company of the lonely. Just the fact that there's a buzzing, blinking, talking box in the room is enough to make people feel less lonesome, as if there was another person in the room.

Just like Ray Bradbury's "Fahrenheit 451," television is slowly taking away the need to socialize. The protagonist of the novel, Guy Montag, has a wife, Mildred, who is so obsessed with television that she basically stops interacting with him.

Although television can not physically offer anything to its viewer, it attempts to give anything and everything else.

Need to lose weight? The telly offers viewers shows like "The Biggest Loser." Looking for help corralling wild, outlandish children? Watch "Nanny 911" or "Supernanny." Learning to make gourmet food, build a house, renovate a room or give birth? Check out The Learning Channel or The Discovery Channel.



Audience members who are enquiring about the strange and fascinating lives of celebrities can peruse channels like VH1, MTV, E! etc. People who feel like watching someone else's boring life is less boring than their own can tune into just about any network to stare at endless hours of reality TV.

Television presents viewers with an array of hypnotizing and captivating options. Spectators can indulge in everything from instruction on how to live (including how to dress, date, style hair, build a custom motorcycle, make ice cream from scratch and more) to just plain entertainment (this includes music videos, movies, sitcoms and porn).

But the one thing that television simply cannot offer is a real relationship. No matter how much connoisseurs love, cuddle or compliment their boob tube, it won't reciprocate the affection. If people are really desperate for amusement and endearment, they should adopt puppies.

Watching a few shows here and there is understandable, but our population should not park itself in front of the predatory TV screen for infinite hours each day. Don't let the tube take Fido's place as man's best friend.

Guitar player offers frank personality lessons

CODY HOLUB

After exiting the Urban Outfitters store in Lawrence, I turned north and headed down south Massachusetts Street. I was on my way to shop at the Buckle, so I could cater to the part of me that is superficial.

I was proceeding on auto-pilot – my body was on course, but my thoughts were somewhere else entirely.

What pulled me out of my absentmindedness was a guy sitting on a bench, lazily playing an acoustic guitar. He looked like a minimalist. He had long hair, a shaggy beard and was wearing sandals. He looked really familiar, but I couldn't place where I recognized him from.

As I started to pass him, he said, "The final destination used to be my main question, but then I looked and all that I was searching for was present."

He looked up at me during the last few words and continued playing. I couldn't tell if he was addressing me, or if he was just saying it to himself. I walked past him a little bit and sat down on another bench within earshot so I could observe more.

About 30 seconds later, a young woman walked by me holding a palm pilot. She was obviously stressed out. I think she was looking at her upcoming schedule.

When she was approaching the guitar player, he said, "If you are going to worry, don't do it. If you do it, don't worry." He looked up at her during the last few words like he had done when I had passed him.

The woman was slightly jolted by the guitar player, but she continued walking. She put the PDA back in her purse a few seconds later. I sat there for about 10 minutes watching this sort of thing occur over and over.

The guitar player would analyze any passerby in an instant. Then, he would subtly utter a maxim for the person to acknowledge for themselves if they wanted to become aware of his offering.

This guy's talent was miraculous.

His behavior and wisdom made me a believer in his truths.

I got up from my bench and walked back over to him and confessed, "I've been listening to you for awhile, and I think you should write all this stuff down. You could probably even become the leader of your own religion."

He laughed at my enthusiasm. Then, he easily and readily declined my suggestion.

I was frustrated by his willingness to deny masses of people access to his wisdom. I said defiantly, "Fine, if you won't do it, then I will."

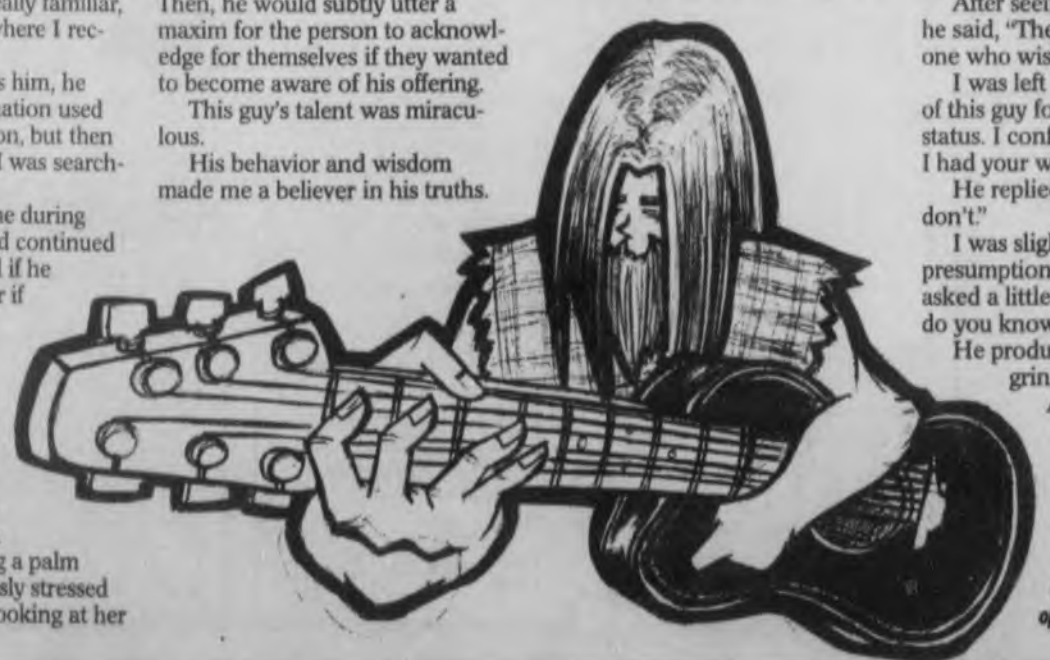
He then started laying out a scenario before me as if he was having an objective prophetic vision.

He said, "It shall be that you will write a manuscript that will be deemed holy. Your words will be seen as truth, light, inspiration and love. You will die and be enshrined. People will follow your insight, and they will name themselves to honor their devotion to you. Their love will turn to gold to build temples and to bring in new members."

"Your ideas will turn into symbols, traditions, rules and rituals. Your followers will fight to uphold these ideals because they are worth dying for. In the end, millions will die because of the words produced by your hand."

I sat there with a blank stare not knowing what to say. I knew he was right.

After seeing that I understood, he said, "The truth waits for anyone who wishes to find it."



I was left in complete awe of this guy for his apparent sage status. I confessed to him, "I wish I had your wisdom."

He replied curtly, "No you don't."

I was slightly irritated by his presumption of what I wanted. I asked a little indignantly, "How do you know what I want?"

He produced an appreciative grin over my grief.

After a moment, he countered, "How do you know what I know?"

Women should be educated on Plan B pill's true consequences

Editor,

The Plan B (morning-after) pill is a contraceptive and can cause a micro-abortion. We can debate whether a fetus is a person, or when the law should protect a person, but medicine and science conclusively demonstrate that a genetically unique human life begins at conception (check out your biology book).

A contraceptive blocks fertilization – in the Plan B pill's case, often by stopping ovulation – but according to four clinical studies cited by Princeton University's Web site at http://ec.princeton.edu/questions/MOA.pdf, the morning-after pill also can prevent implantation of the fertilized egg on the uterine wall. Thus, the fertilized egg – scientifically a distinct human life – dies from lack of nourishment and is expelled. We may discuss whether this micro-abortion is moral or should be legal, but we must acknowledge that it is indeed an abortion. The abortion debate is contentious, but women deserve to be educated about how the Plan B pill works, so they can make responsible choices, and we can all choose to create a culture of life in America.

Smoke-free workplaces necessary; Study's funding skews information

Editor,

Mr. Eckels' article brings forth the notion that second-hand smoke does not cause any negative side effects to those affected by it is full of misleading information that can continue to cause harm towards those that have to come in contact with smoke daily in their work places and homes.

In an article on WebMD (http://www.webmd.com/content/article/64/72529.htm), the study that Mr. Eckels mentioned in his article was released in 2003 and was funded by a grant provided by the Center for Indoor Air Research, which has been linked to the Philip Morris Co., one of the largest producers of cigarettes in the United States. This presents a clear conflict of interest and can the skew final results. The article on WebMD clearly shows that is the case, with many prestigious medical groups pointing out five solid reasons why this study is fundamentally flawed.

Ultimately, the evidence out there is overwhelmingly solid in pointing out that second-hand smoke is just as much, if not more, of a health hazard than smoking in general. Tobacco companies, like Philip Morris, have funded nearly all the studies that continue to say that there are no health hazards to second-hand smoke.

Smoke-free workplaces in Manhattan are needed to protect the health of all workers and customers that enter into that establishment. Currently, 11 states and numerous communities (including Lawrence and Salina, Kan.) in the United States have regulations creating smoke-free workplaces. I would encourage everyone to look at the information on www.cleanairmanhattan.org about those communities and the true facts when it comes to second-hand smoke.

Candidates should spend money on platform promises, not T-shirts

Editor,

K-State's student body president and vice-president elections are preparing me to face the harsh reality of money in politics in our country. When I read the article regarding the amount of money spent by each candidate on this year's campaign on Feb. 27, I was astounded. Does it really take $3,000 to win a university student body general presidential election? Unfortunately, this type of spending is seen in many political races in our country.

I am disappointed in K-State's policy of allowing such irresponsible spending to happen in student body elections. Clearly, campaign money being spent on posters, T-shirts and other paraphernalia could be better used elsewhere. How about putting it toward a program to reduce textbook prices (as one campaign promises they will do if elected?)

I am even more disturbed at what kind of repercussions this type of spending has on the leadership of this university. Personally, it would be impossible for me to run a successful campaign on this campus. I do not have the money to make shiny signs and flashy T-shirts. Frankly, if that's what it takes to win a campaign at K-State, I'm not sure I would want to run in the first place. What other great leaders are we passing over by allowing this type of spending?

I urge students who still have any faith in this university's election system to choose their candidates carefully and hold their feet to the fire once they are elected. The power to create positive change at K-State lies in our hands, not in the candidates' wallets.

Snyder highway bill to Senate

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A bill that would rename a section of Kansas highway after former K-State football Coach Bill Snyder passed the House floor last week with a 122-2 vote.

The bill is on its way to the Senate for a hearing Tuesday, said Rep. John Faber, R-Brewster, vice chair of the House Transportation Committee.

If passed, Kansas State Highway 177 from Interstate 70 to U.S. Highway 24 and also U.S. Highway 24 from Manhattan to the Kansas Highway 13 junction would be designated the "Coach Bill Snyder Highway."

The secretary of transportation would see that signs are placed along the highway to indicate that the highway is the Coach Bill Snyder Highway.

The bill states that the signs shall not be placed until the secretary has received sufficient moneys from gifts and donations to reimburse the cost of placing signs. The secretary also would have to receive an additional 50 percent of the cost for maintenance.

A fiscal note prepared by the director of budget stated $700 is the usual cost of erecting a sign. In accordance with the language of the bill, the secretary of transportation would have to receive donations of $1,500 for each sign before signs could be erected.

Sen. Roger Reitz, R-Manhattan, said he supports the bill.

"I think Bill Snyder is a perfectly acceptable person to have a highway named for," Reitz said.

K-State kicker and sophomore in kinesiology, Jared Parker, said naming a section of highway after Snyder would be fitting.

"I think Coach Snyder did a lot, not just for Manhattan and for K-State football, but for the state in general," Parker said.

Rep. Lana Gordon, R-Topeka, said she voted against the bill.

"I have the utmost respect for Coach Snyder and his accomplishments at K-State, but I really do not believe it's good public policy to name highways after living people, and will continue to support that position," Gordon said. "My vote was never meant to be disrespectful."

Class' annual bull sale begins today

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 29th annual Special "K" Bull and Heifer sale will be at 3 p.m. today at the K-State Purebred Beef Barn, 1912 Denison Ave.

The sale is organized and overseen by students in the livestock sales management class at K-State, who handle everything from preparing the cattle to hospitality at today's sale.

"We've done pretty much everything," said Sarah Buttenhoff, senior in agricultural education and member of the class. "All the preparation work, we put the sale together, and we did all the advertising. Whatever's needed to be done, we've done as a class."

The sale will be in conjunction with the Cattleman's Day program. Registration starts at 8 a.m. today in Weber Hall.

According to a press release, the sale will offer 40 Angus, 20 Simmental and 10 Hereford bulls, as well as 100 cows from K-State purebred and commercial herds and 12 elite heifers.

To prepare for the sale, students in the livestock sales management class were divided into four groups, to tackle different issues involved with a big sale.

"We were divided into groups, or committees," Buttenhoff said. "One clipped the cattle, got them ready for the sale, one did advertising, and I think the other is a hospitality committee for [today]."

Lance Leachman, junior in animal sciences and industry, said he was a member of the advertising group.

"Basically, what that entailed was we had to do a 30-second radio advertisement for the sale on the Mid-America Ag Network, and we had to take pictures for different cattle magazines, made up posters, flyers, and actually made the sale catalog ourselves, which saved a lot of money," Leachman said.

Leachman said the sale is a way to promote K-State's purebred beef teaching center and it is a good way to give animal science students an idea of what it's like to put on a big sale.

"It gives you an appreciation for all of the work it takes for something that only lasts a few hours," he said.

K-State picks up 10th straight win over rival Kansas

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE – The K-State Wildcats continued their domination of the Kansas Jayhawks and snapped a four-game losing streak with a 62-44 victory Thursday in Allen Fieldhouse.

The win gave the Wildcats (18-9, 8-8 Big 12 Conference) their 10th consecutive win over the Jayhawks (16-11, 5-11) and their fifth consecutive win at Allen Fieldhouse.

"This was a great win for us," freshman Shalee Lehning said. "It's tough to be able to come in here with this team and keep the streak alive. KU is a great team and this is a tough atmosphere to play in, but we just came with great intensity and focus and we got the job done."

The Wildcats' 18-point win also gave K-State the No. 7 seed and will face Kansas, the No. 10 seed, for a third time in the upcoming Big 12 Tournament in Dallas.

K-State jumped out to an early 21-8 lead with 7:34 left in the first half and extended that lead to 17 points behind the shooting of Lehning and sophomore Kimberly Dietz. Lehning scored all of her nine points in the first half on 4-of-7 shooting and Dietz also scored all of her eight points before the break on 3-of-5 shooting.

Defensively, the Wildcats held the Jayhawks to just 19 first half points and 33 percent shooting as a team from the floor.

"I think our players were very focused," Coach Deb Patterson said. "When they've hit the floor, they've hit the floor running and here on the road at KU, with the emotions and the rivalry involved, I think that was a real advantage for us. I was real pleased with the consistency and intensity that we brought tonight, once we did establish a little distance between us and KU."

In the second half, the Jayhawks were able to cut the lead to 10, 48-38, with 7:46 remaining in the game, but the Wildcats answered with a 14-2 run over the next five minutes to seal the win.

"When we played KU the first time, we didn't finish that game well," Patterson said. "We know that Kansas is not going to lay down and die. We knew they would keep coming at us so, I think we just had to answer with quality, intense and intelligent basketball and we did that."

Junior Claire Coggins led the way for the Wildcats in the second half by scoring 13 of her team-high 15 points in the second half on 5-of-9 shooting. Freshman Marlies Gipson also came alive in the second half with seven of her 11 points, including a 3-pointer during the Wildcats' finishing run.

Coggins said she was not worried about finishing off the Jayhawks after Kansas cut the lead to 10.

"I'm very confident in the way our team has come out and have that type of fire of shutting teams down, because we are a good team and if we come out just hard and confident, then it's hard for a lot of teams to play with us," Coggins said. "KU is a great team, they played good tonight, but we really, really wanted this win and we did the things that we needed to do."

Wildcats give fans reason to cheer

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE – With less than six minutes remaining in their regular season finale and up by 18 points, the K-State fans in Bramlage East, also known as Allen Fieldhouse, began chanting.

"K-S-U Wildcats" rang through the rafters as the K-State Wildcats rolled over in-state rival KU Thursday night 62-44.

Marlies Gipson finished with 11 points and seven rebounds in 29 minutes of play during her first game in Lawrence.

"It's definitely an exciting atmosphere," Gipson said. "It's KU versus K-State. They brought in some fans and tried to shake us a little bit, but I think overall it's an exciting game and it's just a lot of fun.

She also noted how dedicated the fans who took the time to venture to KU were.

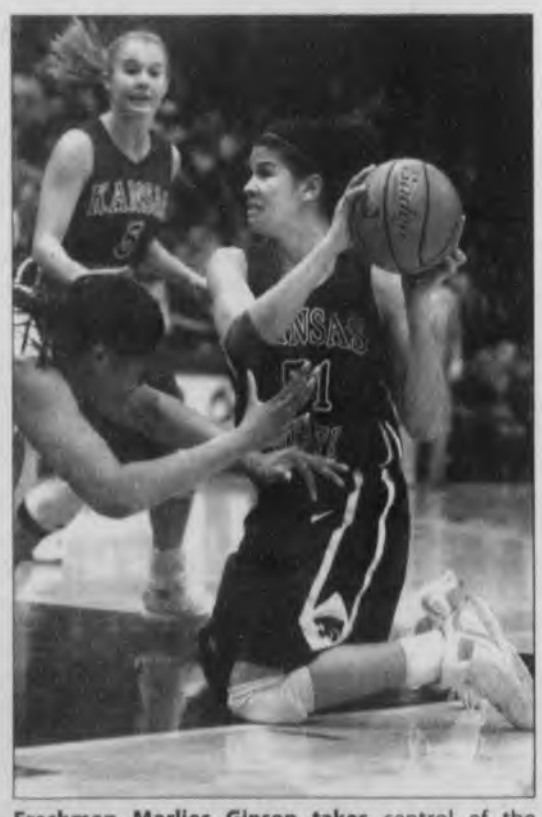
"They follow us everywhere," Gipson said. "It's just awesome how much support the give us. The were getting loud for us and it was just exciting."

The win against the Jayhawks was the first win for the Wildcats since beating the Colorado Buffaloes 67-62 on Feb. 8 in Boulder, Colo.

Since then, K-State dropped four consecutive games, two of which were to top-10 ranked teams Oklahoma and Baylor.

With the tough way the Wildcats played OU and Baylor, Claire Coggins said the team members knew they could play at a high level.

"The way we've been playing our past two games, against top-10 ranked teams, we just brought that same fire tonight and it gave us great results."



Coach Deb Patterson said the intensity her team brought to the floor was something missing from the first road game of the Big 12 Conference season, a 42-68 loss to Missouri.

"The contrast between that first Big 12 (Conference) road game in Missouri, where we really didn't know anything about what competing in the Big 12 on the road was all about," Patterson said. "You compare it with the intensity and the purpose and the focus and the finishing ability and the defense that our team brought to the floor here on the road and our last game.

"I think it's a statement about how far they've come."

Coggins, who finished 6-of-13 from the floor and with a team-game high of 15 points in 32 minutes of play, said going into the Big 12 Tournament next week in Dallas, other teams have to watch out for the Wildcats.

"A lot of teams really have to step up and know they have to play a great game against K-State," Coggins said. "We're not the type of team that's going to be a blowout."

Season series sweep of KU could save Wooldridge's job

Coach Jim Wooldridge doesn't have to be a genius to figure out the importance of Saturday's Sunflower Showdown.

MARK POTTER

Wooldridge, in the final year of his two-year contract extension, knows it's a huge game.

Wooly understands a K-State win would likely result in an invitation to the post-season National Invitation Tournament, which is his only realistic chance for another extension.

The sixth-year coach isn't stupid. He realizes his job is about as secure as an unlocked car in a bad part of town.

After all, Wooldridge has never led K-State into the post-season, and none of his squads have finished higher than tied for seventh in the Big 12 Conference standings – the position the current Wildcats (15-11, 6-9 Big 12) find themselves in.

Two days after K-State was snubbed from the NIT last March, President Jon Wefald and Director of Athletics Tim Weiser announced their decision to keep Wooly aboard for another season.

The speculation was that Weiser wanted to fire Wooldridge after last season, but Wefald wanted him to return to K-State's sideline.

The specifics of the meeting were kept confidential, but two things seemed clear: 1. The three agreed K-State had made some improvements, but 2. K-State must continue improving, or Wooldridge would need to find another job.

"In some cases, we did make expectations and others we

Wildcats look to sweep Jayhawks, regain program prominence

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nineteen eighty-three was a good year.

McDonald's introduced the Chicken McNugget. Flash Dance and Return of the Jedi were box-office hits. Former USC quarterback Matt Leinart was born.

It's also the last time K-State swept Kansas in a season.

When the Jayhawks come to Bramlage Coliseum Saturday afternoon, there's a chance the Cats could repeat history, 23 years later.

Senior Schyler Thomas said a win Saturday is possible, and if it does happen, it will be a bright spot on the basketball program's résumé.

"It's a fair matchup, and we've got a good chance of winning this one," said Thomas, who had five points in Lawrence. "It would be big for the program to earn more respect. They (people) don't see the games we've been in and the scores – they just see our record.

"It would give our program the prominence it had in the past."

If the records were the only thing looked at, it undoubtedly would appear the Jayhawks have the edge.

Since the last outing, the Hawks are 11-2, and K-State is 5-7.

Kansas also has become one of the best defensive teams in the conference, pacing the Big 12 conference in field-goal percentage defense (36.6 percent), defensive rebounds (26.93 per game), and they are No. 2 in blocked shots (5.71 per game).

The Hawks' three freshmen – Julian Wright, Brandon Rush and Mario Chalmers – have found an offensive rhythm and also have established KU as one of the best transition offenses in the league.

"I would say this is a different KU team," said junior Cartier Martin, who had 14 points in the previous outing. "They fought a lot of adversity coming into the season, and they have gradually gotten better. We'll have to make them play a half court game, rebound the ball defensively and get out in our transition game.

"They've made some adjustments, as well as we have."

Indeed, K-State has refined both side of its game throughout the course of the season.

While Rush is the only Jayhawk listed as 14th in the Big 12's top-20 scorers, K-State boasts two players in Martin (No. 4) and sophomore David Hoskins (No. 20).

Juniors Akeem Wright and Lance Harris also have

FBC | K-State announces plans for Spring Game

K-State will celebrate its 2006 Purple and White Spring Football Game on April 22, with a weekend's worth of activities for fans, K-State officials announced Thursday.

In addition to the game, which will kickoff at 6 p.m. at Snyder Family Stadium, K-State's inaugural Spring Game Fan Fest Weekend will include a carnival and midway, a children's fun zone, live music, a state-level barbeque competition and a battle of the bands contest.

The weekend's events get under way on April 21, with a pair of K-State spring traditions – the 22nd annual editions of the Powercat Golf Tournament and the K-State athletics department's Powercat Auction.

The inaugural KSU Wildcat BBQ Battle, which has been proclaimed by Gov. Kathleen Sebelius as "an official barbeque championship of the State of Kansas," kicks off Saturday's slate of festivities at 7 a.m. in Cat Town.

VLB | Volleyball slates 4 tourneys for spring

K-State volleyball announced on Thursday a four tournament spring schedule beginning April 1.

Fritz

The slate includes a tournament on April 8 in Manhattan.

The Cats, coached by Suzie Fritz, play their first tournament of the spring April 1 in Fayetteville, Ark.

The Wildcats will return to Manhattan to play host to a spring tournament in the upper gymnasium of Ahearn Field House on April 8.

The public is welcome to attend the matches in Ahearn Field House. All matches are free of charge, with the first match beginning at 9 a.m.

K-State will conclude its spring schedule with road trips at Loyola Marymount (April 22) and at Minnesota (April 29).

MLB | Royals' Huber heading for Australia

Huber

Justin Huber left the Royals' camp on Thursday to join the Australia team workouts for the World Baseball Classic. Australia will play Italy in the opening game, then face powerhouses Venezuela and the Dominican Republic.

NEW YORK — NFL owners voted unanimously Thursday to break off talks with the players' union on a contract extension, leaving the current salary cap in place with the start of free agency looming — and possibly forcing the mass dumping of veterans.

The owners, who met for 57 minutes Thursday morning, endorsed a recommendation by their management council executive committee to reject the union's latest proposal.

The breakdown of talks left intact, for now, a salary cap of $94.5 million. The two sides had hoped to add $10 million to $15 million to the 2006 salary cap.

Without the additional room, some teams could be forced into wholesale cuts to get beneath the cap by midnight.

Decking the walls

Learning to make the most out of a little space in residence halls

By Stephanie Gorges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When you envision your dream place, white brick walls and dripping pipes are not in the picture. The truth is, the residence halls were not designed with interior decorating in mind.

You cannot pick your furniture, you cannot paint the walls, and you sure cannot make the room any bigger.

But, you can still make the best of your space.

Five K-State students have found the keys to turning their white-walled rooms into comfortable living spaces.

NOVELTY

Ashley Vogrin, freshman in open-option, and Kate Barkman, freshman in pre-professional business administration, said they have got it all in their room in Moore Hall -- pizazz, entertainment and space for a crowd.

Vogrin and Barkman said they also used a double loft in their room, but the beds are suspended from the frame by chains.

"My neighbor was an engineer, and he had the frame," Vogrin said.

But the design didn't stop there, she said. Vogrin's father added a television shelf, a fan, bedlamps, bedside shelves, power strips and built-in lighting under the beds.

In addition to a couch for seating under one bed, there also is a large K-State trunk that provides seating for three, she said. If that's not enough, overnight guests can spend the night in a hammock.

"I got the hammock in Mexico, and this is a great place to use it," Vogrin said. "The boys on the floor think it makes the room look like a pirate ship."

Barkman said their creative design helped them meet new people.

"We met so many people the first week of school," Barkman said.

ENTERTAINMENT

For Josh Barney, sophomore in sociology, decorating took a backseat to entertainment. He said he has turned his room into a hot-spot in Moore Hall.

Barney said he teamed up with Bill Gepford, sophomore in open-option, and Adam Jennings, freshman in mechanical engineering, to create an electronics room.

The three combined all of their electronic equipment – computers, television, stereos and gaming systems – into one party room.

In addition to an Xbox, Game Cube and PlayStation 2, the TV is hooked up to surround-sound speakers, Barney said.

To make room for the crowd the room draws, Barney said he bunked his bed, leaving the base of the upper bed as a tabletop and seating area.

"Everyone's in here all the time," he said. "We're sort of the game/party/music room."

SPACE

When you cram two people into one little room, you tend to run out of space fast. Matt Rittscher, junior in mass communications, and Chris Frampton, junior in chemical engineering, said they came up with a way to make their Marlatt Hall room seem much larger.

"We figured the best way to get space is to get both beds up off the floor," Rittscher said.

Rittscher and Frampton said they designed a double loft that leaves almost all the room's floor space available. They put a couch under one bed and a desk and entertainment system under the other.

"We got that couch for, I think, $45 at the Grand Ol' Trunk," Rittscher said. "It definitely brings in more people, because there's so much room."

Rittscher and Frampton said they completed their room with a nice carpet and fitting decorations. Rittscher's decorations include an oar that he said a friend carved for him after a bachelor party. Frampton hung signs from a summer camp where he was a counselor.

"We used plastic tac to hang our posters and stuff," Rittscher said.

Film is engaging but confusing at times

"End of the Spear"

Movie review by Brendan Praeger

"End of the Spear" is an engaging and emotionally satisfying film, although its overly sentimental tone and confusing dialogue make it a difficult movie to recommend.

The movie is based on the true story of five missionaries who travel to the jungles of Ecuador to help the notoriously violent Waodani tribe. After the Waodanis murder the missionaries, a series of events unfold to change the lives of not only the slain missionaries' families, but also the Waodani people.

This is an independent film, so its wide release might indicate an attempt to cash in on the recent success of other recently released religious films, but the religious message is actually toned down in favor of a message about love and redemption.

The main problems with the film stem from the language barrier that exists between the tribe and the missionaries. The same confusion that leads to the missionaries' murders creates a disorienting viewing experience. A film with subtitles only succeeds if it can make you forget that you're reading some of the dialogue.

It's refreshing to see an independent movie in Manhattan every once in a while. I can't recommend the film for people who want straightforward entertainment, but if you're looking for something a little more ambitious, you could do a lot worse than "End of the Spear."

Bachelorette parties' new trends

Pre-wedding events become more personal, expressive

It's that last night out as a single girl, which lots of women look forward to before their wedding, and cringe about when they look back.

Bachelorette parties have been around for many generations, yet new trends and preferences are always appearing.

"Bachelorette parties have gone from the wild 'let's get plastered till we forget what day it is' to 'let's have a day together and be pampered,' said Jantzie Blue, sales and marketing event coordinator for As2become1.com. "Brides-to-be just want to have a day of relaxation and totally be taken care of. In fact, I am booking more appointments at salons and spas for bridal get-togethers, than I am organizing pub-crawls."

However, the wild side has not become nonexistent.

"I once delivered a piglet to a bachelor party from the bride," Blue said. "He was thinking it was going to be a stripper. They both met in a swine husbandry class at K-State, so it was kind of appropriate. It was suggested that they have a baby pig at the reception but I drew the line and suggested they do something like that in a less formal setting."

Angela Burdick of VIP Bachelorette said she agrees women are becoming more expressive.

"Girls are trying new things", she said. "We do a lot of work with party buses, and they are by far the wildest."

Frequently, these buses will get pulled over by police because the strippers inside are dancing without curtains on the windows, Burdick said.

Another growing trend is the amount of money spent. Burdick said girls today are spending much more on their parties than in the past.

"Last year, the average host was spending about $50 per girl," she said. "This year, it's running from $85-100 per girl."

However, all sources agreed that many traditions are here to stay. The basic bachelorette party will always be popular: meeting at the bride-to-be's house, going to bars and clubs, and lots of interaction with males.

Jennifer Droste of Denver said she agreed.

"At my party, we all met up and went downtown to go clubbing," she said. "We rented a driver and stayed at a hotel. My close friends and co-workers were all there - the people that mattered." Droste was married in May of 2005.

Many of these trends also are true for local businesses.

"Girls are buying a lot of fun, little things from us. We see them buying a lot of sashes, fun games, dice – many of the smaller items," said Lindsey Ritchie, a sales associate at Mr. P's Party Outlet, 318 Poyntz Ave.

Now is a popular time for girls to start planning their parties, with so many of the weddings taking place in the summer, Ritchie said.

"Bachelorette parties are just a great time for girls to get together," she said. "Not just the bridal party anymore, but old friends as well, to bond and support one another."

Getting used to spouse's habits an important part of marriage

MARK POTTER

Marriage is awesome. I highly recommend it.

I was married two months ago, and my life has taken a dramatic turn for the better.

Of course, first you must find someone, fall in love, get engaged and do the whole planning thing, unless you choose to elope.

Guys, this is not as easy as it sounds. Not all of us are handsome, 6-foot-4-inches, 33-year-old doctors from Nashville, Tenn. with 25 beautiful women head-over-heels for a chance to spend time with us.

Ladies, I hear falling in love is no cakewalk for you, either. I'm told it is getting harder to find a quality guy who is more interested in meeting your needs than finishing his Xbox game.

But once you find the one, walk down the aisle and say "I do," your life will change forever.

There are a number of adjustments newly-weds must make. Here are some to keep in mind:

■ Moving in.

After my wife and I got engaged, acquaintances commonly asked us if we lived together. It was probably the second-most frequent question my wife received after, "Can I see your ring?"

My wife and I decided to refrain from living together until we wed, which I strongly recommend. You can expect plenty of pleasant surprises if you choose the road less traveled and wait until after the wedding to move in.

■ The distinctly disgusting male aroma.

Admit it, guys: We stink. Ladies, you better learn to cope with your man's natural odor, or you're in trouble. No deodorant or foot powder is strong enough to hide a sweaty man's natural scent.

■ Shedding.

Guys, be prepared for hair, and lots of it – on your pillow, in the shower, on your salad – everywhere. Girls shed like cats. It comes with the package.

■ Lotion, hair products and soap, oh my.

This first hit me when I helped my wife move out of her apartment. We had dated for five years, but until then, I never had a firm grasp on my wife's massive amount of bathroom products.

She must have 40 different hair products, 25 bottles of lotion and five soaps, not to mention hand cream, facial cream, anti-aging cream, foot cream, day cream, night cream, eye cream, ice cream – you name it. Men, your old shower will seem bare compared to after she moves in.

■ Trash those posters and make room for wedding pictures.

When my wife started moving in, she asked, "You are going to take down all those posters, right?" You see, she and I have different ideas of decorating. Of course, she got her way and we replaced the posters with framed wedding pictures.

Hey, at least she let me hang a dartboard in our office. Thanks, honey.

Learning about your spouse makes marriage more entertaining and exciting. Marriage is a lifelong learning process, and I am looking forward to discovering more about my wife.

Until then, I will try to savor the time we spend together.

Road to the reception

Distance, budget, factor into transportation choice

By Ashleigh Williams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After the I-do's are said, many weddings offer some sort of reception to celebrate with their guests. Limousines, mopeds, cars decorated by friends, and horse-drawn carriages are a few of the ways newlyweds arrive at the party.

While transportation might not seem like a big concern, there actually is a lot to consider. The final decision, however, depends on what best accommodates the couple.

"Originally we were planning on taking a 1955 Bentley, but then we decided to go on location around Kansas City to take pictures," Katie Buck, senior in finance, said. "We wanted the whole wedding party to be able to ride together, so we picked the 10-person limo," she said.

Kelley Antonucci, senior in family studies and human services, opted for the limo so she could have more privacy on the way to the reception.

"We were going to take a trolley, but we decided to take a limo so we could have more private time with just the two of us before the reception," Antonucci said.

For some couples, the decision was a chance to be creative and have fun, while saving money.

"We'll be taking my 1989 Lincoln Towncar named 'Doug,'" Cory Ozbun, senior in psychology, said. "It's a tank, but it's a classy tank. It's as big as a limo at a fraction of the price. And who knows, we might even put some champagne in the back for effect."

Chris French, senior in speech communication, said he and his fiance will ride a moped to their hotel.

"My future wife doesn't know this yet, but I figure it will save us on gas money," French said.

Because money might be an issue for some couples, many companies throw in extra features to help make their business stand out.

"The company we're using provides complimentary champagne, a just married sign and a red carpet," Buck said.

"We use stretch SUVs, which gives our company the unique ability to take the whole wedding party," Trout said. "We also offer three bars, three flat-screen TVs, laser lights and karaoke inside the limo."

Another form of special transportation is the horse-drawn carriage ride to the reception site. The Munson Angus Farms, 5126 Liberty Hall Road in Junction City, provides a team of two Percheron horses that pull a trolley which holds up to 25 people.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

While the transportation from the wedding to the reception is an important consideration for some couples, when the wedding and reception are at the same location, transportation to the aisle becomes a more important part.

Charles and Deanna Munson, owners of Munson Angus Farms, said their company provides a feel that other transportation does not provide.

"There is something mesmerizing about the clip clop of hooves on the ground," Deanna said. "It sets the mood and gives the feel that other transportation does not."

Many couples do not drive an extremely long distance to their reception site, distance is another factor that should be considered.

"The actual distance from the church to the reception site is less than eight miles, but we will be driving down to the Plaza or the West Bottoms – our photographer has taken amazing pictures down there," Buck said.

For those who aren't traveling very far, a limo might not be practical.

"We're only going about three blocks – just long enough to put our seat-belts on," Ozbun said. "It's a whole lot cheaper to use our own car, not to mention that we aren't going to far enough to spend a ton on a limo. Especially when you already have 'Doug.'"

Whether it be a limo, moped, or "Doug," couples pick transportation that fits their needs and personal preference.

"We could walk to the reception and I wouldn't care, as long as I am married," French said.

Online wedding planners gaining popularity for ease

By Kelsey Noel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Planning a wedding can be a strenuous process. However, the Internet offers several Web sites dedicated to helping couples get ready for their big day.

One such site is www.as2become1.com. Marion Layman, sales and marketing representative for the company, said its site has been available for about a year.

She said the company began from the realization that weddings in the 21st century are a huge business. The creator decided to design an online planner to assist in wedding preparation.

By paying $6.50 a month, members can make an entire wedding Web site of their own, where they can create their own budget manager, RSVP manager, and gift registry, Layman said.

She said the RSVP manager was a helpful tool in saving the couple money.

"Guests can RSVP to the wedding through (the couple's) Web site," she said. "This way, you can save money on stamps and RSVP cards."

Though the company is still in its beginning stages, Layman said she believes online wedding planning is an up-and-coming and trendy choice.

"(Online planners) are very easy to use, because you can do it all online," she said. "This way you don't have to hire a planner, but you still could hire one and use the site in conjuncture with them."

Jackie Vondemkamp, senior in mass communications, said she used multiple online sources in planning her May 2006 wedding.

"We used theweddingchannel.com and theknot.com for planning," she said. "We have a wedding Web site and also a gift registry online."

Vondemkamp said the Web sites helped her plan in an organized fashion.

"They helped us to know what we needed to do month-by-month and kept us up to date," she said.

Ashley Benner, senior in dietetics, said she also used www.theknot.com to prepare for her upcoming wedding.

"We used their organizational tips and budgeting tips," she said. "They give advice on how to save money, how to find the right dress, and how to find good prices on flowers during different seasons."

Benner said using the Internet has been helpful to her.

"The Web site had lots of tips about things I had no idea about," she said.

Layman said her best advice to couples is to manage their finances.

"Don't go over your budget," she said. "We help with that with our online budget planner, because it's not worth it to spend more money and go into debt as a newlywed."

She also advised that couples stay firm in their decisions.

"Stick with what you want, not what others want for your wedding," she said.

Manhattan offers a variety of event locations

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most couples want to make their wedding day as memorable as possible, and the location plays a big part.

Aly Miller, owner of Signature Events and Decor, said the company mostly plans receptions for weddings.

"Each reception hall is going to be its own," she said. "What we do is, we come in and make it different and turn it into something that the couple will see as their own."

She said the company tries to do two or three weddings a weekend and works in conjunction with Bockers Catering, which is owned by her father.

She said he runs the catering and she comes in with the decorating.

She said the majority of her clients have been K-State students, but she also sees people from the Manhattan area.

Miller said there are choices in Manhattan to have either the wedding or reception or both in a fun, different place.

"A lot of people have it at the K-State gardens, which is a really neat place," she said. "I haven't heard of anyone ever doing it at the scenic overlook on Kansas Highway 177, but I am sure it could be done."

She also recommended the Wareham Opera House, the K-State Alumni Center and Houston Street Ballroom as possible choices.

Kelley Goss, manager of the Wareham Opera House, 410 Poyntz Ave., said the building usually is used for wedding receptions with some meeting and banquets occasionally.

She said the maximum capacity is 550 people, but it will not seat that many. She said any events Sunday through Thursday are $500, $850 for Friday and $950 for Saturday.

She said the couple has control of the planning and can hire whoever they like to do catering, decorating, etc.

There is also a stage for dancing, a bar and a small catering kitchen that they are welcome to use.

"I think our establishment is so popular because of the historical significance," she said. "It was built in the late 1800s as an actual opera house, then changed to a theatre and around 1988 they transformed it into what it is today."

She said the building is booking quickly.

"Summer is booked," Goss said. "Most weekends are also booked, except for game day."

Kathy LeValley, facility manager of the Houston Street Ballroom, 427 Houston St., said generally they also do a lot of receptions, but it is possible to have both the wedding and the reception at the ballroom.

She said there is a variety of clients that the ballroom serves including young professionals, local residents and students.

LeValley said it is a 900-square-foot ballroom with two-thirds carpet and one-third of the space is available for use as a dance floor and can serve 50 to 500 people. She said for a Friday or Saturday booking the price is $1050 with a $525 refundable deposit.

There are only four Saturdays left in 2006, and those are filling up quickly, LeValley said.

"I think the reason we are so popular is that we allow people to have control of their event," she said. "They have the ability to control their costs all on their own, and we have a very nice facility."

Bill would help KBI locate, identify missing persons

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A bill that would expand the Kansas Bureau of Investigation's database of missing people was passed out of the Kansas House last week.

If passed, the bill would expand the KBI database to include an unidentified person database for adults.

According to a supplemental note on House Bill 2626, the database would be used to improve the ability to locate and return missing persons, identify persons or human remains and inform family members.

Rep. Judy Morrison, R-Shawnee, said she sponsored the bill.

"We haven't had any way to bring out missing person information, and it's very important to those loved ones to find out what happened," Morrison said. "And you need to inform members of family as soon as possible of what happened."

Morrison said the information on the database would be available to law enforcement, state coroners and state agencies on a need-to-know basis.

"The change is minor," Morrison said. "It will change the missing person's clearinghouse that is in existence for children to be available to adults."

The clearinghouse will be considered as immediate entry, Morrison said.

"As soon as someone is declared missing, their information can be entered into the database," Morrison said. "The first 24 to 36 hours is vital to getting something out there, and we miss a lot not having it out in the open early."

Morrison said the bill was introduced on behalf of President Bush's DNA initiative, which was brought forth after the difficulties of identifying remains after Sept. 11.

Lt. Michael Quintanar, with the Riley County Police Department, said there is no set time period for when you can declare a person missing.

"We start investigating when the call is made," Quintanar said. "We look at it from different areas, and we give the person the option to file a report or do an attempt to locate."

Quintanar said having information and descriptions helps track a missing person.

"We promote doing Identikits," Quintanar said. "These make it easier to locate a missing person. These kits include fingerprints, hair samples, eye color, and it will indicate if the person has any scars."

Quintanar also said having credit card numbers and social security numbers helps track down missing persons. It is also important to know your loved ones' schedules, he said.

"It's good to have an adequate schedule so people will know if something is wrong," Quintanar said.

Quintanar said the bill could help locate and identify missing persons.

"This would be helpful when finding a deceased body because you would have a database to match information with," Quintanar said. "I think it's a good resource, but not a critical resource for finding living missing persons."

Rep. Lance Kinzer, R-Olathe, carried and presented the bill on the house floor and said the bill's focal point is making it easier for law enforcement to share and coordinate information.

"We haven't had any way to bring out missing person information, and it's very important to those love ones to find out what happened. And you need to inform members of family as soon as possible of what happened."

Judy Morrison
REPRESENTATIVE, R-SHAWNEE

"The bill went through fairly easily," Kinzer said. "It hasn't been a matter of controversy .... except for one concern regarding victims of abuse, but these concerns were ironed out in committee."

Sandy Barnett drafted opposition to the bill on behalf of the Kansas Coalition against Sexual and Domestic Violence.

"We opposed the bill for a minor part of the bill that was very important to us," said Barnett, executive director for the Kansas Coalition against Sexual and Domestic Violence.

"We thought it was a cause for concern for women fleeing from abuse because sometimes abusers could use the system to find these women."

An amendment to the bill states that any agency investigating the report will not release the location information of the missing person if that person is staying at or has made contact with a domestic violence or sexual assault program.

K-State tennis team looks to carry momentum into Colorado game

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team heads into Saturday's away match against Colorado on a bit of a roll, winning three of their last four matches.

Winning in Boulder this weekend could really give the Wildcats (4-2, 0-1 Big 12 Conference) a name in the Big 12, Coach Steve Bietau said.

Simosa
SENIOR

"I would probably put Colorado ahead of us in the Big 12 right now, but we'll find out on Saturday," Bietau said. "The truth is, we don't know who the better teams are in our conference right now because there are so many solid teams."

Doubles will play a key role, Bietau said, as the Wildcats have improved every match this spring season. The Buffaloes (7-3, 1-1) have struggled in doubles play, losing the point in seven of 10 matches, with four sweeps on their record.

"I am pleased that we've made some progress," Bietau said. "We definitely played better at No. 1 doubles on Saturday (against Wichita State)."

K-State is 3-0 when they win the doubles point.

Winning the doubles point is crucial to winning a match because it helps transition into singles play, freshman Katerina Kudlackova said.

"We have to continue in good doubles because it's the first point of the match," Kudlackova said. "If we play good doubles, then it makes it easier to play in singles."

The Wildcats – who have won two of their last three on the road – are still looking for their first Big 12 win. To continue success, The Wildcats need to continue playing forceful and smart, senior Jessica Simosa said.

"We've been going to the net more and being more aggressive," Simosa said. "Our returns have been quicker, and we've been keeping the pressure on our opponents, which is something that is not really natural to us, so we need to keep thinking about it."

With Big 12 play beginning to heat up, the Wildcats will pay for any setbacks, Bietau said.

"We've talked about the fact that we're at a point in the season where we'd really like to build some momentum," Bietau said. "In order for that to happen, we can't afford to go back."

Two Wildcats – Kudlackova and senior Tamar Kvaratskhelia – have already faced the Buffaloes at the ITA Regional tournament last fall. Kudlackova lost to Veera Nurmi (4-6, 6-1, 7-6) and Kvaratskhelia defeated Monica Milevski (6-1, 6-3).

K-State hopes that sophomore Olga Klimova will return to action on Saturday after sitting out against Wichita State on Feb. 25 due to fatigue. Sophomore Tereza Prochazkova, while filling in for Klimova, won in doubles and singles against WSU.

Dining etiquette workshop teaches students manners

By Yiyi Chen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A dining etiquette workshop at the Derby Dining Center on Thursday lent a helping hand to students wishing to impress their future bosses at the dinner table.

The workshop, which aimed to help students fine-tune their dining manners, started at 5:30 p.m. Students wore formal dress and ate a three-course meal while listening to the tips from the instructors.

"They [students] can be more knowledgeable when they go dining. They represent K-State," said Pat Pesci, director of K-State's hotel and restaurant management program. "They will have more confidence when they do the interview."

Pesci and the other instructor, Kevin Roberts, of hotel and restaurant institution management and dietetics, listed several dining faux pas with solutions to them.

For example, the two instructors recommended diners not talk about sensitive tops such as sex, religion or politics during the interview, and restrict the beverage consumption to one glass of wine.

"It is a job interview dinner, not a party," Pesci said. "When people slouch, they're most likely to make mistakes that will (affect) their jobs."

Other tips included start passing the items from the right hand side, kindly remind other people if they have food on their faces.

"People probably appreciate it more if you tell them that they have food on their faces than not." Roberts said.

The two instructors suggested not to eat large mouthfuls of food and chew quickly so students can still answer their future bosses' questions. After the dinner, the two said, remember to put the silverware in a four o'clock position to notify the servers.

"The four o'clock position is also easy for servants to grab the dishes and cutlery at the same time." Roberts added.

"It's not a deal, but it is a break," Roberts said. "It is not something that will get you the job if you have it, but it is something that will cost you the job if you don't have it."

Emma Goff, junior in family studies and human services, said she had a different view of interview meals after the workshop.

"I learned formal dinning is more social than it's about being full," Goff said. "Looking good while you're dinning speaks for your characters and self-control."

Goff said she associated the workshop with her future career.

"I'm a financial planning major. A lot of out business deals with eating and dinning," Goff said. "This was helpful in learning how to best present yourself to future employers."

State representatives deliver presentation on communication

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three current state representatives, one former representative and one community activist congregated at the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce on Thursday night for a forum on constituent communication.

Sen. Roger Reitz, R-Manhattan., district 22; Rep. Tom Hawk, D-Manhattan., district 67; and Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, district 66, discussed government happenings and the importance of citizen communications in a panel discussion moderated by former senator Lana Oleen.

"I really appreciate hearing from my constituents," Carlin said. "I think Manhattan has one of the most active correspondence of constituents at the Capitol."

Community advocate Christopher Renner also participated in the panel discussion and gave a presentation informing citizens how to effectively communicate with elected representatives.

"Different legislators prefer different ways of communicating," Oleen said.

Carlin said he prefers telephone communication, because with so many e-mails coming in, she is likely to receive a telephone message before an e-mail, she said. However, there are several ways for the public to contact her if they have feedback.

"Call me, write me a letter is fine, too – it doesn't have to be very formal," she said. "Anything that somebody mentions to me, I try to get back to them."

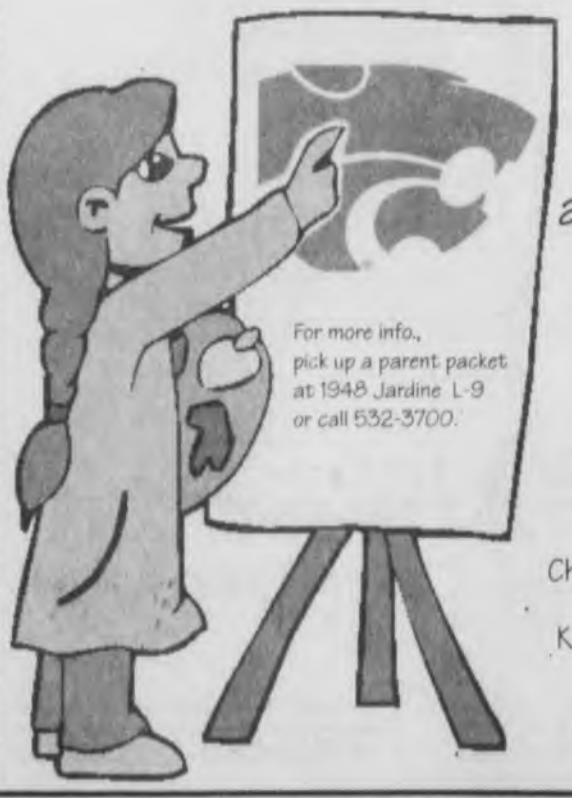
Specific interest groups who make appointments to lobby the legislature to share specific ideas or concerns are also very effective. The organizations that represent public concerns do a very good job, Carlin said.

Hawk, however, prefers e-mail as a primary form of constituent communication, because he has three computers and checks his accounts multiple times each day, he said. Hawk also appreciates phone calls and loves it when people make an appointment to meet in person, he said.

Reitz did not specify any particular communication device of choice, but makes an effort to respond to all correspondents the same day he is contacted, he said.

"If I get an e-mail, I send an e-mail back the same day. If I get a 39-cent stamp, I get a 39-cent stamp out the same day," he said. "I have two phone lines into my office– If I'm not there, I'll call you back."

It is important that the citizens schedule an appointment ahead of time, Hawk said.



If a personal meeting is scheduled, there are several things a constituent needs to prepare, such as selecting points to discuss, deciding who will attend the meeting and deciding what the outcome goal is, Renner said in his presentation.

It also is important to be well-informed, he said.

"I think it's really important to use multiple sources of information when you're contacting the legislator because there's a lot of propaganda out there and it's not necessarily written in your best interest," Renner said.

PEACE CORPS | Volunteers share experiences patient, committed and have a sincere desire to serve others, Springer said.

The application process consists of an application and interview process, and, if chosen, one will have six to 12 months from the time of the application to the time of departure.

Next, there is training to acquire knowledge of the country, language and culture, and to train for the job assigned. Then begins the two years of service, with 48 days of paid vacation, a $6,075-readjustment payment after returning to the United States and other benefits.

Nathan Kettle, assistant specialist in geography, is the most recent K-Stater most to return from the Peace Corps. He served from 2003-05 in Gambia, Africa, in a village of 600 people. Living in a single-room, mud block hut, Kettle said he did most of his activities with his host family.

"I loved my time there, especially going to the market, where I would sometimes spend 15 minutes buying a mango," Kettle said. "You get to talking to the people, joking around and sharing proverbs, and then they ask you to marry their daughter. You tell them you have no goat and no money, so you can't marry her, and it turns into a very humorous and positive experience."

Kettle said he worked with agriforestry extension, where he helped develop crops and gardens.

He also worked with children on art, math and geography. Together with his class, they made a mural, and after they were finished, he said they threw a "spaghetti party," which the children had never tasted before.

"It's important to integrate yourself into the community," Kettle said.

"We carved pumpkins on Halloween together. I learned a lot about their culture, and they also learned about mine."

Many of the people at the anniversary event had intentions, or had already begun, to apply for the Peace Corps. Among these was Sarah Kaiser, a senior in social work. Kaiser is just beginning her application process and attended the event to learn more.

"I'm interested in the Peace Corps because of the opportunity it would provide me," Kaiser said.

"I would love to go overseas, and live and experience other cultures. If I could go anywhere, I would go to Asia. It would be a great opportunity to learn, stretch, and grow."

(Kathleen) Sebelius, and Sydney Carlin and Tom Hawk (to the Kansas State Congress, representing the 66th and 67th districts, respectfully)."

Smethers said he will attend the banquet, and he believes Obama is an excellent choice for keynote speaker.

According to the Kansas Democratic Party's Web site, the theme for Washington Days, and for 2006, will be Hope in the Heartland. Frances Gorman, communications director for the Kansas Democratic Party, said the theme is straightforward and to the point.

"What we're working for is continuing hope for the people of Kansas in an election year," Gorman said, "hope for a better future, and progress."

Gorman said this theme has gained popularity with Kansas democrats and republicans.

"We've had support from both parties," she said. "A number of republicans have switched parties, and many republicans openly support our candidates this year."

One republican-turned-democrat is Johnson County District Attorney and Kansas attorney general candidate Paul Morrison. According to www.ksdp.org, Morrison will be the keynote speaker at the Washington Days Veterans luncheon at 12:30 p.m. Saturday at the Ramada Inn Downtown. Morrison will face current Kansas attorney general Phill Kline in this year's election.

Gorman said Obama decided to come to Topeka in January and announced he would attend in February.

"We just asked him to come and he accepted," she said. "Our governor and chairman (Lawrence Gates) worked really hard to get him to come."

KANSAS | Saturday's home game will be seniors' last

developed into offensive weapons, and K-State, like Kansas, has sharpened its transition game.

Away from the ball, the Wildcats are third in the Big 12 in field-goal percentage defense, holding opponents to 39.7 percent shooting from the field with their tight man-to-man.

Their one-point losses to No. 6 Texas and No. 19 Oklahoma in the past 10 days are a testament to the Cats' defense, Thomas said.

"We've been playing our best basketball since the Colorado game, even though we haven't won some of the games," Thomas said.

And the Wildcats think they can carry this momentum into Saturday. Not only is the idea of a Kansas sweep exciting, but it's senior day for Thomas and senior Dramane Diarra, marking the last home game.

"It's exciting, just because it's my last night in Bramlage, my family will be there, we're playing KU," Thomas said. "I don't know who picked the schedule, but they were looking out for Dramane and me and the other seniors."

Despite the different highs and lows both teams have endured to get to the second Sunflower Showdown of the season, both Kansas and K-State enter Saturday's contest with something on the line.

For the Jayhawks, it is the Big 12 title. For the Cats, it's a National Invitational Tournament bid and perhaps a little security for coach Jim Wooldridge's job.

"I don't know nothing about that," Martin said in reference to a Kansas win and Wooldridge's job status. "I'm not the man upstairs."

Post season, on the other hand, most likely will be determined by a second win against the Jayhawks, Martin said.

"I think it's dependent on that and going to the Big 12 Tournament," Martin said. "We are fighting for a lot right now. We're looking to make something out of it."

WOOLDRIDGE | Basketball coach's job not secure

we didn't," Weiser said in a Collegian article last March. "When we looked at it as a whole, there was more reason to go forward than to start over."

Well, a year later, the Cats haven't improved much, if any.

Last year at this time they were 15-11 overall and 5-9 in the Big 12.

But if K-State can defeat No. 18 Kansas Saturday – a tall task, but in the realm of possibility – Wooldridge will have some leverage.

It would be hard to fire a man who did something no K-State coach could do in 23 years – sweep KU.

If K-State can sweep KU for the first time since 1983, firing Wooly would all of a sudden be extremely unpopular among K-State fans, and Weiser undoubtedly doesn't want to upset the fans.

Wooldridge already has his share of supporters. I know of about 20 students with T-shirts that read, "We support Coach Wooldridge," and I know others who love the guy.

Still, even if K-State can upset KU again, it's hard to say Wooldridge's job is completely secure.

"We'll never measure our program by NIT games," Weiser once said. "Our expectations exceed that."

The only certainty: If K-State loses Saturday and doesn't make some noise in the Big 12 Tournament, it will be a long off-season for Coach Wooldridge.

Coach not thinking about job after loss

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A victory against intrastate-rival Kansas on Saturday might have deflected post-game questions about the possibility of Coach Jim Wooldridge resigning or being fired.

But the 66-52 loss to the Jayhawks opened the floodgates to numerous questions concerning when or if Wooldridge will resign.

Wooldridge and his players were asked numerous times about whether there will be a new Wildcat coach next year, and they attempted to dodge the questions with various answers.

After the game, senior Dramane Diarra was questioned about what he thinks K-State needs to do the rest of the season in order to keep Wooldridge around for at least another year, and he did not hesitate with his response.

"Postseason," Diarra said. "Either NIT or NCAA."

Junior Cartier Martin agreed with Diarra but said Wooldridge has not talked about his future with the players. Martin also made clear who he wants to play for next year.

"Just like my man said, postseason play," Martin said. "And possibly win a few games in the Big 12 Tournament coming up next week.

"It is not my decision, but if it was, I would definitely keep him around because I enjoy having Coach Wooldridge here."

Wooldridge was not concerned about his job status Saturday evening and wanted to make sure everyone knew he was not thinking about next year. Right now, he is thinking about the Big 12 Conference Tournament and his team's confidence heading down to Dallas to face Texas Tech on Thursday, he said.

"We have a positive thing going

Attorney general candidate speaks

By Owen Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

TOPEKA – Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison was the guest speaker for the Kansas Democratic Party's Washington Days Veterans' luncheon on Saturday.

Morrison has received media attention since he became a Democrat last year, after serving as the Johnson County district attorney as a Republican for 17 years. Morrison is the Democratic candidate for Kansas attorney general. Morrison will challenge incumbent Phill Kline, a Republican, in this year's election.

In his speech, Morrison said Kline lacked a legal career before being elected in 2002 and said he realized the difference between himself and Kline in December 2005.

"That day, our attorney general was in Washington, D.C., because that day the Kansas death penalty was up for review by (the U.S. Supreme Court)," Morrison said. "When Phill went to Washington, it was clearly an orchestrated event, because the were camera crews outside that building."

Morrison said Kline spent thousands of tax dollars to prepare himself for his appearance before the Supreme Court.

"Our attorney general really had nothing to do with the trying of that

Kansas House passes sex ed bill

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A bill that would require Kansas school districts to provide sex education passed the House last week with a vote of 27-13.

If passed, the bill will enact the Abstinence Plus Education Act. Schools would be required to provide comprehensive education in sexuality – emphasizing abstinence and providing information about sexually transmitted diseases.

The bill includes a procedure by which children could be excused from this education at the request of a parent.

Sen. Kay O'Connor, R-Olathe, said she opposed the bill.

"My biggest reason for voting against it is the loss of parental control in the situation," O'Connor said. "Some do-gooder types decided they wanted to (provide sex education) in statutes, and that's not right."

O'Connor said it is not the Kansas Legislature's job to determine the type of sex education students should receive.

"We don't have to have statutory requirements to put that type of burden on our public schools or any other schools accredited in the state of Kansas," O'Connor said. "I think that is totally inappropriate, and we should let the board of education do their job."

O'Connor said she also did not agree with the language of the bill that U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., shakes hands with Larry Gates, chairman of the Kansas Democratic Party, as Gov. Kathleen Sebelius laughs after Obama's speech at Washington Days 2006 in Topeka. Obama was greeted with a standing ovation from more than 1,100 audience members.

Senator addresses large national change, education

TOPEKA – Americans believe the country has arrived at a time when something must change, U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., said.

Obama was in Topeka on Friday as the keynote speaker for the Kansas Democratic Party's Washington Days banquet.

U.S. Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., takes off his tie after his speech Friday night. As part of Washington Days tradition, the featured speaker signs his tie for the auction.

In his speech, Obama said many Americans are tired of leaders who are long on rhetoric and short on substance.

"These are Americans who still believe that anything is possible, they just don't think that their leaders do," Obama said. "These are Americans who still dream big dreams, they just sense that their leaders have forgotten how."

As Obama approached the podium to speak, an audience of about 1,100 gave him a standing ovation. Democrats on stage with Obama included U.S. Rep. Dennis Moore, D-Kan.; Kansas Democratic Party chairman Larry Gates and Gov. Kathleen Sebelius.

Obama has been called a rising star in the national Democratic party and a rising star in Washington, D.C., a title that was reiterated at Friday's banquet.

Sebelius introduced Obama, complimenting his work helping Americans who live in poverty.

"If you Google 'Obama' and 'rising star,' you'll get 54,000 hits," Sebelius said, "but if you Google 'Obama' and 'poverty,' you'll get 350,000 hits. Because as this star has been rising, Barack Obama hasn't forgotten that the duty of all of us is to help lift up those who have not received the same blessings that we have."

Sebelius said Obama was a leading voice for families, children and opportunity. Sebelius also informally named Obama Kansas' honorary third senator, since Obama's mother and grandmother were both from Kansas.

Obama said technological advancements have raised the

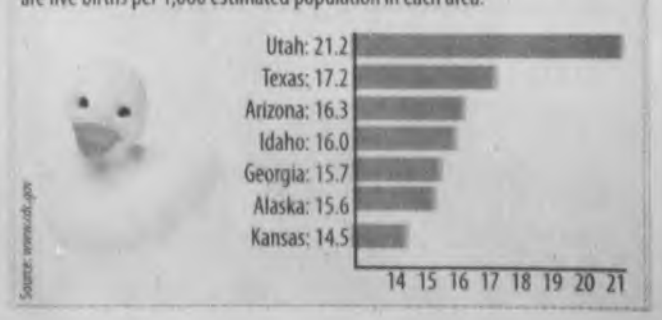
Tillman death

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Army said Saturday it will launch a criminal investigation into the April 2004 death of Pat Tillman, the former professional football player who was shot to death by fellow soldiers in Afghanistan in what previous Army reviews had concluded was an accidental shooting. An Army spokesman said the matter had been reviewed, and it was concluded that a criminal probe was warranted.

AT&T buys BellSouth



ATLANTA — AT&T Inc. is buying BellSouth Corp. for $67 billion in stock in a bid that further consolidates the telecommunications industry and will give AT&T total control of their growing joint venture, Cingular Wireless LLC. The proposed purchase, announced Sunday, also goes a long way toward resurrecting the old Ma Bell telephone system, which was broken apart in 1984.

Politicians turn up heat

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Sunni Arab and Kurdish politicians turned up the heat Sunday on Shiite Prime Minister Ibrahim al-Jaafari to abandon his bid for a new term, while leaders of Iraq's Shiite majority struggled to paper over growing internal divisions. There were reports the new parliament would be called into session for the first time as early as the end of the week.

WEEK IN REVIEW

7 things you didn't know 7 days ago

Senate passes Patriot Act

The Senate's passage of the USA Patriot Act hands President Bush a victory in his troubled second term and allows the Republicans to polish their tough-on-terror image for the midterm elections.

The 89-10 vote on Thursday was months overdue and came only after a Democrat-led filibuster that attracted GOP support forced Bush to accept modest curbs on the government's power to investigate suspects in terror probes.

CHEATING ON TAXES A TABOO

If you knew your neighbors cheated on their taxes, should you turn them in? More than three out of five people surveyed by the IRS Oversight Board said you should.

The board, which provides independent oversight and advice for the Internal Revenue Service, found 62 percent of people surveyed completely or mostly agreed that "it is everyone's personal responsibility to report anyone who cheats on their taxes."

That's more than the year before, when 53 percent agreed with that view.

POLICE FIND ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS

A moving van carrying 12 illegal immigrants was stopped for minor traffic violations in Wichita, but local authorities released the occupants after immigration officials said they were too busy to handle the case, the Sedgwick County Sheriff's Office said Friday.

The Wichita traffic stop Thursday comes less than two weeks after the fatal crash of a small pickup truck in southwestern Kansas near Rolla carrying 19 illegal aliens. Three died and 16 others were injured.

AUTHOR UNVEILS BOOK SIGNER

Atwood
AUTHOR

Tired of grueling book tours, the author on Sunday unveiled her new invention: a remote-controlled pen that allows writers to sign books for fans from thousands of miles away.

Some fear Atwood's LongPen could end the personal contact between writers and readers. Atwood says it will enhance the relationship.

GROUP WANTS LEGISLATOR RECALL

Several south-central legislators who say they oppose gambling are the targets of a recall effort because they accepted campaign contributions from northern Kansas Indian casinos.

A group called Citizens 4 Recall announced the recall effort Friday, saying the legislators were guilty of misconduct, one of three grounds for recalling a state lawmaker.

The Wichita Eagle reported earlier this year that 19 legislators who signed an August letter to Sedgwick County commissioners urging them to reject putting a gambling referendum on the ballot received a total of $44,000 in campaign contributions from existing casinos.

TECHNOLOGY TARGETS ILLITERATE

Working with a local advocacy group, Microsoft has developed a prototype of a system that would connect illiterate domestic workers in India with families seeking their services.

The system uses pictures, video and voice commands to tell women what jobs are available, how much the jobs pay and where they are.

The goal is to help the women see how technology can make finding work efficient.

WHISTLE-BLOWER BOEING LAWSUIT

A federal court dismissed much of a whistle-blower lawsuit claiming commercial and military planes built by The Boeing Co. contain "bogus parts" and should be grounded, but kept the lawsuit alive on allegations that the company retaliated against employees.

The federal lawsuit alleges Los Angeles-based supplier Ducommun Inc. falsified records and supplied defective and nonconforming parts that were assembled into Boeing aircraft.

The employees, all members of an internal audit team, further allege Boeing retaliated against them for voicing concern about their findings and filing the original 2002 case.

A Tibetan Buddhist monk places a few grains of sand from the sand art mandala and places it on top of his head.

Tibetan monks dismantle artwork

By Adam Monroe
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On Friday, Buddhist monks from Tibet displayed a sand art mandala in the K-State Student Union. The project took several monks more than 16 hours of work and two days to complete.

"This mandala represents the deity 'White Tara,'" Tibetan monk Thupten Tendhar said.

The deity "White Tara" represents longevity, many of the monks said. The art was assembled in the Union to celebrate the Union's 50th anniversary.

The monks performed an opening ceremony Wednesday and then began working on the art.

"The first step in making the art is to lay down lines and etch them in," Jean Paul, tour road manager, said.

The monks did this with chalked strings. Two of them held each side of a string across the table, pulled the string up, and snapped it down to leave a straight chalk line. Eventually these lines became an intricate grid on which they began dropping sand.

The closing ceremonies began with Tibetan music and a sung prayer.

Tibetan music incorporates throat singing, which requires the monks to use sub-vocal chords deep in the throat. The sound produced is a deep growling sound.

"It was a trip," Loaiza said. "The throat singing really came from the soul."

After singing the prayer, one monk stepped forward and stood before the mandala. He rhythmically rang a small hand bell and then cut a line directly through the center of the mandala. He circled it twice and made four total cuts while ringing the bell.

He returned to the group of monks, and another monk stepped forward with a paint brush. This monk swept the smooth sand into a pile.

"It just hurt my heart when they dismantled the mandala," onlooker Kahlen Ryloa said.

Ryloa said she was in the Union participating in a metallurgy and jewelry workshop and broke early for lunch to watch the ceremony.

"The monks were so calm and I was thinking, 'Don't do it.' I could actually feel the energy of the room change," Ryloa said.

According to the informational pamphlet distributed by the monks, the mandala is dismantled upon completion to symbolize the impermanence of all that exists. Normally, monks sweep the colored sands and pour them into a nearby river so the waters can carry the sand's healing energies throughout the world.

In the Union, monks gathered the majority of the sand one teaspoon at a time and placed it into small plastic bags to distribute to the crowd of onlookers.

"I'm happy to have some Tibetan sand in my hand," Loaiza said.

Ryloa said she plans to help the monks spread the sand's healing energies throughout the world.

"I'm going to send my sand to a friend in Pennsylvania," Ryloa said.

The monks are in the United States with an organization known as the Drepung Loseling Monastery.

"We have three main purposes for our journey here," Tendhar said. "We want to share ancient Tibetan art worldwide, get more awareness toward the situation in Tibet and gather support for all Tibetan refugees."

China invaded Tibet in 1959 and, since then, ancient monasteries have been destroyed, Buddhist practitioners have died, and the leader of their faith, the Dalai Lama, has become a refugee, Tendhar said.

"The United States has been helpful to our situation," he said. "Some of the Tibetan military was trained in Colorado."

Tendhar said the monks' journey will take a little more than a year.

"We've already been to Georgia, Utah, Florida, New Mexico, Texas, New York and Massachusetts, among other places," Tendhar said. "It's been a lot of fun. We do group meditations while we are driving and play a lot of basketball."

Students present grad research

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 11th annual graduate research forum took place Friday in the K-State Student Union.

The forum included four sessions for graduate research and one session for undergraduate research. These projects were presented through oral presentation or posters.

Bala Thiagarajan, president of the Graduate Student Council and chair of the Research Forum Committee, said the event served its purpose.

"We had a lot of students participate, and we didn't have any problems," Thiagarajan said. "We publicized the event more, and lots of people stopped by, which was important."

Three graduate faculty members evaluated each graduate session. Post-doctoral fellows evaluated undergraduates

The awards ceremony was in the Union Big 12 Room, and each session received three awards in the form of gift cards to the Union. First place received $150, second place received $100 and third place received $50.

Thiagarajan said the graduate research forum serves as encouragement for undergraduate students.

"For a lot of undergraduates, this is the first time they have shown their work, and it's a good experience," Thiagarajan said. "It gives people more reasons to go to graduate schools ,and it encourages them to learn more about research methods."

Julie-Renee Scuka Kabriel received first place in the undergraduate session for her research project, "Differential Rearing Conditions and Operant Responding for Ethanol in Rats."

Kabriel, senior in psychology, said she was surprised she received first place.

"I am shocked but excited," Kabriel said. "Everyone did such a great job, I can't imagine it was easy to pick."

Kabriel said this was her first time presenting at the graduate research forum and said her favorite part of the experience was working on her research.

"I worked with an amazing team," Kabriel said. "The best part was getting to be a part of that team environment and getting the results for the experiment."

Pung said he had not presented his research before and was shocked to receive second place.

"I pretty much didn't believe it," Pung said. "I pictured myself fourth or fifth place."

Pung said he enjoyed researching his project and plans to continue research as long as the opportunity is available.

"I just love knowing that what I'm doing is breaking ground and developing new technology," Pung said.

Anna Getchell, graduate student in grain science, won first place for the agriculture session. Getchell presented the research project "Effectiveness of Dry Formulation of Spinosad on Commercial Dog Food and Pelleted Chicken Feed Against Store-Grain Insects."

Getchell said she has been working on her research for two years and was pleased receive first place.

"It was awesome," Getchell said. "I was just very surprised."

Getchell said her favorite part of research is problem solving.

"I just love finding a problem and working through it," Getchell said.

"The great thing about the research forum is you get to see what other students are doing with their research."

Thiagarajan said students use the forum as preparation for their graduate studies.

"It gives them good ideas to the different types of research there are, and it helps them with their own graduate studies," Thiagarajan said.

The posters displayed at the Graduate Research Forum will be displayed Wednesday in the capitol in Topeka.

"This gets the Legislature and public informed of how graduates benefit the state of Kansas," Thiagarajan said.

TO THE POINT

Sex education is a job for parents, school

Educating Kansas children about sex, abstinence and the dangers of sexually transmitted diseases should be a priority for parents and educators alike.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

With the Kansas House's passage last week of a bill requiring sex education in Kansas school districts, the state moved closer to assuring children of this state receive information they should know.

The Abstinence Plus Education Act would provide Kansas schoolchildren a formal atmosphere in which their questions would be answered and their awareness would be raised, giving those children an opportunity to gain understanding and insight they might not receive anywhere else.

Of course, parental guidance is a must. The Abstinence Plus Education Act should be a compliment to a child's parent or parents sitting down with them and explaining sex before it becomes a non-issue or it's too late.

Parents should have the choice to remove their child from these sex education classes, but in instances where a parent does not feel comfortable talking about sex with their child, or a parent is not present, the next best thing would be for the child to receive formal education about sex.

Requiring Kansas school districts to educate children about sex and what it means to be abstinent is a positive thing, and the Abstinence Plus Education Act should be enacted.

Save a horse

USDA should follow Congress, ban slaughter

MEGAN GREEN

I have been horseback riding since I was, according to my mother, 12 months old. There hasn't been a time in my life when horses have not been a part of my family.

I've worked at horseback riding camps, and my mother is the executive director of a non-profit organization where horseback riding helps children with disabilities regain the use of some of their body parts and motor skills. I've always enjoyed being near these amazing creatures.

While I was studying abroad in Italy last year, we were served horse meat by the school's cafeteria. At first I didn't think of it as completely odd. People in Italy, France, Belgium, Holland and Japan eat horse meat regularly. I actually thought it was interesting.

It also made me think a little more.

I would never want my horse to be eaten. This past week I received an e-mail from the Humane Society of the United States detailing the recent problem of horse slaughter and since then, my view of eating horse meat as being interesting has changed to being utter disgust.

I believe it is completely un-American to eat horse meat, just like I would never expect to eat dog meat, and I don't think many Americans disagree.

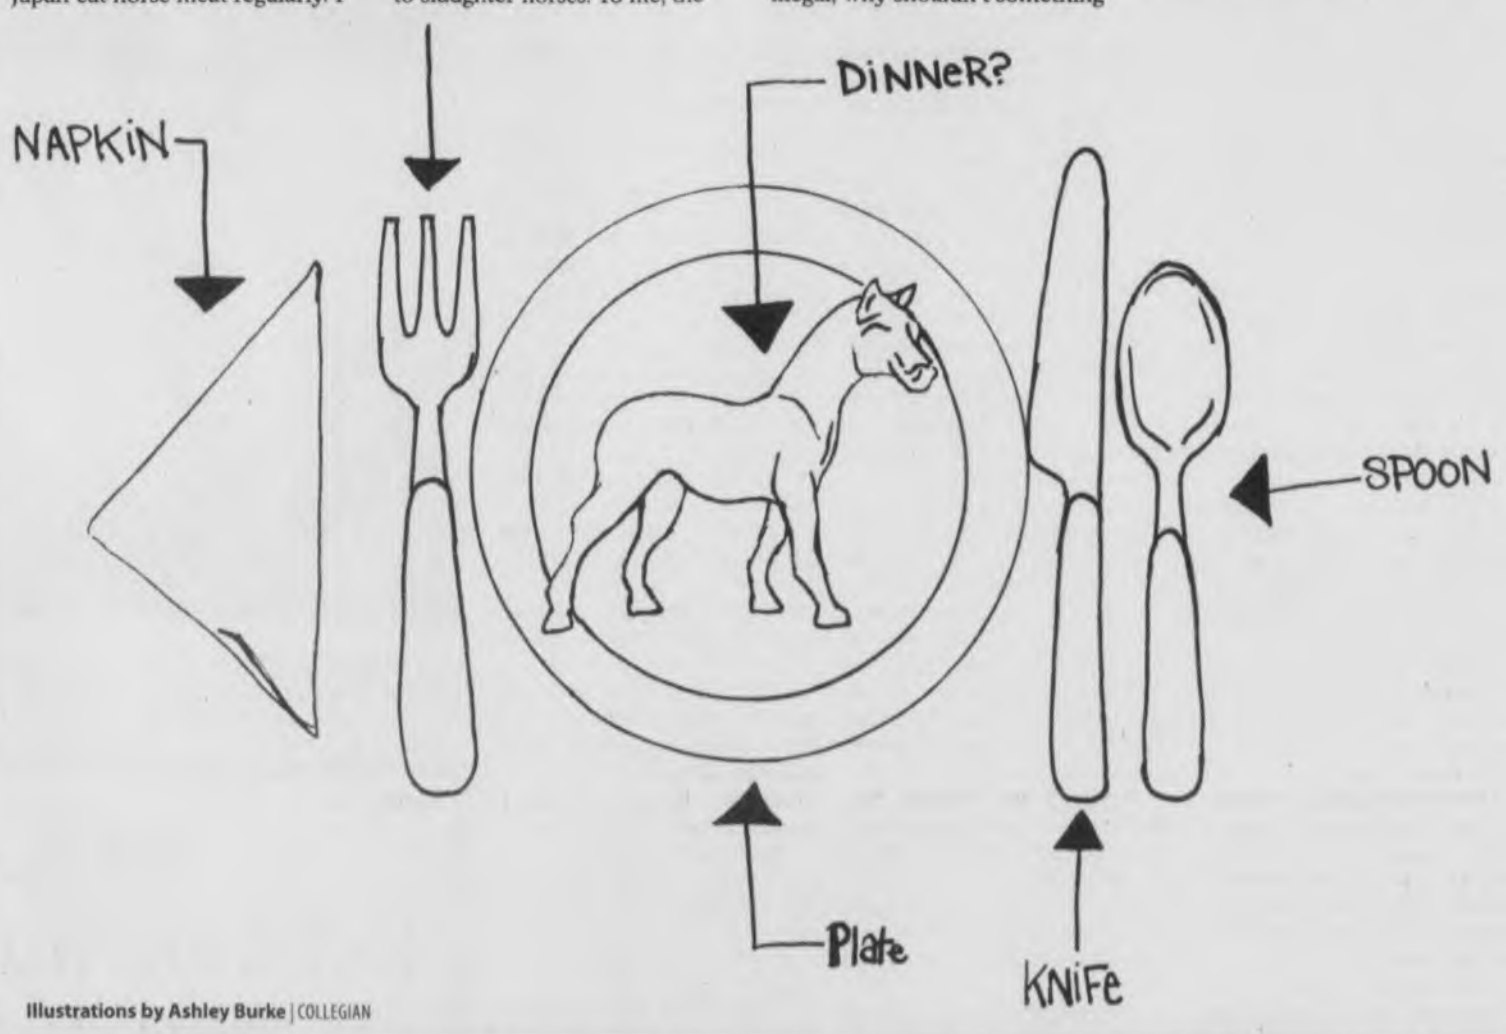
According to the Humane Society, last year Congress passed a law saying that Americans' tax money will not be spent promoting horse slaughter.

Now, the U.S. Department of Agriculture has gone against this mandate and decided to go around the law and continue to slaughter horses. To me, the USDA is supposed to follow what Congress says, but here they are going against it.

There are three foreign-owned horse slaughter plants in the United States. The Humane Society says there are an estimated 90,000 horses slaughtered each year for meat. They are transported in double-deck trucks meant for pigs and cattle, so the horses cannot stand up fully during the long distances and are often not fed or given water the entire time.

By law, when a horse arrives to be slaughtered, it must be rendered unconscious by a metal rod shot into its head. However, this is not always effective and the horse remains conscious as it is lifted into the air by its rear legs to have its throat cut.

How is this humane? And why is part of our government deciding it's OK to be done?



Horse slaughter must be banned. Just like animal cruelty is illegal, why shouldn't something this horrible be unlawful as well?

I am outraged that the USDA has gone this route to continue horse slaughtering. The USDA's name implies it represents the United States, not foreign countries, so why is the USDA taking the side of foreign countries and helping them destroy these beautiful creatures?

I am happy Congress has taken a stand against horse slaughtering, but the rest of the government should follow.

There is a way for American citizens to take a stand: log onto the Humane Society Web site and put your name on a letter that will be sent to the USDA Friday. Each part will help and hopefully we can enforce the ban on horse slaughtering.

Sidewalks overtaking grass, dirt pathways

LACEY D. MACKEY

My feet love nature.

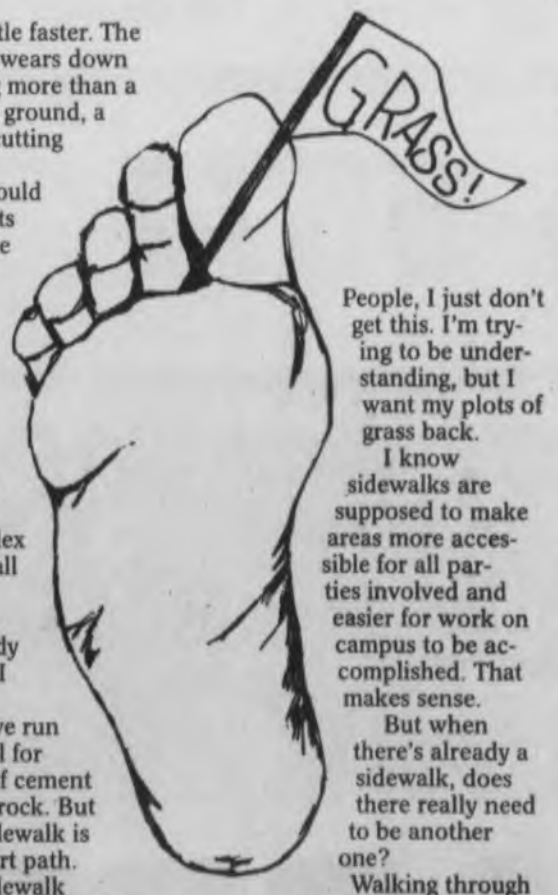
When the sun is shining and the sky is blue, the green grass is tantalizing to the toes. I just want to throw off my $2 Wal-Mart flip-flops and walk through the grass.

There's just something about hearing the crunch of the blades underneath the soles of your feet.

Walking across campus on the grassy lawn is almost like being on a Lewis and Clark expedition. Except for not at all, but I take whatever small joys I can.

But lately, my feet have been missing the plush cushion of grass. It seems that the powers that be want to keep my feet on a more cemented path.

Everywhere I look, it seems as though another sidewalk is being laid for my walking pleasure. Except I don't feel extremely pleased.



On K-State's campus, decades of students have found quick routes cutting through the grass to make getting from point A to point B a little faster. The once green grass wears down until it is nothing more than a line of dirt in the ground, a sign of students cutting corners.

Although it would seem that students enjoy taking these somewhat untrodden routes, sidewalks are being bred on our campus like bunnies.

The most recent cement addition runs up the hill toward the Derby Complex between West Hall and Boyd Hall. But note to all: a sidewalk is already there. Shocking, I know.

Two paths have run alongside this hill for some time, one of cement and the other of rock. But a new cement sidewalk is overtaking the dirt path.

Recently, a sidewalk sprouted up in front of Moore Hall where students took a few steps through the grass when walking from the basketball courts to the parking lot.

People, I just don't get this. I'm trying to be understanding, but I want my plots of grass back.

I know sidewalks are supposed to make areas more accessible for all parties involved and easier for work on campus to be accomplished. That makes sense.

But when there's already a sidewalk, does there really need to be another one?

Walking through the grass is just so much fun. Grass is softer to walk on, and feet like the mix-up of trudging across uneven ground every once and awhile. They like the challenge.

It seems we have to have these new sidewalks, so this is my best suggestion.

We should get sidewalks covered in Astroturf.

Think about it; it's the best of both worlds. You get to walk on a level surface, and it's more accessible than plain old grass. But you still get the squishy feeling of grass-like substance under your feet. Voila, problem solved.

Also, if we do have to have sidewalks, why can't they be like the walking sidewalks you see in the airport?

Of course, walking to class is my main source of exercise, so that would kind of defeat my whole game plan for staying fit. Okay, we can scrap that idea.

While I might be complaining, I do appreciate all the people that spend hours laying those paths.

Despite my attitude, I walk on them all the time, and when it's a muddy day, those sidewalks really keep my Mary Janes dirt-free.

Maybe I should just glue grass to the bottom of my shoes.

Ryun tours university's engineering facilities

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Rep. Jim Ryun, R-Kan., stood inches above a gigantic tank of water, then someone threw in a hair dryer.

This was not an attempt to kill the Republican who represents Kansas' second district. It was a demonstration of the purity of the water that cools K-State's nuclear reactor.

As he stuck his hand in the water and retrieved the still-blowing hair dryer, Mike Whaley, nuclear reactor facilities manager, said the absence of minerals in the water prevents the water from conducting a charge.

The visit to the reactor was part of Ryun's tour of K-State's engineering facilities, which emphasized the nuclear and chemical engineering programs.

K-State's reactor is the only research reactor in Kansas, and modern research is closely correlated with petroleum, Whaley said.

Given that the U.S. Energy Information Agency's Web site ranks Kansas ninth nationwide in crude oil production (including offshore areas), staying on top of petroleum-related research could be important for state growth.

Whaley explained some of the details of managing the reactor along with some of the research to which the reactor contributes.

Some of the work being done involves development of more sensitive neutron detectors that cost about $20 each and are about the size of a flashlight.

In time, the units could be fitted to cargo containers coming into ports and even to individual soldiers who would then serve as roving radiation detectors, Whaley said.

"Everything that emits neutrons is a controlled substance ... so if we're detecting neutrons, we're detecting a possible bomb," Whaley said.

After leaving the nuclear facilities Ryun visited the chemical engineering building where he spoke with researchers working on topics from the transformation of Canola oil into bio-fuel, more efficient light-emitting devices and hydrogen fuel cells.

Much of the current research involves ethanol and corn-based fuel alternatives, but some K-State research largely focuses on the possibilities of sorghum, a hefty portion of Kansas agriculture.

Although the science behind these innovations is solid, at present, high costs are a hindrance to their usefulness. However Ryun stressed the need to continue research, especially in the realm of energy production and conservation.

"Right now we're all gasping at $68-plus a barrel, and that may go higher. If it does, it will have an impact on all of us," Ryun said. "So it's very important what's going on here."

Ryun also said research for national security and the American competitiveness will be essential in securing future funding.

"On a scientific level, our scientists and engineers are known around the world, but that doesn't always translate into visibility in the halls of Congress."

Terry King
COLLEGE OF ENGINEERING DEAN

The significance of making K-State's work visible on the national level is an important task, said Terry King, dean of the College of Engineering.

"On a scientific level, our scientists and engineers are known around the world, but that doesn't always translate into visibility in the halls of Congress," King said, "so I think it's very useful."

Ryun said the work by the engineers and scientists at K-State affects more places than Manhattan.

Possible applications for national security and reaching self-sufficiency in fuel production mean the work could have far-reaching effects.

"I know there are a lot of things still to do, but all of this is very significant for K-State, and it's research for our country as well," he said.

Public Legislature Forum addresses taxes and education

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Taxes and education were two of several topics discussed at the Public Legislature Forum on Saturday at Manhattan Town Center.

The purpose of the forum was to allow Manhattan-area legislators to inform the public on issues pertinent to the community and answer audience questions.

The forum was sponsored by Kansas Gas Service, AT&T and Kansas Farm Bureau.

Lee Hildebrecht, Manhattan resident, said the most important issue on his mind was property tax.

"It seems like they haven't developed a plan on that just yet," he said.

Neal Farmer from the Public Affairs Committee of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce was the moderator for the question-and-answer session.

Farmer said he thinks the taxes would be beneficial to the state as a whole but would be detrimental to smaller communities.

"Most of the comments were about taxation issues," he said., "The community wanted to know how these taxes would affect local government entities."

Other issues discussed at the forum were school finance, eminent domain and tuition for illegal aliens.

Rep. Richard Carlson, R-St. Marys, listed statistics in the handouts he distributed at the forum. The handouts contained data that listed Kansas as the 15th-highest state in rankings of local tax burden as a percent of income.

Carlson said debt has increased by 600 percent, and the children and grandchildren of Kansas will have to bear that burden.

Sen. Mark Taddiken, R-Clifton, said the main issue facing Kansas is money. He said if more money is not generated, Kansans will face massive tax increases in two years.

"There is a mandate from the Supreme Court to put more money into the K-12," he said. "We're trying to do more to fund education. We're going to expand the gaming sector," Taddiken said.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said there should be more fairness in the delivery of education. Efforts are being made to increase school funding without tax increases, she said.

"The school audit gave us a good study on the areas which needed more money," Carlin said. "The school districts which require money include Topeka, Wichita, Kansas City (Kan.), Liberal (Kan.) and Dodge City, (Kan.)."

Carlin said increased spending and new businesses in Fort Riley will have a ripple effect throughout the state.

"We need growth in the state or new revenues," she said. "Manhattan is doing well because of Fort Riley. There is increased production and housing in Fort Riley and $355 million has been introduced for start-up costs."

Government Jobs Panel available to juniors and seniors on Tuesday

By Kelsey Childress
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Government Jobs Panel, which will discuss opportunities for juniors and seniors interested in careers with state agencies will be at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in Union 207.

"(Students) will learn about how to apply for state and federal jobs," said Mary Ellen Barkley, assistant director for Career and Employment Services. "In addition, four agencies will talk specifically about their opportunities."

The agencies that will be available to discuss careers and employment positions in Kansas are the Social Security Administration, Kansas Bureau of Investigation, Kansas Department of Commerce (Travel & Tourism Division) and Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks (at Tuttle Creek State Park).

During the program, there will be an opportunity to ask questions and participate in a discussion with the representatives of the agencies.

"The first portion of the workshop will be a brief discussion of some of the key resources to use in a federal job search and tips to consider when applying," Barkley said. "This portion should last approximately 10 minutes. The remainder of the program will be each of the panelists having an opportunity to talk about what their agency does and what types of careers are available within their agency. The audience will have a chance to ask questions of the panelists."

Attending the panel is one way for students to interact with agencies they are interested in working for in the future.

"This seems like an easy way for students to learn about government jobs," Mark Benfer, senior in psychology, said. "Any student that has an interest in government jobs should definitely attend."

This year's Government Jobs Panel is different from previous years', when CES had federal agencies sit on a panel. This year, state agencies will participate instead.

"I like that state agencies are participating," said Miranda Peck, junior in family studies and human services. "That's great for those of us who would like to stay in state."

CES offers free events and programs like the panel so students can be informed when it comes to choosing their career or next job.

"Attending the Government Jobs Panel should provide a great way to learn more about careers with a state or federal agency in general and enable participants to gain more in-depth knowledge of the specific agencies that are attending," Barkley said. "The main purpose of this panel is to provide information about the agencies, help students understand the application process and learn about careers within these specific agencies."

Wildcats should be in the Dance

MICHAEL ASHFORD

It's pretty obvious what the K-State women need to accomplish this week at the Big 12 Conference Tournament to make it to a fifth-straight NCAA Tournament.

It's also clear just how daunting that task is going to be.

As the No. 7-seed, the Wildcats have to face their rival, No. 10-seed Kansas, for the second time in less than a week. Should K-State run past the Jayhawks, No. 2-seed and top 10-ranked Baylor looms in the second round.

That's just the first two rounds – a tall order for any team.

But there is no doubt this K-State squad has the talent, heart, guts and soul to get two crucial wins and secure its post-season destiny.

In a span of five days, the Wildcats played No. 9 Oklahoma and No. 10 Baylor and went toe-to-toe and point-for-point with both teams for most of the game until succumbing late.

The Wildcats followed those performances with a thorough 62-44 lashing of the Jayhawks on Thursday in Lawrence, which marked a series-record 10th-consecutive victory for the Wildcats.

As K-State (18-9, 8-8 Big 12) prepares for Kansas again, this time at a neutral site in Dallas, the players truly believe they belong in the NCAA Tournament, and they are out to prove it.

"We've got a good chance; I'm confident in this team," junior guard Claire Coggins said. "We played Baylor great when we were (at home). We finished out the game well against KU. We're not looking ahead. We want to beat KU first and then think about whoever else."

One way or another, the Wildcats will be in the postseason, whether it be the NCAA Tournament or the National Invitational Tournament. K-State Coach Deb Patterson has been assured of that much.

"Our administration is prepared to make sure we're in a tournament in the post-season, no question," Patterson said. "If not, you'd have some quotes that would really tear up this state. I'd be fired in a minute for what I had to say, before I walked out of the building probably."

But the NIT is not, and should not be, the goal.

This K-State team deserves to be in the NCAA Tournament should it pick up a win against the Jayhawks and compete well with Baylor. Sounds easy enough, right?

Look for K-State to whip Kansas on Tuesday. As for Baylor, just look to K-State's 72-69 upset against Texas in last season's tournament to see what the Wildcats are capable of doing in this craziness called March Madness.

The Wildcats are an exciting, young, dynamic group of basketball players more than ready to don that Cinderella slipper and dance their way into some upsets.

Bramlage curse continues as Kansas beats K-State

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The stage was set Saturday afternoon for the first-ever K-State win against Kansas inside 18-year-old Bramlage Coliseum and the first sweep of the Jayhawks since 1983.

Fans camped out Friday night to stand in line at 6 a.m. Saturday to get a spot for the game, in hopes of a Wildcat win over No. 18 KU.

The game was sold out, and it was senior night for Schyler Thomas, Dramane Diarra and walk-ons Mark Frederick, Josh Campbell and Kyle Taylor. Kansas Coach Bill Self even commented in his post-game locker-room show on the electric atmosphere.

The setting seemed perfect, but the outcome was far from it for K-State.

The Jayhawks – namely, freshmen Mario Chalmers, Brandon Rush and Julian Wright and sophomore Russell Robinson – had their way with the Wildcats, handing K-State a 66-52 loss.

However, Coach Jim Wooldridge said K-State (15-12, 6-10 Big 12) beat itself with unnecessary turnovers.

"This game was about turnovers, needless turnovers. You can't beat a quality opponent like KU with needless turnovers," Wooldridge said. "Our inability to play tough with the ball, move the ball, handle the ball better – that's the difference on the game.

"We self-inflicted ourselves too many times offensively."

One reason the Cats struggled on offense – committing 21 turnovers – was the Jayhawks' (22-7, 13-3) man-to-man defense, which switched countless times throughout the game, Wooldridge said.

"We saw more switching tonight than I've seen in 27 years of basketball," he said.

KU's tricky man-to-man proved to be so detrimental to K-State's offense that it went the final 11 minutes of the game without a field goal.

"We were just trying to rush baskets," said junior Cartier Martin, who paced the Cats with 17 points. "We played like we were supposed to (in first 10 minutes), but we just couldn't sustain it."

The first 10 minutes of the second half saw the Cats perform like they did in one-point losses to No. 19 Oklahoma and No. 6 Texas.

However, five Wildcat turnovers in two minutes, a 17-5 KU run – ignited by 12 Rush points (24 game-high points) – and five K-State trips to the free-throw line, coupled with no baskets, allowed the Jayhawk fans to begin cheering "Rock Chalk" with one minute left on the clock.

Although Wooldridge said he was pleased with the Wildcats' defense, K-State's weak offensive effort Saturday reminded him of the team that struggled early in the season, not the team he'd grown accustomed to in the last month, he said.

"We didn't play well today, and that's disappointing," Wooldridge said. "We almost reverted back to early-season times."

There are other controversial issues surrounding the loss to KU that many simply "don't know." The Wildcats "don't know" if they are going to the post-season. Wooldridge "doesn't" know if he's going to keep his job.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

K-State's Dramane Diarra fights for the ball with Kansas' Mario Chalmers Saturday afternoon at Bramlage Coliseum. The Wildcats fell short, loosing to the Jayhawks 66-52.

Right now, his job status doesn't concern him, though. He is focused on getting his team ready for Dallas and the Big 12 Tournament, he said.

The Cats' post-season hopes are now based on their tournament outcome. Winning the tournament would guarantee an NCAA Tournament bid, but a Big 12 Tourney title is unlikely for the Cats.

Still, Wooldridge remains optimistic about the state of his team and its future.

"We have a positive thing going. We don't feel bad about what we're doing," Wooldridge said. "We've got a good team. You might not agree with me, but I think I've got a good team. I wish I could've done better with them in certain points."

Self, whose Hawks tied with Texas as Big 12 regular-season champs, said he believes Wooldridge has done a fine job with his team.

"I think K-State's one of the best four teams in the league in the second half of the season," Self said. "I think Jim's done a great job."

The Kansas loss already is a thing of the past for the Wildcats. Senior Dramane Diarra said Saturday's game won't change the Wildcats' momentum heading into Dallas.

Baseball picks up 3 wins in weekend action

By K. Jordan Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was a battle of the felines this weekend as the K-State Wildcat baseball team took on the Panthers of Eastern Illinois.

K-State (8-1), riding a seven-game winning streak, has played three of the four scheduled games against EIU (1-5) and has outscored the opponent 31-12 so far.

After beating the Panthers both Friday and Saturday, notching 12 runs a game, Sunday's matchup proved more of a challenge as the Cats struggled to close out the game.

"It was dicey, much too close," Coach Brad Hill said. "They did a good job and didn't quit. Early on, you could feel our guys locked in, and then we lost focus.

"There was a momentum swing, and it was hard to get it back."

Although the Wildcats never relinquished the lead, the Panthers threatened early and often, but due largely in part to the efforts of sophomore lefty Chase Bayuk, a small lead was more than enough, Hill said.

Bayuk threw six strong innings, scattering just five hits and one earned run en route to improving to 2-0 on the year.

"It felt good, felt strong," Bayuk said. "We've been working a lot on pounding the strike zone and attacking hitters."

Although Bayuk did his job on the mound and sophomore pitcher Dan Edwards slammed the door in the ninth to pick up his first save of the season, the Cats struggled defensively early with two errors in the first two innings. But Bayuk took it in stride.

"That's baseball," he said. "The defense has been there, and it'll continue to be there, you just have to overcome it and make the next play."

Offensively, the Cats were streaky, putting up five runs in the second, then blanking the next four innings.

Leading the attack was junior Jared Goedert, who extended his career best, team-high and Big 12 leading hit streak to 14 games, with a line drive in the second off Panther pitcher Brandon Murphy.

"For the most part, I'm just getting good pitches to hit, but to be honest, I'm more impressed with the win streak than with the hit streak," Goedert said. "We're making plays and really coming together out there."

Also noteworthy on the offensive front for the Cats was senior Joe Roundy, who extended his hit streak to seven games, and freshman Jordan Cruz, who collected his first-career hit in the seventh inning.

K-State concludes the four-game series against Eastern Illinois at 1 p.m. today at Tointon Stadium.

BKW | K-State to face KU in Big 12 Tournament

Post-season play gets underway as seventh-seeded K-State (18-9, 8-8) travels to the 2006 Phillips 66 Big 12 Women's Basketball Championship on March 7-9 and 11 in Dallas.

As fate would have it, the Wildcats will turn around and face in-state rival and 10th-seeded Kansas (16-11, 5-11) in first round action at 6 p.m. (CT) on Tuesday, March 7.

BKC | K-State faces Texas Tech in Big 12 Tourney

K-State (15-12, 6-10 Big 12 Conference) has clinched the nine-seed at next week's Phillips 66 Big 12 Championship and will play eighth-seed Texas Tech (14-16, 6-10 Big 12) in the first game at 11:30 a.m. on Thursday, March 9 at the American Airlines Center in Dallas.

The game will be broadcast on ESPN Regional (Kansas City – KMCI; Wichita – KSAS; Topeka – WIBW) and nationally on ESPNU on Thursday morning.

TRK | 3 Wildcats tracksters set new school records

K-State athletes set three school records in their events at the ISU Last Chance leading up to next week's national meet in Fayetteville, Ark.

Senior Christian Smith set a new school record in the mile for an oversized track with a time of 3:59.60. He could move as high as ninth in the nation in the event, helping his bid for an NCAA invite.

Senior Breanna Eveland broke her own school record by four inches in the pole vault, clearing 14 feet, 5 1/4 inches. Her new height also ties her for the best jump in the nation this year with Chelsea Johnson of UCLA.

Another record was broken by Lisi Maurer in the preliminaries of the women's 60-meter hurdles. Maurer broke her own school record with a run of 8.24. For complete coverage, visit www.kstatecollegian.com.

NFL | Super Bowl to KC in 2015, if renovations pass

KANSAS CITY, Mo.— The National Football League announced Sunday that Kansas City would host Super Bowl XLIX in 2015 if voters approve a tax to renovate Arrowhead Stadium. Commissioner Paul Tagliabue addressed a meeting of team officials and civic leaders by speakerphone from New York.

Tagliabue

Tagliabue announced late last year that Kansas City would get a Super Bowl if the renovations were made and if a rolling roof was built to make Arrowhead Stadium climate-controlled.

Jackson County voters will vote on two propositions on April 4. A 3/8-cent sales tax would raise more than $500 million for renovations to Arrowhead and the Royals' Kauffman Stadium.

A separate tax would raise about $200 million to build the rolling roof, which would be used for both stadiums.

'Crash' wins Best Movie in upset over 'Brokeback Mountain'

By David Germain
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES – The ensemble drama "Crash" pulled off one of the biggest upsets in Academy Awards history, winning best picture Sunday over the cowboy romance "Brokeback Mountain," which had been the front-runner.

"Crash," featuring a huge cast in crisscrossing story lines over a chaotic 36-hour period in Los Angeles, rode a late surge of praise that lifted it past "Brokeback Mountain," a film that won most other key Hollywood honors.

"We are humbled by the other nominees in this category. You have made this year one of the most breathtaking and stunning maverick years in American cinema," "Crash" producer Cathy Schulman said.

Lead-acting prizes went to Philip Seymour Hoffman as author Truman Capote in "Capote" and Reese Witherspoon as country singer June Carter in "Walk the Line," while corporate thrillers earned supporting-performer Oscars for George Clooney in "Syriana" and Rachel Weisz in "The Constant Gardener."

"Brokeback Mountain" filmmaker Ang Lee did win the best-director prize for the tale of two old sheepherding pals who carry on a love affair they conceal from their families for years.

"I wish I knew how to quit you," Lee told the audience crowd, reiterating the film's most-quoted line.

"Oh, my goodness, I never thought I'd be here in my whole life growing up in Tennessee," said Witherspoon, who, like co-star Joaquin Phoenix as Carter's soul mate, country legend Johnny Cash, handled her own singing in "Walk the Line."

"People used to ask June how she was doing, and she would say, 'I'm just trying to matter.' I know what she means," said Witherspoon, who told the audience the Oscar made her feel she was doing work that matters.

Hoffman's performance nimbly straddles the magnetic qualities of raconteur Capote and the effete, off-putting egoism of the gay author.

"Wow, I'm in a category with some great, great, great actors, fantastic actors, and I'm overwhelmed. Really overwhelmed," said Hoffman, who asked the Oscar audience to congratulate his mother for bringing up four children alone.

Oscar organizers hoped new host Jon Stewart and the cultural buzz over front-runner "Brokeback Mountain" would beef up viewership.

The Oscars generally lure their biggest audiences in years when blockbusters such as "Titanic" or "The Lord of the Rings: The Return of the King" are favored to win.

"Brokeback Mountain," though, has become a phenomenon far beyond those who actually have seen it, entering the pop-culture psyche with its tale of cowboys in love (acting nominees Heath Ledger and Jake Gyllenhaal).

Stewart used best-picture nominee "Capote" to set up a "Brokeback Mountain" wisecrack, saying the film "showed America not all gay people are virile cowboys. Some are actually effete New York intellectuals. It's true."

'What were they thinking?' fashion moments

Best Actress nominee Keira Knightley wore a one-strap wrap of shimmer and flair. It wasn't so much her dress that won her a spot on the worst-dressed at the Oscars, it was her semi-gothic make-up. The eyes were way too dark. Better luck next time.

Best Actress nominee Charlize Theron was not going far on the red carpet with this dress. I kept waiting for her to tip over by the sheer weight from the bow. But look on the bright side, unlike co-presenter Jennifer Garner, Theron was fortunate that her dress did not nearly malfunction while on stage.

Best Actress nominee Felicity Huffman, a.k.a. Boobs McGee, should have left a little more for the imagination with this deep V-cut dress. The revealing style of the dress let audiences know she was indeed all woman.

History Day competition showcases performances, papers of local youth

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An excited "Yes!" was the response from Marlatt Elementary School sixth-graders Nicholas Martin and Sam Baker upon hearing their documentary won second place in its category at the district four National History Day competition on Saturday.

The competition was from 8 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. on the second floor of the K-State Student Union and featured exhibits, performances, historical papers and documentaries by sixth through 12th-graders in the Manhattan area.

Students could submit an entry in any category as a group or as individuals. Winners in each category were divided between the junior and senior divisions, which are middle and high school, respectively, as well as individuals and groups.

"History Day is a national event, and each state is divided into districts. (Manhattan) is district four in Kansas," said Brent Maner, assistant professor of history and coordinator of KSU History Day. "(Our district) includes Manhattan, Wamego, as far south as Abilene, and as far north as Marysville."

Maner said participation in the event ranges from 60 to 100 students year to year.

"This year we had almost 60, which is good," Maner said. "Last year we had 80."

Maner said, though teachers in some districts require their students to participate in History Day, he thinks most of the students who come to the Manhattan contest aren't there because their whole class came.

"It's really impressive, the extra time outside of class the teachers and students took to do this," he said. "I think there's a feeling (among the students) of, 'oh man, I've got to go on Saturday,' but I think they have fun, and I think it's a very positive experience for them."

Maner said what makes the K-State contest special is that there is a strong participation rate among professors and graduate students.

The theme for this year's competition was "Taking a Stand in History: People, Ideas, Events." Some of the topics presented were the Seneca Falls convention, the March of Dimes, Frank Lloyd Wright, Marian Anderson and Lance Armstrong. One exhibit featured the construction of the Tuttle Creek Dam, titled "That Dam Foolishness."

Maner said entries were judged on their historical accuracy, presentation quality and how well they related to the theme.

Judging lasted until about 11 a.m., and the awards presentation was at 12:30 p.m. in the Main Ballroom. Before coordinators announced the winners, they presented a slide show of pictures taken throughout the day.

Facilitators presented winners with a certificate and a History Day pin. Winners will advance to the state competition April 22 in Abilene, Kan., Maner said.

Honors for Teacher of the Year and Outstanding School were also awarded to Kari Young of Fort Riley Middle School, and Marlatt Elementary School, respectively.

"I was surprised, but I'm really excited about (the award)," Young said. "I'm actually more excited about coming back next year, though."

Young said she was proud of her students, and she enjoyed the experience.

"The best part is seeing these kids working so hard and then presenting their work to a professional in the field, and then to have them take an interest in what the kids are saying, and give them feedback – it's wonderful," Young said.

Martin and Baker said they were happy with the day's results.

"Before we got this award, we were so nervous," Baker said.

The boys said they were glad they chose to do a documentary, although they didn't always feel that way.

"In the beginning, it was kind of boring, but once we did the sound recording and put the video together, it was fun," Baker said.

Martin said the event was an educational experience.

"Some of the things we learned were really interesting," Martin said. "Did you know that the shadows of the people who were (directly affected) by the atomic bomb are still there?"

as a basketball team, and our players feel good about what they are doing," Wooldridge said. "There has not been this doom and gloom over the top of our heads, and the topic remains and has been dormant.

"It is just not something that we concentrate on."

Kansas Coach Bill Self understands what being a coach in the Big 12 is like, and after his team defeated the Wildcats, he commended Wooldridge on the efforts he has made with his team and also offered a compliment to the K-State coach about the team's play in the last few weeks.

"Your job in this conference is based on how well you do with the pieces that you have," Self said. "K-State has been one of the best teams in the Big 12 in the last month, but they have just lost a lot of games against tough opponents.

"I think Jim is a great coach."

Martin said some of the suspicions surrounding Wooldridge's future are based on the team's performance, and he knows what the players have to do to keep their coach around a little longer.

"A few mistakes we make on the court have kind of set us back and kept us from winning some of those close games," Martin said. "It's just up to us to go out there and get it done so we can keep him around."

The Wildcat faithful will find out whether K-State will make a postseason appearance when the National Invitational Tournament brackets are announced in the coming weeks.

MORRISON | D.A. addresses party switch

case," Morrison said in his speech. "He certainly had never tried a case, much less argued in front of any supreme court, but this was his opportunity to act like a real lawyer."

Morrison said that while Kline was in Washington, D.C., Morrison was in Topeka arguing in front of the Kansas Supreme Court, something he said he has done several times.

"That day – in so many ways – illustrates the difference between Phill Kline and myself," Morrison said in his speech. "Some might say it illustrates the difference of form versus substance."

Rep. Dennis Moore, D-Kan., introduced Morrison and told the audience about his experience working with Morrison as the Johnson County district attorney.

"I had served a total of 12 years as district attorney. Paul worked for me for eight of those years, and he did an absolutely outstanding job as a prosecutor," Moore said. "He is, I think, the best district attorney the county's (Johnson County) ever had. He's an absolute man with absolute integrity."

Morrison said he believes his race against Kline will be a tough one, but one he can win. Morrison also said he switched parties because he was unhappy with the goals and direction of the Republican party.

"It was a long time coming," Morrison said about his switch. "I feel like the party that was the Republican party 17 years ago when I became district attorney is certainly not the party that it is today. The leadership in the Republican party has been completely taken over by people that have a very narrow agenda.

"I think they've gone out of their way to make sure that everybody knows that there's not really any room for moderates in the party, at least in the positions of power within the party, and I've always been a very moderate Republican, and frankly, for the last few years I think a lot of people like me ... who are moderate Republicans have begun to feel increasingly disenfranchised by the party."

Morrison said the Democratic party has become a party for moderates and said the switch was an easy decision.

Morrison said he disapproves of Kline's decisions and his choice of issues to focus on.

Forum draws state politicians

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 100 community members and politicians gathered at Rusty's Last Chance, 1213 Moro St., Sunday night for the Take Back Kansas Forum and Oscar Night Watch Party.

Public education was the main theme discussed at this event. Kansas State Board of Education Member Sue Gamble was present to share her views of what is going on within the Kansas Board of Education and where improvements need to be made.

"It's about ideology and returning it," Gamble said. "Kansas has really good schools, and we need to keep it that way instead of weakening them."

The structure of the Board of Education includes six "ultra-conservatives" and four moderates, Gamble said during her speech, which provided a recap of the board's evolution in the past five years, she said.

Topics she discussed included the adoption of science standards that allow for supernatural explanations, the proposition to allow students to participate in sexual education courses only with a written form of parent consent and the appointment of Bob Corkins to the office of Kansas Education Commissioner.

"We have had sex ed in schools for 40 to 50 years, and the rule has always been that students could opt out if parents did not wish them to receive the education. Now, students will be opting in," Gamble said. "For the first time in an extracurricular activity, we will deny students education. We also hired an education commissioner, who in the opinion of many, is not qualified for the job."

This event was sponsored by Parents, Families and Friends of Lesbians and Gays and the Kansas Equality Coalition.

"We had a rally a year ago during the marriage amendment," said Tammi Hawk, chair of PFLAG-Flint Hills branch. "This is the first one not regarding particular issues – just progressive issues."

State legislators, state and local school board members and many state activist groups were present at the event. The theme for the event was "Taking Back Kansas," and it centered on the importance of returning government to moderate ideals.

Following the forum, refreshments were provided and guests were invited to attend an Oscar watch party, which also took place at Rusty's.

OBAMA | Speaker says public schools key to future of youths

education standards expected by American workers.

"The sweeping changes brought by revolutions in technology have torn down walls between business and government and people and places all over the globe," Obama said. "And with this new world comes new risks and new dangers, and we can't assume any longer that a high school education is guaranteed to provide a job that pays a living wage."

Obama said the expectations come because Americans no longer compete with other Americans for jobs, but with workers from other countries.

Obama said public schools are the key to helping young Americans meet new expectations in the job market. He also said public schools prepare students not only for potential jobs, but also for reaching life goals. He said the Democratic party supports the nation's public schools.

"(We are) the party that still believes that the path to our children's greatest aspirations goes through the public schools that are perfected, not dismantled," he said.

In her introduction, Sebelius said equal education is a right that should be given to every American, regardless of class, race or location.

"We must give all children the opportunity to go to a great school regardless of whether they live in Johnson City or Johnson County," Sebelius said.

In his speech, Obama addressed the ideal that the nation's government has an obligation to help its citizens, and said Americans should not fear working with the government to better themselves and others.

"We know government can't solve all of our problems, and we don't want it to," Obama said, "but we also know there are some things we can't do on our own. We know there are some things we do better together."

Obama said the time has come for Americans to make their legacy and to make the changes needed for the future.

"It's our time to mark out history; it's our time to write a new chapter in this story," he said, "our time to leave our children with a country that's freer and kinder and more prosperous and more than just a place where we grew up.

"Then someday if they get a chance to stand where we are, and look back at the beginning of the 21st century, they can say that this was a time when America renewed its purpose, that this was a time when America found its way, that this was the time when America learned to dream again, and you're a part of that big dream."

Obama took his tie off and signed it after his speech, which is a Washington Days tradition. After a keynote speaker has finished his speech, he autographs his tie, which then is auctioned off as a party fundraiser.

The final bidder was the president of the Kansas chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Jean Baptiste. Baptiste's bid was $7,000, an amount he said was worth it.

"One day, I might say, 'Look at our president, I bought his tie at a Washington Days activity,'" Baptiste said, "and one day that tie might be in the Smithsonian institute because of who he is."

Baptiste said Obama's speech was an excellent evaluation of the United States and said Obama is the epitome of an American.

"Nothing was mentioned about race tonight – he didn't come here as a person of a certain race; he came here as an American," Baptiste said.

Jeff Smith, president of the KSU Young Democrats, was at the banquet and said Obama will be an important factor in Washington, D.C. for years to come.

"He's somebody who is just getting on the national scene," Smith, senior in political science, said. "He's very confident and someone who's going to be a major player in American politics."

Smith said he liked Obama's statements that Americans can make the changes needed to prepare the country for the future.

"I liked how he said we are at a crossroads where we have to make changes for the better, but only if we have the desire and will to do so," Smith said.

SEX EDUCATION | Critics believe bill violates parents' rights stated sex education programs that were grade-appropriate would be taught at elementary and secondary levels.

"This bill was not about having a broad statement that health will be a curriculum – it actually went into very great detail," O'Connor said. "Well, tell me just what is age-appropriate for kindergartners, first-and second-graders when it comes to sex education?"

Sen. Terry Bruce, R-Hutchinson, said he voted for the bill.

"This was a close one," he said. "There were several opponents to the bill who thought the government should stay out of it."

Bruce said he does not think the bill infringed upon the rights of parents.

"It gives parents the ability to have their children not attend such classes, and I feel this is an appropriate safeguard," Bruce said.

Sue Gamble, Kansas State Board of Education member for the second district, said she does not think the bill is necessary and said there is some confusion between legislators about the position of the board on sex education.

"It is a common misconception that the board dropped sex education, but that is not true," she said. "There was never a suspension of accreditation – we simply changed the place where it is located in the regulations."

Gamble said the Kansas State Board of Education had discussions about changing sex education but it was about whether the education should be opt-in or opt-out.

Opt-in means students would only receive sex education if their parents signed a form. Opt-out is for parents who do not want their students to be taught about sex education through any school programs.

Kansas schools use a mixture of opt-in and opt-out.

"This is a local decision," Gamble said. "Even when the board approves these model standards, local standards are not bound by it."

Polls open today

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Voting begins for general elections today.

In addition to voting for student body president and vice president, students will vote for positions specific to their college.

Elections Commissioner Tanner Banion said students at K-State-Salina as well as Manhattan's campus vote for student body president and vice president.

All students, except for those at K-State-Salina, vote for the Student Publications Board of Directors and Union Governing Board positions.

Students will vote for council and senate positions within their own colleges, and K-State Salina students will also vote for their own student body president and vice president.

Voting begins at 8 a.m. today and ends at 6 p.m. Wednesday at www.k-state.edu/elections.

Student Body President Michael Burns said students should vote in general elections, especially for president and vice president.

"In the case of student body president and vice president, you are voting for two individuals that represent the student body at state and local levels," he said. "It's very important that the right person be selected for the job."

Burns said students should also vote for senators since they make decisions with student fees and tuition.

"Senate wide, there is a common misconception that they don't do anything," he said.

"Student Senate is the mechanism to make things happen."

Student involved in crash

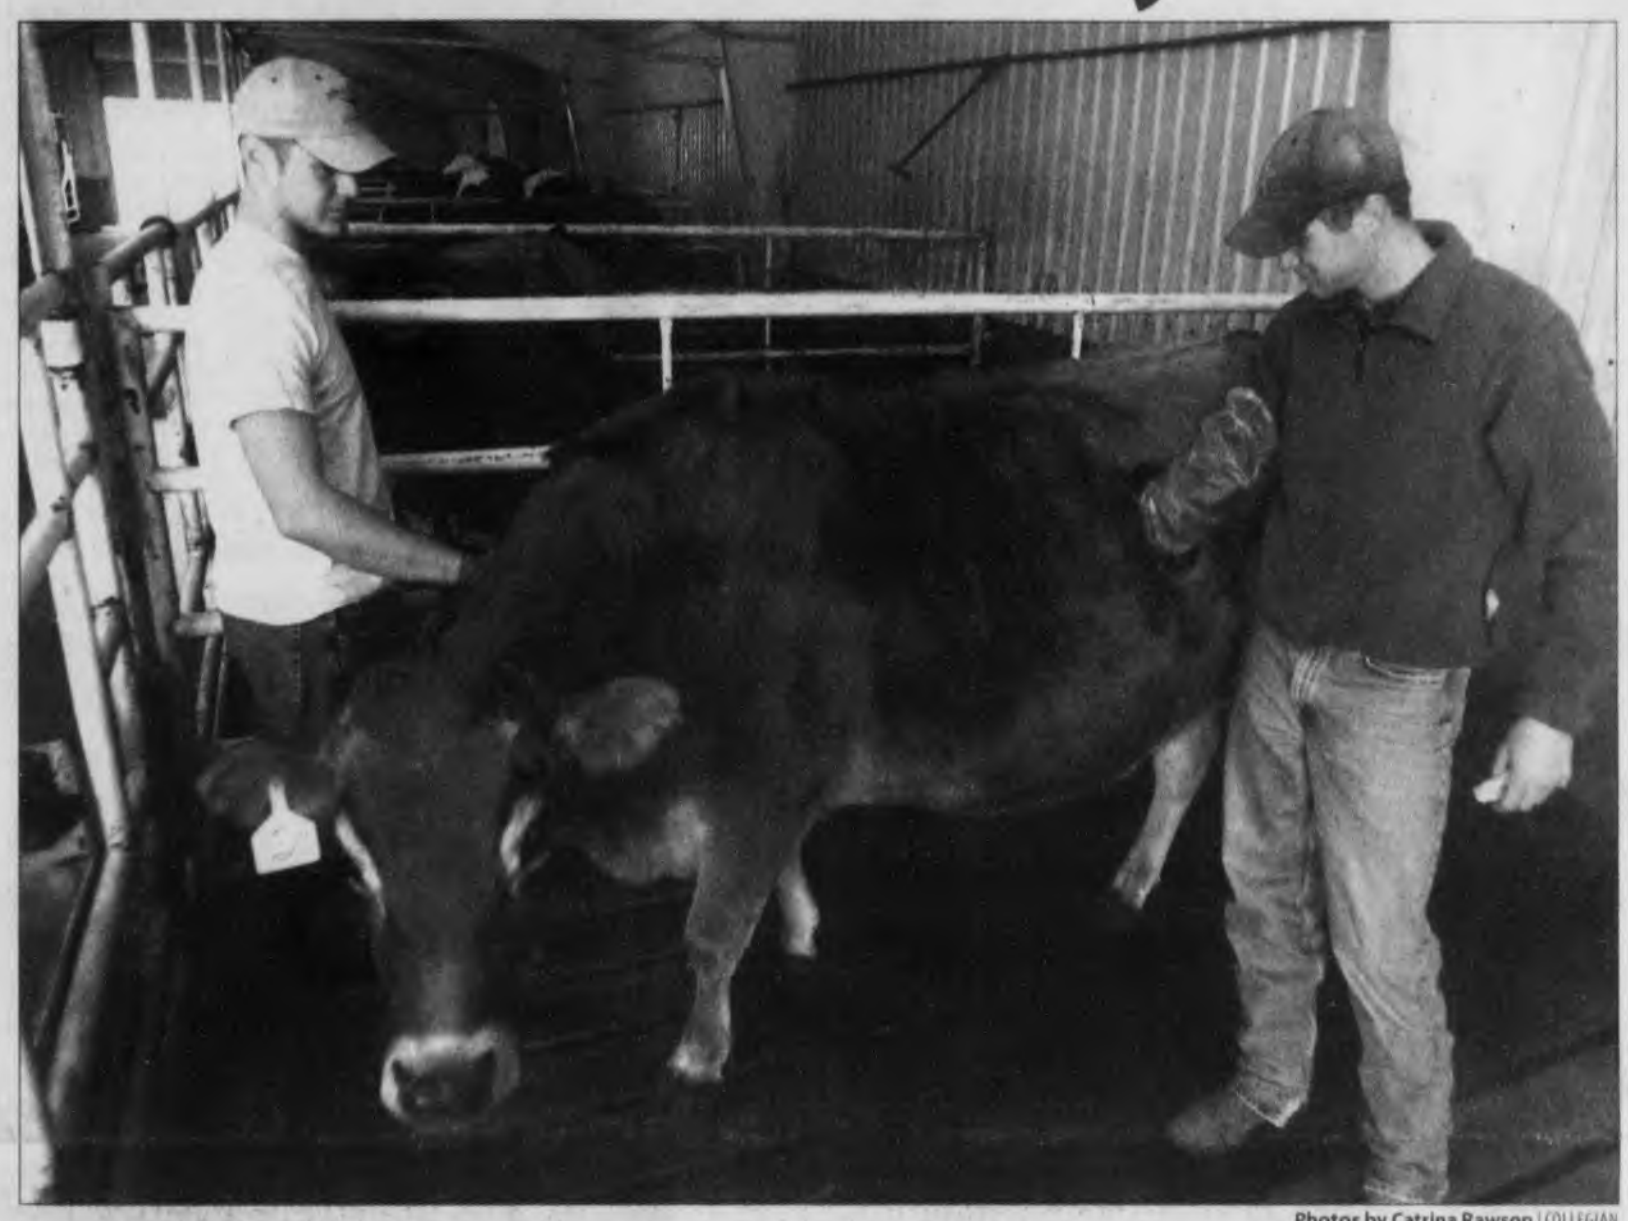
Andrew Young, junior in physics, was involved in a chase involving officers from the Riley County Police Department and the Kansas Highway Patrol, Sunday morning.

"Approximately 49 minutes after midnight an, officer on foot in the 900 block of 10th Street was speaking with another person when he hears a crash several blocks north," Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said.

The officer observed a truck sitting sideways, when the truck came toward the officer, Quintanar said.



The officer then attempted to stop the truck by stepping into the street and waving it down. The driver pulled over, then went around the officer and fled, Quintanar said.

Faculty's research projects help cows live longer, healthier lives

Located on the northeast corner of Kimball and Denison avenues are the animal pens for K-State's animal science program. There is a stable, a silo and typically a medium-sized herd of cattle.

It all seems pretty normal for Manhattan, but look closer.

What is that yellow rubbery thing on the side of that cow? Is it a tumor? Is it some kind of cow band-aid? Did an errant Frisbee somehow lodge itself in the cow's abdomen?

Actually, the little rubber discs are what animal scientists call cannulas. The purpose of a cannula is to hold in place a hole that has been surgically created in the stomach of an animal.

Greg Corbin, senior in philosophy, said he remembers the first time he saw the cannulated cows. He said he was walking in the homecoming five-kilometer race when he passed by the cattle pens.

"I saw the cows with the holes in their stomachs and had no idea what they were there for," Corbin said.

Derek Wassom, junior in biological and agricultural engineering, said he has been coming to homecoming functions at K-State since he was young and has always wondered why the cows have holes in their sides.

Evan Titgemeyer, professor of animal sciences and industry, said the purpose of the holes is to give researchers and students direct access to a cow's rumen, which is one of the cow's four stomachs.

The primary function of the holes is to allow researchers to monitor the digestion that is going on in the cow, Titgemeyer said.

By having permanent holes in the stomachs of the cattle, Titgemeyer and his colleagues are able to take samples from the cow's stomachs and put nutrients in. Inserting these nutrients allows the researchers to attempt to find what the optimum level of nutrients is for maintaining healthy and

Candidates' spending reports

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One presidential candidate pair spent more than both of last year's candidates over the past week.

Lucas and Katie Maddy spent $49.50 this week, bringing their total spending to $1,064.85.

Last year, Student Body President Michael Burns and Vice President Grant Groene spent $82.56 in the week between the primary and general elections and a total of $2,519.15. Former candidates Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner spent $101.93 and a total of $2,768.79.

Expense reports for general election candidates were due at 4 p.m. Friday.

Elections Commissioner Tanner Banion said the primary and general elections count as one in regard to expenditures.

Lucas Maddy said his main expenditure this past week was on labels and a printer cartridge, which cost $26.48.

He said the materials were for stickers that say "Who's My Maddy? I voted Maddy and Maddy," which will be distributed to people after they vote for the pair.

Elections '06

Voting for SGA general elections begins today and ends Wednesday. Vote at sgaelections.k-state.edu.

"It's a way for people to show they supported Maddy and Maddy after voting," he said.

King said his main cost was on drinks for campaign supporters at a rally at Porter's.

"It was an informal way for people to meet us in a relaxed atmosphere, and it was a friendly gesture to help out the campaign," he said.

Media group panel to sponsor SGA debate

Media Convergence Group Elections Debate

Washburn display
TOPEKA — A legal battle has ended over Washburn University's display of a sculpture that offended some Roman Catholics, who said it had a phallic appearance. The U.S. Supreme Court refused Monday to consider a legal challenge filed by a faculty member and student at the university. The decision lets stand a 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling that said Washburn did not violate their rights

Moussaoui trial
ALEXANDRIA, Va. — A federal judge on Monday seated the jury that will decide whether Zacarias Moussaoui, the only man charged in the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, is executed for conspiring with the terrorists. U.S. District Judge Leonie Brinkema seated 18 jurors and alternates after a 90-minute process.

AT&T-BellSouth job cuts
NEW YORK — AT&T Inc. plans to cut up to 10,000 jobs, mostly through attrition, if its $67 billion purchase of BellSouth Corp. goes through, AT&T's chief financial officer said Monday. The work force reduction would take place over three years, AT&T's Rick Lindner said on a conference call. The acquisition is expected to close next year, pending approval from shareholders and regulators.

Headlines from the nation's universities

Bald eagles off endangered species list

FORT COLLINS, Colo. – The bald eagle is close to being removed from the Endangered Species Act.

The United States Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) came out last month with voluntary guidelines to protect the bald eagle in conjunction with the removal of the bird from the Endangered and Threatened Species list.

While it has taken longer than expected, Valerie Fellows, spokeswoman for the FWS, said she believes it will be worth the wait.

"The delisting of the bald eagle is a very positive step and the eagles will still be protected by other acts," Fellows said in a phone interview Thursday.

The bald eagle originally was listed as an endangered species in the lower 48 states in 1967 in a law that predated the Endangered Species Act. In 1995, the bald eagle moved from endangered to threatened in the majority of states.

The bald eagle is being removed from the list in every one of the lower 48 states.

Carin Avila, education coordinator of Colorado State University's Rocky Mountain Raptor Program in Fort Collins, said she believes the recovery of the bald eagle is a success story.

"The birds were on the brink of destruction and they are now flourishing," Avila said.

The recovery of the bald eagle proves that the endangered species list works, said Tony Auciello, sophomore in natural resources management.

In 1963, there were 417 nesting pairs of bald eagles around the nation. The number of bald eagle nesting pairs now reaches 7,066.

GRADS FACING BIGGER BILLS, DEBT

WASHINGTON, D.C. – By all accounts, student activism is alive and well.

However, for Village Voice writer and author of "Generation Debt: Why Now Is a Terrible Time to Be Young," Anya Kamenetz, there has been one major exclusion from students' list of grievances: Their own bank statements.

"One of the first stories I worked on was about how students always march for global warming and for world peace, while not paying attention to their own bank accounts," said Kamenetz.

A report by the Department of Education in 2005 showed that the total cost of attending a public four-year college or university has risen by 22 percent over the last three years, bringing the average cost to around $16,000 a year.

Recalling the Higher Education Act of 1955, she said affordability of higher education has taken a backseat in political debate.

According to Kamenetz, long-term commitments to jobs are history, benefits are reduced, and starting pay isn't close to what is needed for students to pay off their debts.

"As they start to comparison-shop and think about what they're getting, I think you're going to see a smarter higher education consumer," she said.

Corrections and clarifications

■ There was an error in Monday's Collegian. The sex education bill passed in the Kansas Senate.
■ In the March 3 edition of the Collegian, the bill supported by Alex Lovely is the constitutional amendment that would make the Student Senate Representative to Faculty Senate the chair of the new Student Academic Affairs Standing Committee, not the combination of two standing committees.

The Collegian regrets the errors.

Festival features Japanese dance group

Members of Yosakoi Dance team perform during the Japanese Festival of Nations Monday afternoon in the K-State Student Union. The dance consisted of moves that had meaning to the Japanese culture.

The Japanese culture was in the spotlight of the Festival of Nations on Monday, which took place in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

The afternoon began with the Japanese Yosakoi Dance Club performing three dances back-to-back.

"The term 'Yosakoi' means 'please come at night' in an old Japanese dialect," said Seiji Ikeda, graduate student in digital art and head coach of the club. "The attitude of this term means to come join us, 'let's get to know each other and have an enjoyable evening.'"

Ikeda, a third-generation Japanese American, spent three years in Japan and decided to introduce the K-State students and community to some Japanese culture.

He introduced the dancers and explained the relevance of the moves to the audience.

"I love to see the audience happy when I dance," said Tomohiko Niikura, a student from Nagasaki, Japan, who's spending a year at K-State.

Being one of the veteran performers in the group, Niikura said he was used to performing in front of thousands of people back in Japan.

"Yosakoi is traditionally a dance about the lives of fishermen and their association with the sea," Ikeda said. "This is a contemporized version of the dance."

The dance performances were followed by an interactive pop quiz that, which was a primer on Japanese trivia.

"We would like more K-State people to be interested in Japanese culture and people," said Emiko Taki, president of the Japanese Student Association. "Sushi is not the only food we eat, and all Japanese don't know karate, either."

Audience members were offered various Japanese foods other than sushi. Some of those items included chicken teriyaki, stir-fried vegetables, and pork curry.

"I am extremely interested in the multicultural activities that go on around campus," Denton Shanks, senior in biochemistry, said.

Shanks was a former member of the Yosakoi Dance Club and said he loved that the dance was lively and made him want to move.

Allison Carmichael, Union Program Council multicultural co-chair and a junior in life science, said the event was a good forum for creating awareness about different cultures.

"Diversity is so important in today's world," she said. "The people from Japan can teach us so many things."

Taki said the response to the event was encouraging, and this was the precursor to the Japanese Festival on April 22.

"We will have many fun activities including workshops, exhibitions, art performances, food, games and so on," she said. "We have also invited some popular guests from as far away as Florida."

K-State lacks free music software

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While many universities across the nation have begun to provide cheap, or even free, legal means of downloading music and videos, K-State has not yet implemented such software.

"I think the issue is just trying to use whatever capability that we have for the things that the university really needs to do," Beth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology, said. "We don't even have the resources for research and instruction, let alone to do the music – it's not that I don't understand why you want the music, it's just a matter of money."

However, the possibility of implementing cheap, legal downloading software previously has received the attention of the Student Governing Association, student body president Michael Burns said.

Before Burns took office, Student Senate had discussed the implementation of software called iTunes U, Burns said.

"It's not on the priority list for the next four weeks until we finish, but I'd definitely encourage students who are interested to contact the new president and vice president," Burns said.

iTunes U would allow students to legally purchase and download music, and would also give them the capability to download class information, such as lectures that are available by podcast, for free, said Ernie Perez, co-manager of the media development center at the Information Technology Assistance Center.

"I would like that," said Kristi Konda, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications. "We're broke college students, and we can't afford to buy CDs. They should provide an alternative method."

According to university policy, K-State does not allow illegal music on any university-owned computer, Perez said.

In order to prevent illegal file sharing, the university has filters in place that prevent peer-to-peer networking software from being downloaded.

K-State administration does not monitor computer systems for illegal downloading, but if a student does not comply with university policy, he or she could be at risk for a substantial lawsuit from the recording industry, Unger said.

When certain software is discovered on a student's computer, the university receives a legal notice from the International Registry of Artists and Artwork to eliminate the problem. The university has a certain number of days to remove the software from the server, Unger said.

If the student complies, the university usually implements no further consequences. However, if a student refuses to eliminate the downloading program, the student is liable for some potentially serious consequences.

"If the student does not comply, then it's a lawsuit that will be filed against the student, not the university," Unger said.

TO THE POINT

Every student's vote counts during elections

Last week's primary elections were proof that your vote does count.

History has shown us similar trends.

We learned in high school history class, of course, that after his impeachment in 1868, a single U.S. Senate vote led to President Andrew Johnson's acquittal.

Although it is said year after year, situations like this show us that each vote does indeed count, and each and every voice is important in these elections.

Your vote could be the deciding factor in electing our next student body president and vice president.

Taking one brief moment out of your busy schedule could mean the difference between victory and defeat for your favorite candidate.

Conversely, neglecting your democratic right to vote eliminates your right to complain about who wins the election.

Now is the time to lend your voice to determine the future of K-State's student body.

Cast your vote online today or Wednesday at sgaelections.ksu.edu.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Poor education

Public school system harms nation's children

JONAS HOGG

The Kansas legislature snarls again on education. How much? How soon? To whom?

I propose getting rid of the entire public school system, or making it the absolute last recourse.

Public education in Kansas is bad, just like public education is bad in California, Florida, Delaware and everywhere else. Money is not the problem – the schools are the problem.

What reasons do public schools have to excel?

If schools expend colossal amounts of time and energy to hire competent teachers and produce intelligent and capable students then they receive taxpayer's money.

If schools hire lazy clods who produce more lazy clods, they receive taxpayer's money, failure on par with success.

Evidence of this is not hard to find, public schools get worse and worse and worse, and funding goes up and up and up in complete defiance of any sort of logic whatsoever.

Who came up with this system? Can we volunteer them for dissection to save money and frogs?

Far away bureaucrats isolate allowable knowledge and plan the best way to brand the necessary ideas to form young patriots.

Ivory-towered social engineers construct an Übermensch and impose it upon students who are required to attend.

Competition among students is discouraged in practically every realm. Sports is the last hold-out, sort of. Dodgeball already has been forbidden at some elementary schools; football won't be far behind.

While bereft of competition and the resulting classroom creed of "every kid is as smart as the dumbest kid" we find ourselves with – dumb kids.

Students are unhappy and unruly, so they are sent for counseling or drugged into submission, which leads to adults who are unhappy and unruly and, in turn, counseled and drugged.

Parents no longer have control over their children or their education; neither, for that matter, do teachers.

Has anyone, for instance, stopped to question whether the American Civil Liberties Union or the courts have any business dictating what can and cannot be taught by Kansans, to Kansans, in Kansas schools?

As local control and competence have oozed out of schools they are rapidly being replaced with this: "Boy charged with felony for carrying sugar." You can't make this stuff up.

A 12-year-old brought sugar to school to ask about an experiment, and was arrested because, according to the district – "look-alike drugs and substances can cause that same level of danger because staff and students are not equipped to differentiate between the two."

Sugar is cocaine, basil is marijuana, aspirin is codeine, two and two is five, sometimes three.

If convicted, for felony possession of sugar, the boy faces up to five years' probation.

To say this is senseless would do horrendous injustice to the absurdity of the situation.

Kicking dogs is senseless; criminalizing those that did not commit a crime is – what? Is there an appropriate word?

Children are suspended for playing cowboys and Indians, which the people molders say engenders violence; Boy Scouts are suspended for having knives in their cars. This never ends.

So after 12 years of compulsory feminization, indoctrination and fondling by mommy-government we release the wards onto the world.

A culture that is taught competition is bad has, surprise, difficulty competing.

Hence, outsourcing.

Foreigners work for less, are more competent and generally speak English better than Americans, and Britons are not far behind. Don't believe me, heard of much in-sourcing lately?

This is a dire situation.

Incompetence breeds incompetence, apparently intent on either ruining us all or creating a people entirely reliant on government.

Public education is creating a nation of chimps in a land with no banana trees.

Supreme Court decision disrespects mail carriers

JACI BOYDSTON

If there's one underappreciated person in society who holds a very special place in my heart, it's the mail carrier.

Mail carriers do so much for us, and they ask for so little in return. When the weather is so bad that schools cancel classes, mail carriers are out there, valiantly delivering our cards, letters and People Magazines. All they ask is that we keep our dogs under control and stick the mailbox flag up when we want them to pick up something.

More impressively, these true American heroes are incredibly productive: according to an Associated Press report, the Bush administration estimated last year that the United States Postal Service delivers 660 million pieces of mail each day.

Think about the sheer volume.

Even if the post office had a 99.99 percent accuracy rate of safely getting each letter to its intended recipient, that would still mean 66,000 letters get damaged or don't end up where they should each day.

To prevent lawsuits over unavoidable lost or damaged letters, a protective shield exists, called the Federal Tort Claims Act. This act makes federal workers liable for some injuries caused by their negligence, but it exempts "any claim arising out of the loss, miscarriage or negligent transmission of letters or postal matter."

This makes sense. We're such a litigious society as it is, imagine what things would be like if people could sue the federal government every time their neighbors get their cable bills by mistake.

Unfortunately, two weeks ago, the Supreme Court issued an opinion that stuck it to our mail carriers. Barbara Dolan, a Pennsylvania woman, sued the post office in 2001 for physical injuries and mental anxiety caused when she tripped over a stack of mail on her porch. Lower courts threw out her case, saying it fell under the exemptions listed in the FTCA, but the 7-1 Supreme Court disagreed, allowing her suit against the post office to continue.

The Supreme Court sends a bad message by allowing this sort of frivolous lawsuit to continue. A Feb. 22 USA Today report indicates that Dolan's mail carrier was delivering a "stack" of letters and packages that presumably wouldn't have fit in her mailbox.

Where should the mail carrier have put the mail, if not on the porch? And why couldn't Dolan have watched where she was walking?

It seems that she was being more negligent than her mail carrier, who was just trying to deliver her large volume of mail.

Dolan's lawsuit is ridiculous, and the Supreme Court's decision is unfortunate. The Court has effectively said that misdelivered, lost or damaged mail cannot be the subject of a lawsuit, but correctly delivered, undamaged mail that's so voluminous it can't fit in the mailbox is a reason to sue.

We should treat our mail carriers with more respect than this.

They do us a great service by spending their days battling the elements to bring us our mail, and they get little thanks in return. Maybe Dolan should have thanked her mail carrier for lugging all those letters and packages to her house instead of suing the post office because she didn't like where they were put.

Let's learn a lesson from Dolan's selfish and ungrateful lawsuit – have a little respect for those great American heroes who bring you your mail each day. Keep your dogs under control, leave them some cookies and say thanks now and then.

And, whatever you do, don't sue them because you're not smart enough to watch where you're walking.

I have officially lost all faith in humanity after cleaning up after all the students at the KU, K-State game. It was sad.

I'm so glad February is over.

For all the times we hear about how the government can even screw up a nocturnal emission, caused by rapid eye movement, you know, I do have to say they got one thing right recently. I electronically filed my state of Kansas taxes on Tuesday, and I got my refund check on Friday. Yeah, so every now and then, the government does get something right.

I think the baseball team can win 35 games this year.

Group works to raise awareness

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four architecture students are working to raise environmental awareness at K-State.

Michelle Goetz, Kathy McGuire, Rita Radley and Jenny Walters, all seniors in interior architecture, said they want to educate students and administrators about the importance of efficiency and sustainability in campus buildings.

In particular, Goetz said, the students hope to convince university officials to seek Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design certification for new buildings on campus.

The LEED guidelines, established by the U.S. Green Building Council, evaluate a building's quality in areas such as materials used in construction, water savings and energy efficiency. Certification points are awarded for each guideline met by a building and determine which level of certification will be awarded. The minimum number of points needed for certification is 26.

"LEED is about being responsible and taking care of the earth," Walters said. "We are hoping that once we get that information out and people are more aware of it, we can make it happen at K-State."

The group's efforts began early this semester as an assignment for a studio class. The students received an assignment to choose an architectural problem and design a resolution for it.

Goetz remembered a professor's presentation on LEED at a meeting of the Emerging Green Builders, and suggested awareness of the program as the focus of the project.

"The cost of building is shifting," she said. "Instead of spending most of the budget on construction, more should be spent on design. It's not just about architecture, but also about incorporating engineers into the design phase to make things more efficient. That's a big hurdle for the administration to accept."

There are 22 universities in the United States with LEED-certified buildings on campus. The University of Denver and the University of Arkansas are the closest to K-State. No university in the Big 12 Conference has constructed a LEED certified building.

Radley said that many people do not understand the monetary benefits of constructing a LEED-certified building.

"A lot of people have misconceptions," she said. "It is more expensive to build them, but over time, energy and utility costs are much cheaper."

The University of Denver's new law school, constructed under LEED guidelines, includes infrared water faucets to reduce the amount of hot water wasted and electric lights whose intensity increase or decrease according to outside light. According to the university's Web site, LEED guidelines accounted for a 40-percent decrease in energy and water consumption.

Dan Heater, director of planning for the facilities department, said environmental concerns are important to the university.

"These students are absolutely right," he said. "We have a responsibility to conserve and make sustainable buildings."

Heater said making new buildings LEED-certified would be a universitywide effort. While the university is not seeking certification at this time, he said LEED's guidelines could still be used in projects.

"We are looking at including some of these sustainability guidelines in the upcoming Leadership Studies building," he said.

Goetz said that adopting LEED standards would be an opportunity for the university to show it is serious about environmentalism.

"We have these principles here at our university, but yet we don't want to adopt them for our own buildings," Goetz said.

Oldest buildings add to campus history

Seaton Hall surrounds Seaton Court, which was added to the building as it was built. Construction began in 1909.

Anderson Hall houses administrative offices and the Office of Admissions, among others. Built in 1879, it was originally named the Practical Agriculture Building and in 1902 was renamed after John Alexander Anderson, the second president of Kansas State Agricultural College.

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Anderson Hall, Seaton Court and Holtz Hall have the honor of being three of the oldest buildings on K-State's campus.

When people visit K-State, Pat Patton, research specialist in the University Archives, said she constantly hears comments about the appearance of the campus buildings and grounds.

"People say it looks like an Ivy League school," Patton said. "They're always amazed."

The limestone with which a majority of the buildings are constructed was used because it was obtainable and easy to work with, Patton said.

"It was very available," Patton said. "It's softer stone, and it would harden with age."

As one of the most recognized structures on campus, Anderson Hall, was constructed in 1879 for $12,500 apportioned by the state legislature. A center addition was added in 1882, and a south wing was built two years later.

Named after former university president John A. Anderson, Anderson Hall has provided a number of services for the campus, including a canteen, barbershop and recreation center in the early 1900s. Every university president, except Joseph Denison, has had his office in Anderson Hall.

Anderson Hall signifies K-State, Patton said.

"It's a legacy we will always have," she said. "It's been a source of pride from the very beginning."

Holtz Hall, north of Anderson Hall, was constructed in 1876 for the department of chemistry.

A fire in 1900 destroyed the building's chemical lab, which later was rebuilt to be a gymnasium for girls.

In 1963, the building was officially named after Dr. Adrian Augustus Holt. The Career Planning and Placement Center has been in Holtz Hall since 2001.

Seaton Court, formerly known as the Engineering Shops, was built in 1875. A machine shop was added in 1891, and an addition to the wood shop was constructed in 1905.

The building was remolded and renamed Seaton Court in 1977.

Chelsey Wilson, freshman in environmental design, said she noticed the buildings and stonework when she first visited K-State.

"All the buildings were nice to look at," Wilson said. "At other campuses, buildings were plainer."

With classes in Seaton Hall and Seaton Court, Wilson said she enjoys the interior of the buildings as well as the exterior.

"I like the building because it has wooden floors, and they all creak," she said. "It just feels older, not so new."

Dick Elkins, former director of admissions at K-State, worked on K-State's campus for 32 years after attending the university as a student.

When he came to K-State Elkins said being at K-State was an honor and a lesson in history.

"It was overpowering to me," he said. "I think it sort of awes you to think about all the people who worked there."

K-State sweeps Eastern Illinois in 4-game homestand

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sophomore pitcher Brad Hutt started Monday in the final game of a four-game homestand against the Eastern Illinois Panthers (1-6) and had an impressive day, helping the Cats to a 12-1 win, after avoiding what could have been a disastrous first inning.

Hutt, who is 2-0 on the season, loaded the bases in the first after retiring the first two batters, and said he wanted to regain his composure and focus on the next pitch.

"I made some good pitches there in the first inning, and they got some hits on them," Hutt said. "That's just baseball, and I just tried to focus on overcoming the adversity and getting back in a comfort zone."

Hutt did not give up another hit during the rest of his six innings of work. He went on to retire the next 18 batters with three strikeouts, before letting the bullpen finish the last two innings, securing the four-game sweep against the Panthers and Hutt's second win of the season for K-State.

The Wildcats (9-1) are now riding an eight-game win-streak after Monday's victory against Eastern Illinois.

Hutt gave up only two hits, both coming in the first inning, and improved his earned run average to 3.50 on the season, while never surrendering a run.

In the midst of retiring 19-straight batters, Hutt said he tried to maintain his composure and not worry about the next batter.

He also was happy with the way K-State was hitting the ball, allowing him a big enough cushion to work with, he said.

"I just wanted to stay with it and keep attacking the zone," Hutt said. "Overall, I am pleased, and I am glad the hitters got back on track after yesterday (Sunday)."

Sunday was similar to Monday for the Wildcats in a couple of categories, with K-State recording 11 hits and striking out eight times in both games.

The difference in Monday's game was the 12 runs scored by the Wildcats, compared to the seven they scored Sunday, and Coach Brad Hill said the confidence boost needed Monday by his players came in the first two innings, when the Wildcats scored eight runs off three hits in those innings.

"The game was a nice way to finish off a series because it is not easy beating a team like that four times," Hill said. "Brad Hutt was really throwing well, and I think that really took the air out of their sails.

"They had a young guy on the mound who struggled with his control, and at the same time we had a couple good approaches at the plate with (seniors) Joe Roundy and Barrett Rice, two older guys who did not get too impatient and did a good job of hitting for us."

BKC | Martin named to coaches' Big 12 2nd team

K-State junior guard Cartier Martin became the third Wildcat since the inception of the Big 12 to be named to the coaches' all-conference second team on Monday in an announcement by the league office.

Martin

A native of Houston, Martin follows former teammate Jeremiah Massey (2004-05) and Larry Reid (2001-02) as the only other Wildcats to earn second team All-Big 12 honors in the last 10 seasons. He is just the fifth player in school history to be selected to one of the three all-conference teams in the Big 12 era.

Co-champions Texas and Kansas swept most of the major awards announced by the conference. Junior P.J. Tucker and sophomore LaMarcus Aldridge were named as the Big 12 Player and Defensive Player of the Year for the Longhorns, while freshman Brandon Rush and head coach Bill Self were honored as the league's Freshman and Coach of the Year for the Jayhawks. Oklahoma junior Michael Neal was named the Newcomer of the Year.

BKW | Coggins, Gipson earn All-Big 12 nods

K-State women's basketball standouts Claire Coggins and Marlies Gipson both earned All-Big 12 Conference honors in a vote by the league's coaches Friday.

Coggins

Coggins, a 5-foot-11 junior combination guard/forward from Lee's Summit, Mo., was named an All-Big 12 Second Team selection.

For the first time in the 10-year history of the league, an All-Rookie Team and All-Defensive Team were added to the coaches ballot along with individual awards for Newcomer of the Year and Defensive Player of the Year.

Gipson, a 6-foot freshman forward from McPherson, Kan., was honored on the five-member All-Rookie Team.

Wildcats give up on season

MATTHEW GIRARD

I never thought I would see what K-State did in its 66-52 loss to No. 18 Kansas on Saturday.

Give up.

I'm of the opinion that teams should give their all no matter what the score is and until the clock reaches triple zeros.

This is what K-State had been doing up until Saturday's game with Kansas.

Before the Jayhawks, once again, made sure the fans in Lawrence, can continue to call Bramlage Coliseum, "Allen Fieldhouse West," the Wildcats went toe-to-toe with the Jayhawks and two Associated Press top-25 teams.

In K-State's historic "Where were you when you heard about it?" game against the Jayhawks on Jan. 14, the Wildcats rallied from a 10-point deficit to pull off the improbable 59-55 victory in Lawrence.

Then, a little more than a month later and in the span of three days, took on then-No. 7 Texas and then-No. 20 Oklahoma.

Same story here.

The Wildcats, who have finished 6-10 in Big 12 Conference play for the third-consecutive year, shaved a 10-point deficit to Texas only to lose by one point, 65-64.

The very next game, K-State lost another heartbreaker to Oklahoma in the final seconds, again, by one point, 71-70.

And guess what?

K-State was doing it again and making Kansas fans sweat a little – for 38 minutes.

The Wildcats chipped away at a 15-point deficit to get as close as three points, 49-46, with 10:56 remaining in the game.

Kansas eventually rebuilt a double-digit lead throughout the next six minutes.

But by the time the clock ticked down to two minutes, K-State let its post-season hopes get squashed like a bug.

If you watch any basketball, you know that no matter how dire the situation, a coach and team fighting for its post-season life would be doing everything they possibly could to pull off a miracle.

But not K-State.

The powers that be elected to just let it go.

Kansas even just dribbled the ball around, uncontested, for the final 24 seconds and the coaches met at half court with one second still showing on the game clock.

Giving up was the last thing I expected from Wooly and the Wildcats.

It's serious this time

Wildcats face Jayhawks in 1st round of tournament

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Deb Patterson said there is no way No. 7-seeded K-State will look beyond its game against the No. 10-seeded Kansas Jayhawks in the first round of the Big 12 Conference Tournament tonight in Dallas.

"We don't have that kind of team," said Patterson, who is 6-3 in conference tournament openers. "Whatever personality the next game against KU takes on, I know it will not be because our team is taking someone for granted or they've assumed something is going to happen. Our team has not done that this season and will not do it. It's just not in their character or personality."

The Wildcats (18-9, 8-8 Big 12) face the Jayhawks (16-11, 5-11 Big 12) for the third time this season and second time in five days. K-State swept the regular season home-home series with a 69-63 Jan. 25 win in Manhattan and a 62-44 victory Thursday in Lawrence.

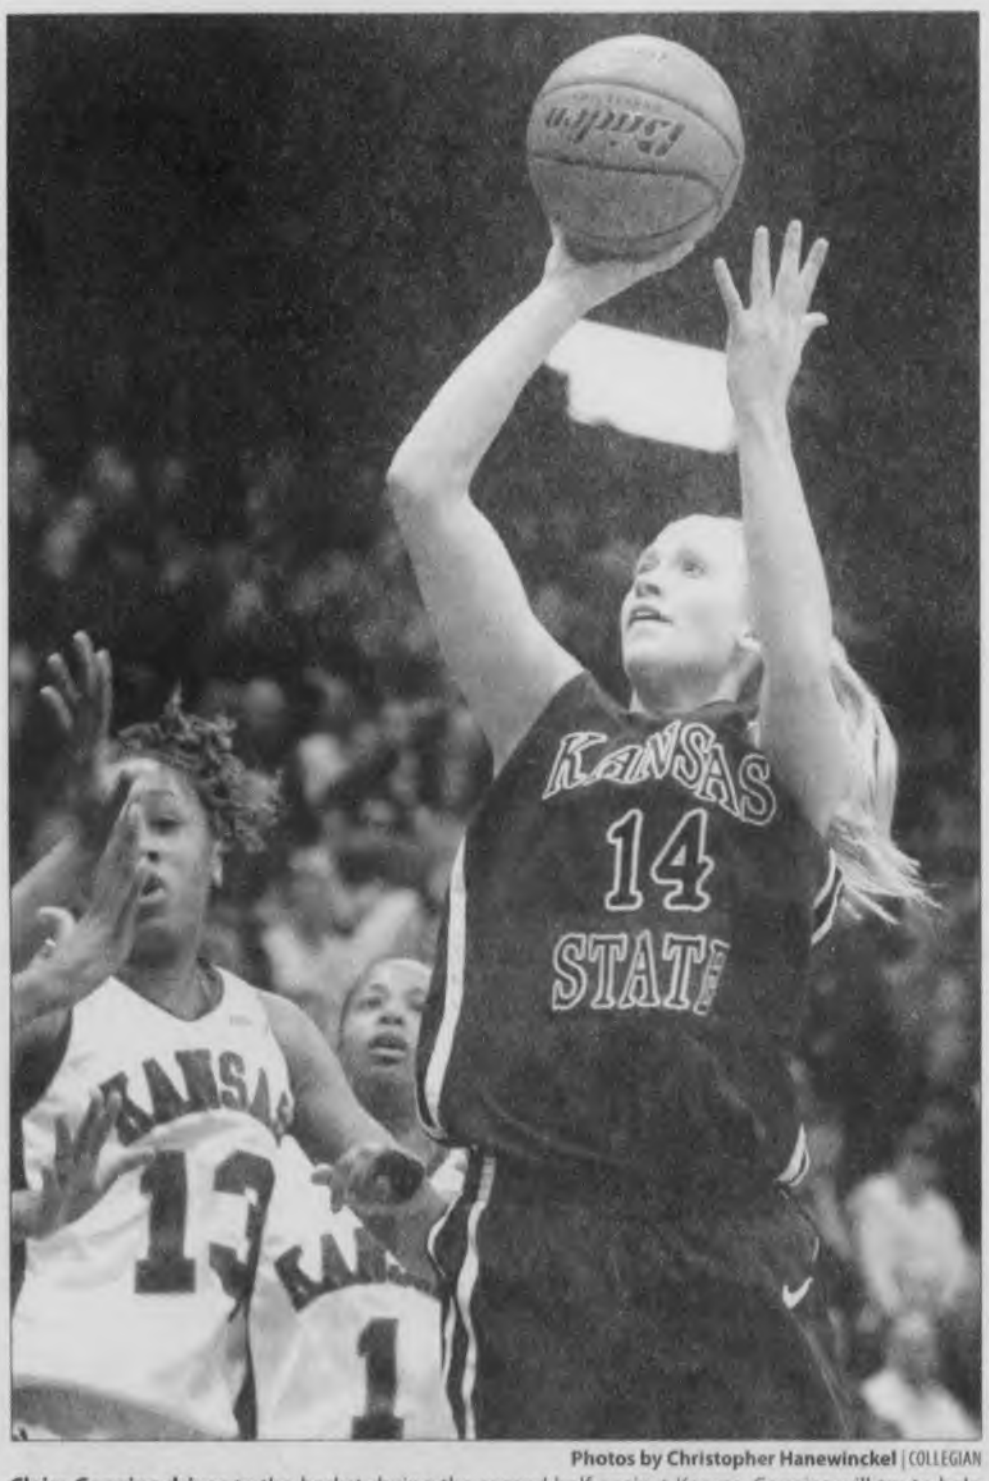
Freshman Shalee Lehning said the 18-point win in Allen Fieldhouse was an important moment in the season.

"That was huge to be able to beat them that bad and to be able to beat them in Lawrence," Lehning said, "and it just showed us that, as a team, we can compete with anybody and as long as we play 40 minutes a game and bring intensity and focus, then we are tough to stop."

Lehning averages 9.5 points per game against Kansas.

K-State's 10th-consecutive win against Kansas – the longest streak in the series – snapped a four-game losing streak.

Although the Wildcats have dominated the Jayhawks as of late, Kansas boasts three seniors with tournament experience in Crystal Kemp, Erica Hallman and Kaylee Brown.



Patterson said Kansas is a dangerous team to face while the Wildcats chase a NCAA Tournament bid.

"We've got a credible amount we are playing for," Patterson said. "We are playing for our post-season life right now, and we understand that, much like KU felt at the end of the game, that it's not a normal thing for us to beat anybody in this league by 20 points. We're going to take their very best shot, and that's how it should be."

"I think that going to the Big 12 tournament, it's serious," Coggins said. "The thing about it is that, and the thing that is so good for this team too, is they don't know what it takes, but they know in their minds that they've come so far, and I think we will bring that into the tournament."

The Wildcats and Jayhawks have met in the conference tournament twice, with Kansas and K-State splitting the two contests. K-State won the first meeting 73-58 in 1997 and Kansas won the second, 50-46 in 1998.

Tennis notches 1st Big 12 win with victory against Colorado

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lately, K-State has gotten used to tasting success.

The Wildcats' (5-2, 1-1 Big 12 Conference) have won of four of their last five matches and their win Saturday against Colorado, 4-3, marks their third-straight victory.

"I hope our team now develops a taste for the feeling that they got out there because it definitely was a good one and one that everyone enjoyed," Coach Steve Bietau said.

Everyone seemed to be on top of their game, Bietau said.

"There wasn't anyone that I was unhappy with, and that's really unusual," Bietau said. "I can usually find a spot or two where I can say 'well, we did well in these other ones but this one really needs some work.'"

The Wildcats' recent success has corresponded with their doubles play, going undefeated this season when they win the doubles point. K-State extended the streak this weekend in Boulder, Colo., winning at No. 2 and No. 3 doubles.

Senior Jessica Simosa continued improving, defeating Monica Milewski, ranked No. 55 in the country. Simosa has won her last two singles matches, bringing her spring record to 3-4.

Freshman Maria Perevoschikova won the No. 3 singles against Ewa Losinski (6-4, 6-3). Perevoschikova has quietly led K-State in singles wins with 6.

"People kind of forget about or don't really pay a lot of attention to Perevoschikova, but I think she has the best record on the team," Bietau said. "She's in there beating good players in straight sets."

The concept of losing is not very appealing to Perevoschikova, she said.

"I hate to lose," Perevoschikova said.

One of the major reasons the Wildcats have been hot as of late is because they have changed their attitude.

"I actually want to go out there and kick butt," Simosa said. "I can't wait for next weekend to come and go play."

K-State is not looking to back down to anyone, said sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia, who won No. 1 singles, 6-2, 6-2.

"Even though it wasn't a home match, and it was on their court in their town, we just went out there, especially in doubles and destroyed them," Kvaratskhelia said.

Little Music, big hit

Student-directed opera brings in enthusiastic crowds

Hennk Egerman, played by Austin Short, junior in applied music, sings one of the songs from "A Little Night Music" during a dress rehearsal March 1 in Nichols Theatre. The performance will be shown again Wednesday through Saturday.

Audiences learned to laugh at the opening of "A Little Night Music," last weekend at Nichols Theatre performed by KSU Theater and the Department of Music.

The performance, which will be shown again March 8-11, was K-State's first student-directed opera. The opera is based on the Tony Award-winning Broadway musical of the same name, centered on the dynamics of love.

Marci Maullar, managing director of KSU Theatre department and associate professor of speech communication, theater and dance, said she felt the performances of last weekend were impressive and those in attendance received a real treat.

"I thought that the performances were very nice, and that the students involved were well-trained vocally," she said. "It was a great way to display their talents."

Maullar said the quality of talent displayed in an all-student show is often overlooked.

"People would be really amazed by the quality of our work," she said. "People who have seen other shows often come back to us and tell us that we really have some incredible talent performing."

Anthony Francisco, junior in music education, played the role of Mr. Erlanson and said he agreed with Maullar's thoughts on the show.

"I thought the show went very well – one of the best performances we've done so far this year," he said. "Spirits have been extremely high."

Francisco said the audience was very receptive and gave high energy making it very easy to perform.

"As the show progressed, the audience learned to laugh and you could tell there was a real thrill to the crowd," he said.

Francisco said the effort put into the show began early in the semester, but the results were worth it.

"We started shortly after school got back into session and since then we've had a week full of run-throughs so we all felt very prepared," Francisco said. "A lot of us worked in previous shows so there really were no doubts whatsoever. We are however going to try to keep on getting better."

The audience shared much of the same sentiments with regards to the show.

Kim Sorensen, junior in family studies and human services, went to the show not only because she knew some of the cast, but because she got credit in a class for attending.

"I thought the performance was really good," she said. "The music was great, and the acting was really good."

Sorensen said in the past she has been to performances where the acting was not on the same level with the singing.

"Both went really well and the performance was very enjoyable," she said.

Katie Joyce, junior in dietetics and another audience member, said the performance she went to on Saturday night was very entertaining.

"I really liked it," she said. "The stage helped the show – it created an intimate little setting, which was perfect since it was about love," Joyce said.

Cassie Freyermuth, senior in applied music, played the role of Anne Egerman in the show. She said the show went great and although the theater department doesn't possess the budget of a Broadway show, they were able to do quite a bit with their limited space and money.

"The audience is on three sides of the stage with lots of entrances and exits," Freyermuth said. "It makes the show more complicated, but visually it is much more exciting. We really have awesome people working on our crew and it is a great set -- especially for such little amount of money."

Singers perform a song for K-State's first student-directed opera, "A Little Night Music," during a dress rehearsal.

Broadcast's latest album revamps duo's sound

"Tender Buttons"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

It has always been my dream to be in a band and tour the country with my fellow musicians, bringing the joy of music to the masses. This, of course, is a highly romanticized version of what it means to be part of a musical group, and it is one that I held until I began to meticulously research the music that I love.

Now, it's a different story.

Over the course of rock-'n'-roll's history (and I'm sure much earlier than that), bands have been torn apart because of power struggles and various problems between members.

These can be caused by anything from a disagreement over the future of a band's direction, the occurrence of drug use within the band's personnel or even the appearance of a Japanese artist/musician who urges her boyfriend to take creative liberties with the music of the group.

The earliest was that of The Beatles during the 1960s. Though their breakup was most likely inevitable, the band's future became unsalvageable when John Lennon's love, Yoko Ono, entered the picture and began to include her two cents about where the band should be headed.

This isn't the only example.

From The Sex Pistols of the 1970s to the disintegration of The Smashing Pumpkins of the 1990s, rock-'n'-roll is littered with such instances. And that doesn't scratch the surface.

In indie-rock, it's even worse; it seems that for every band that is formed, another one wastes away.

The loss of these bands doesn't cause a major uproar in the music scene so much as they give another reason for lonely music nerds, such as myself, to cry ourselves to sleep every night.

Less than six months ago, indie rock almost lost another one of their ranks in the psychedelic-electronic outfit Broadcast.

Since their formation, the group has gone from a quintet to a duet in fewer than six years. Last fall, Broadcast was pared down to the duo of vocalist, Trish Keenan, and bassist, James Cargill.

With such a dramatic erosion of the band's personnel, one would think Broadcast's sound would falter and crumble as well, but their latest album, "Tender Buttons," proves that such attrition can help refocus and reinvigorate the work of a musical act.

Released in the winter of 2005, "Tender Buttons" finds Broadcast re-evaluating their sound. Instead of the carnival-esque, aural-overload of previous albums such as "The Noise Made By People" and "Haha Sound," Cargill and Keenan have chosen to strip-down their sound and create more minimalist, focused arrangements without losing any of their singular musical identity.

The album's first single, "America's Boy" is composed of pounding drum machines, screeching synthesizers and industrial-like, reverb-soaked sound effects. Any of these elements alone would be grating, but Broadcast knows how to expertly take the unusual and make it beautiful.

One thing that should be noted about Broadcast is Keenan's voice. She has the voice of an angel or the most beautiful siren I have ever heard. Keenan walks a fine line as she sings; she sings in a mostly disaffected monotone that, while distant, at times sounds beautifully intimate. At one point she sounds ice cold while the next, her coos and sighs are the only humanizing element found in Cargill's electronic soundscapes.

"Tender Buttons" is a truly arresting listen from start to finish. It finds the band branching off in new directions that give one hope for the future of their career. Cargill and Keenan have produced one of the greatest albums of 2005 that I am still enjoying well into the new year. Broadcast has proven that just because a band is falling apart, it doesn't mean that the remaining members can't still make wonderful music.

Clinic provides free medical care, utilizes community volunteers

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Since its opening nine months ago, the Flint Hills Community Clinic has provided free health care services to the community.

The clinic, which started its operations in June, was set up with the assistance of Mercy Regional Health Center, the Area Agency on Aging and the Manhattan Ministerial Association.

"We primarily cater to low income groups in the community," said Reita Currie, the clinic coordinator and the only paid staff member. "(We serve) people who earn too much for Medicaid but not enough to purchase their own insurance or pay for visits to the doctor," she said.

The clinic serves the health and wellness needs of the medically underserved in the community by providing quality, compassionate and personalized care, according to its mission statement.

"Most K-State students are insured with the university or have their parents' insurance," Currie said. "We typically get people who have been laid off or are suffering economic cutbacks."

Verlyn Steinkruger, a retired Manhattan family physician, is a volunteer at the clinic. When people ask him who owns the clinic, he tells them it is owned by the community, he said.

"It is inspiring to volunteer at such a clinic," Steinkruger said. "It gives me immense self-satisfaction to help people and do something for the community."

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Reita Currie, clinic coordinator, and Verlyn Steinkruger, volunteer physician, work at the Flint Hills Community Clinic, 401 Houston St. Currie is the only paid staff member; all others are volunteers.

The clinic is for outpatients only and has two examining rooms and a treatment room. People who are in need of more specialized care or surgery are referred to specialists at other health care centers.

"We are open to treating people from any place and are not restricted to only Manhattan residents," Currie said.

The clinic statistics show that as of February 2006, the clinic has had 468 medical appointments.

The clinic provides a variety of services like primary care for bronchitis, flu and minor injuries. They also provide care for patients with high blood pressure, diabetes and heart diseases.

"We have dietitians who provide nutritional advice and physiotherapists who help in rehabilitation," Steinkruger said.

Tibisay Marin, a former K-State student, originally from Venezuela, teaches Spanish-to-English medical interpretation for non-English speaking students.

"Volunteering at the clinic is very rewarding," Marin said. "It's like being a bridge between the two cultures. I'm helping someone walk the shoes I've walked."

The clinic functions to a great extent on donations from individuals, organizations and businesses.

The first week of May, the clinic will celebrate National Cover The Uninsured Week.

"The event will help increase the awareness of the uninsured and think of ways to better provide healthcare," Currie said.

Survey aims to help city adjust to influx

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County will experience an influx of about 30,000 soldiers, military personnel and family members in the next five years, said Ryan Spohn, assistant professor in the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work.

The projected influx is due to the U.S. Department of Defense's 2005 Base Realignment and Closure Plan, which recommended that several military units relocate to Fort Riley.

Spohn, with the help of other sociology professors and graduate students, created a survey that measures the impact the population increase will have on the Manhattan area.

"Thirty thousand people is enormous," Spohn said. "The question we're asking is, 'will the huge influx of people make things better or worse?'"

Through the survey, which was dispersed to 2,000 Riley County households, the team hopes to answer that question.

Spohn said he hopes to have 60 percent of the surveys returned. The group also plans to send out a similar questionnaire in five years to see how perceptions have changed.

After those surveys have been returned, the group will analyze the information and make relevant information available to community leaders, Sue Williams, associate professor in sociology, anthropology and social work said.

The group will make selected information available to the public, but will omit specifics in order to protect anonymity, she said. The information will be published in professional journals so it can be used by communities.

"I'm focusing on how people get information about crime and how the media influences their perceptions," Kendrick said.

Laszlo Kulcsar, assistant professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, said he hopes to use the information gained from the surveys to work with the planning division of the Manhattan City Commission to help them prepare for the rapid transition. Kulcsar said Manhattan poses difficult challenges.

"It's very difficult to make projections for both college and military towns," Kulcsar said.

Matters.

Director of Student Publications Inc. Linda Puntney said she and Steve Smethers, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, have talked about the possibility of media convergence for more than a year.

"We thought it would be a great project for students to put us on the cutting edge, and we encouraged them to try it," said Puntney, who also is the RP adviser. "I don't know of any other schools that have done convergence to this level."

Smethers said he and Puntney had the idea for media convergence after seeing the need for students to develop an awareness for how news is produced across several media outlets.

"The benefit of this is that we have more people working on the story and more diverse angles and better coverage – that's what it offers to the audience," Smethers said.

Leann Sulzen, Collegian editor in chief, said the debate and converged coverage will be a service to students when choosing a presidential candidate pair to vote for.

"(Media convergence) shows all sides of coverage and gives students an opportunity to see what other media outlets are doing," Sulzen said.

Chris Swick, news director for the Wildcat 91.9, said the network will broadcast elections coverage live at 5:30 p.m. Wednesday with interviews before and after the results are announced.

Swick said the converged coverage will give students an opportunity to see news from several perspectives.

"There's not just one outlet covering things – everybody cares about what's going on on this campus," Swick said.

Brett Hamilton, assistant for Manhattan Matters, said KST8 Cable Channel 8 will broadcast elections live from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Lindsay Porter, RP editor-in-chief, said the 2006 RP will have one spread of behind-the-scenes coverage for the six presidential candidate pairs that did not advance to general elections. Another other spread will cover the King and Maddy campaigns Wednesday night.

to his vehicle, the truck was gone, Quintanar said.

The officer had obtained the plate on the vehicle, and 20 to 30 minutes later, a call came in that a dark green Chevy pickup had sideswiped a vehicle on Juliette Street near Bluemont Avenue.

At that point, the Kansas Highway Patrol began pursuit, Quintanar said.

A group of 11 troopers assigned to the Roving Aggressive Violations Enforcement program had been assigned to Manhattan to patrol for drunk drivers, Lt. John Eichkorn of the Kansas Highway Patrol, said.

A KHP officer was in the area of 10th Street and Bluemont Avenue, when the officer observed people gathered outside around a car.

"It had been involved with another vehicle that chose not to stick around," Eichkorn said.

While the trooper was there, a green Chevy S-10 pickup drove by the scene. The trooper recognized it as the vehicle involved and followed.

The trooper pursued the truck westbound on Anderson Avenue, when the truck left the road at Westview Drive and struck the curb.

The truck then struck the school-zone light post, veered across the roadway and over the north curb, finally coming to rest facing east.

"The trooper saw the driver had become partially ejected," Eichkorn said.

Troopers then pulled Young from the truck and began emergency treatment.

Young was taken by ambulance to Mercy Regional Health Center, then flown to St. Francis hospital in Wichita.

"Alcohol is something we are investigating," Eichkorn said.

Young had been involved in at least two accidents prior to the KHP beginning pursuit and two after, Eichkorn said.

COWS | Operation optimizes cattle's nutrient levels reproductive cattle.

During the fall months, the grass quality in Kansas declines, causing nutrient deficiencies in some cattle, Titgemeyer said.

"There are hundreds of products that are based on the information gained through the use of cannulated cattle," Titgemeyer said.

Several feeds have been designed to optimize the nutrient levels of cattle. Examples include SoyPass, a product of Borregaard Lignotech that provides protein, and Megalac, a product of Arm & Hammer that provides fat, Titgemeyer said.

Additionally, cannulated cattle research has led to the creation of antibiotics, the most common of which is Rumensin, Titgemeyer said.

Matt Quinn, manager of the beef cattle research unit, said he hopes to use the experience he has gained by working with the cannulated cattle in his job someday.

"I want to work with different feed lines to help them formulate rations and improve efficiency," Quinn said.

This sort of research is not specific to K-State, however. Titgemeyer said most land-grant universities have similar programs. In fact, some universities do research on sheep, pigs and other livestock.

Furthermore, some dairy farms use cannulated cattle to provide rumen fluid, which is used to help cows recover more quickly from sicknesses.

In regards to the procedure of putting the actual holes in the cows' stomachs, Titgemeyer said the risks to the animals are minimal. The cows are appropriately anesthetized during the operation and are monitored closely in case of infection.

"At most they might feel a bit of discomfort at first," Titgemeyer said.

The holes are either three or four inches in diameter, depending on the size of the cow, and the operation can be performed on any cow weighing 300 pounds or more.

King, Besler: Friendship makes strong leadership

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They don't sit still.

Presidential and vice presidential candidates Matt King and Emily Besler said they are action people who are not happy with the status quo.

"Things are good, but they can always be made better," King said.

The pair is looking for the chance to do just that as they face the ticket of Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy in the general election today and Wednesday.

King and Besler's campaign platform centers on four issues:

- campus safety, especially the expansion of SafeRide to use both taxis and larger passenger vehicles
- academic excellence, including technology updates in classrooms
- the creation of a student pregame section at Snyder Family Stadium with free food, live music and prizes before home sporting events
- the "Big Three" issues of tuition, parking and textbooks

King, junior in political science and natural resources from Wichita, and Besler, junior in marketing and political science from Evergreen, Colo., met even before they actually started their K-State careers.

They were both finalists for the university's Kassebaum scholarship and met at the interviews for the scholarship during their senior year of high school.

Since then, King and Besler have worked together in Student Governing Association and Student Alumni Board.

"We have a strong friendship as well as a strong professional relationship," King said.

Their different strengths allow them to complement each other, Besler said.

"We both bring a lot to the table," she said. "We both have different leadership styles. We're not a cookie-cutter of one another.

"I think we get the best product because we don't agree, because we're forced to compromise."

King and Besler described their leadership styles as policy and procedure versus program.

King said he is good at facilitating discussion and promoting compromise, while Besler said her strengths lie in organization and planning in small-group environments.

The pair learned to stick together as the only two sophomore committee chairs in Student Governing Association last year, King said.

In SGA, King has served as an at-large member of the Governmental Relations Committee and as chairman of that committee. Besler has served as an SGA intern, as chairwoman of the Student Affairs and Social Services Committee and as Student Senate vice chair.

"We hate the stereotype that SGA doesn't do anything," King said.

The student pre-game section is the answer to the student complaint that SGA accomplishes little, Besler said.

The two said they have enjoyed and learned from the campaign experience through meeting students and seeing aspects of the university of which they were unaware.

"The fun is in the journey," King said. "We've looked at all our issues and know they can be done."

Besler cited the ability to create change and the excitement of knowing she can make a difference as reasons she wants to be elected student body vice president.

"It's not a résumé-builder," she said. "A title's worthless if you have nothing to back it up with."

Maddys' family bond drives pair's campaign

Sibling rivalry - what sibling rivalry?

Lucas and Katie Maddy said being brother and sister has helped them in life, and at K-State.

The student body president and vice president candidates advanced in Wednesday's primary elections, finishing 10 votes behind Matt King and Emily Besler.

"Lucas and I have always been close, and our ideas on what can improve student experience at K-State have always been the same," Katie, junior in animal science and industry, said. "We can trust and count on each other a lot more than other candidates may be able to because of the close connection that we have and the accountability that we instill in each other to do our best in everything we do."

Lucas, senior in agricultural technology management, said his decision to choose Katie as his running mate came down to one word: trust.

"When everything trivial was put to side, the decision came down to one factor – who can I trust? I found that person in Katie," he said. "She has incredible drive, unquestionable integrity and genuine care and concern for this university."

After hearing the results of Wednesday's primary, the siblings said their 3 Cs platform will not change.

- Campus – An "Hour of Accountability" on KSDB-FM 91.9 to keep students and faculty informed and allow them to share their thoughts with the pair.
- Community – Giving the student body president a permanent, non-voting seat on the Manhattan City Commission, to give K-State a stronger voice in the community.
- Career – Encouraging students to work with alumni, and through alumni mentoring programs, to better prepare them for their future careers

Lucas said the 3 Cs have already affected him, Katie and their campaign.

"Students have an incredible voice – the support we've received from the city commission, CES (Career and Employment Services) directors and university officials is overwhelming," Lucas said. "We are excited to have university, student and community support as we move through the next year to improve our university."

Katie said working with her brother will benefit herself, her brother and the university.

"Our ideas for what we want to improve upon on campus are the same and in focus," she said. "That focus will help us to move forward with our ideas much faster. I also feel that I can trust Lucas more than if I was running with a friend because we are so accountable with our actions and because I know the tremendous morals that are instilled in Lucas and the high standards that he holds for himself and others around him."

Katie said she and Lucas are co-workers at Longhorn's Bar and Grill, 1115 Moro St., and that this and past work experience will help them in their campaign.

"We both understand the struggle of trying to work and go to school at the same time and our goal to increase the value of education at K-State will be a main focus as we move forward," she said.

Vet Med gains Senate seat despite no student filings

By Owen Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Veterinary Medicine gained a second student-representative seat in Student Senate this semester, although the college has not had a student representative in Student Senate in six years.

Tyson Moore, Student Senate chair, said the college has not had a senator because veterinary medicine students believe being a senator requires too much of a time commitment.

"Six years ago, Student Senate was a very different place," Moore said. "Student Senate was a lot bigger time commitment than it is now. They (vet-med students) are so busy trying to do their work and many of them don't have time (to be a senator)."

Bill Muir, Student Senate faculty representative, said the college gained a second seat after the senate reallocated the numbers of seats for each college.

He said the only change was that one seat was taken from graduate students and given to the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Muir said he hopes veterinary medicine students will find interest in Student Senate and that they should be concerned about the two vacancies.

"I hope they can find two students out of 400 (estimated students in the college)," he said. "Student Senate votes on bills that decide how fees are allocated for the vet-med college. They should have a voice in how money is spent toward their college."

Muir said the requirements for a veterinary medicine senate representative are less than those for other senators.

"I think that a lot of the vet-med students think that this is a huge time commitment," Muir said. "But the Student Senate bylaws stipulate that vet-med and graduate students don't have to be on committees and they don't have to have any other assignments other than coming to Student Senate meetings, which are no longer than an hour-and-a-half to two hours long every Thursday."

Moore said it is essential for veterinary medicine students to be involved with senate.

"It's really important to get those vacancies filled," Moore said. "The college needs to be represented when we are governing the university."

Rachel Gugler, sophomore in animal science and industry, said she is pre-veterinary medicine and is friends with many vet-med students.

"I know their schedules and their work is real intense," Gugler said. "They (vet-med students) learn every single bone on an animal and every nitch of every bone, and that's just for one test."

Gugler said she believed most vet-med students have to balance classes, campus organizations and jobs in their schedules, which she said might be the reason no vet-med students have chosen to run for Student Senate.

"I don't think you can fit in senate, vet-med and work," Gugler said. "You get so involved in classes and clubs you don't really have time."

Facebook groups becoming popular campaigning tool

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Signs of student body elections are on campus with sidewalk chalkings, banners and T-shirts.

However, student candidates are beginning to rely on another campaign outlet – Facebook.com.

"I think last year was one of the first years that Facebook was really utilized by campaigns at K-State," Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore said. "And this year they're utilizing it again."

The Facebook is an online directory that connects people through social networks at schools, according to its Web site. It was publicly launched on Feb. 4, 2004.

Moore campaigned for student body president alongside vice presidential candidate Matt Wagner last year.

The candidates started a Facebook group to keep potential voters informed, Moore said.

In terms of campaigning on Facebook.com, candidates were not allowed to purchase banner ads or ask random people to join their campaign groups.

Candidates also were asked to turn off the "groupies" function for their campaign groups at the mandatory meetings for candidates Feb. 20 and 21 to prevent unfair associations.

Sending Facebook messages was a convenient way to let supporters know when events were taking place and to remind them to vote, he said.

Moore said The Facebook also helped the candidates estimate the amount of potential student votes they had during election time, and that the aftermath proved these predictions false.

"It wasn't that good of an indicator, but during the elections, obviously, we paid attention," he said. "Honestly, as far as the entire campaign goes for us, Facebook was a very minor part. Matt and I wanted to get out there and talk to students face-to-face."

Moore's Facebook campaign group is still in tact, but today it goes by the name of "I Still Want Moore" and consists of about 100 members, which is a substantial decrease of the original number, Moore said.

About 40 percent of K-State undergraduates – 5 to 10 percent of whom are non-active users – are subscribed to The Facebook, said Ernie Perez, co-manager of the Media Development Center for Information Technology Assistance Center.

One concern with The Facebook is that used alone, it is not an adequate campaigning outlet when it comes to sharing platforms and making the issues known, Justin Bridges, freshman in political science, said.

"I think it's a good tool for people to get their name out, but as far as the issues go, not so much," Bridges said. "It's definitely important for students to follow up on other means as well."

Another factor to be taken into consideration during online campaigns, Moore said, is the content displayed on the Web site.

"You don't want to send students the wrong message, and if you're running for president or vice president, you want to portray your university and yourself as very professional because of your position," he said.

However, content is not only something that should be a concern during election time, Rebecca Gould, director of the Information Technology Assistance Center, said.

"These documents, whatever is posted, will live on forever," Gould said. "Students should be so careful about what they post."

While K-State is not necessarily monitoring The Facebook activity, she said students need to remember that the information they post is accessible worldwide.

"There's a false sense of security that (students) have in this online community, when they have no idea who's stalking," Gould said. "It's only as reliable as the integrity of the person who's posting it."

Dressing the part important aspect of being student representative

By Ashleigh Williams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While many students have the luxury of rolling out of bed and heading off to class in jeans and a T-shirt or sweatpants, students who represent the student body often dress up.

Bill Muir, faculty representative of Student Governing Association, said while there are no specific rules on the appropriate attire for student government, most students choose to dress formally throughout the day.

"There aren't any set rules," he said. "They represent the university, so they dress accordingly."

Student Body President Michael Burns said the way he dresses depends on the type of audience that he is around.

"Often times we make sure we have the appropriate attire for the audience we are in front of," he said.

Burns said he chooses to dress nicely most days because it is part of his job, and it gives him the opportunity to connect with people on a different level.

"I feel that dressing up is important because it can give us the ability to influence the audience, and it gives us accountability," Burns said. "By dressing the part, it allows us to begin on the right step and connect with people."

Burns said just because he chooses to dress in business attire everyday doesn't mean that it is necessarily enjoyable everyday, even though it is all part of the job.

"At times it isn't the most exciting thing to get up and put on a suit and tie," Burns said. "It is all part of the responsibility, and I've grown accustomed to it."

Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore said he wears nice pants and a collared shirt on a typical day on campus.

"Every once in a while I get tired of dressing up because it is just uncomfortable," he said.

TYSON MOORE

Long before Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore won the position of Student Senate chair, he lost his first senate race by a slim margin of three votes.

But Moore knew he couldn't give up immediately. Instead, the freshman applied for a position on former Student Body President John O'Hara's cabinet, and he has not left Student Senate since.

"Freshman year, I was disappointed when I lost by three votes," Moore, senior in information systems, said. "But I was interested in politics and I wanted to help K-State. I knew if I got into the right section of Student Senate, I could make a difference."

Moore has served many different positions on Student Senate, including senate vice-chair and College of Engineering senator.

Moore said he attends several meetings each day and gets little sleep at night.

"Yesterday, I started my day out with a meeting at 7:40 a.m., and I didn't leave the OSAS office until about 11:15 at night," Moore said. "Some days it's hard to get out of bed, but I just have to do it and be happy.

"I am passionate about the people at K-State, and I know if I don't make it to meetings, some of the initiatives we want to pass won't happen and that would be a disservice to the students and staff at K-State."

Moore said the biggest lesson he will take with him when he leaves K-State is the knowledge that he indirectly touched people's lives.

Moore ran for student body president in spring 2005, and he said he was amazed at the support and encouragement he received from students he didn't even know. He lost the election to Student Body President Michael Burns.

"When I ran for president, I wanted to win," Moore said. "But when I came out of the race, I knew I had a family at K-State, and that students really care about this university. My current position on senate fits my passion and personality, and I have learned about how to empower individuals to reach their potential.

"My advice to other students would be to not give up. If you focus on what you're really passionate about, you'll achieve those goals."

MICHAEL BURNS

Although Student Body President Michael Burns is accustomed to meeting important people, he said he was a little nervous while waiting to meet President George W. Bush at his Jan. 23 Landon Lecture.

"I was thinking, 'What am I supposed to say to this guy?'" Burns said. "But when he came around the corner, he was easygoing and sincere. I had about two minutes to talk to him, and I told him he should wear a purple tie more often."

Burns said he considers his biggest accomplishments as the tangible improvements that students notice in everyday situations.

"After a recent Landon Lecture, a student came up and thanked me for thinking about the small, everyday things at K-State," Burns said. "Hopefully, students are noticing the tangible things we accomplished."

Burns first got involved with senate three years ago, when a friend on senate introduced him to the opportunities that come with being able to work hand in hand with the administration at K-State.

Like Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore, Burns lost his first senate race but learned his lessons and won a seat the second time he ran. Burns said his position can be overwhelming as K-State administration, senators, committee members and faculty are interested in hearing his feedback on variety of issues.

But Burns said his experience was worth the effort.

"My days are out of control sometimes, but I wouldn't trade this experience for anything," Burns said. "It has been a long year, and we worked hard to accomplish the issues we campaigned about.

"When we turn over our office, the new president will give senate new blood, and they will have a chance to push new issues."

Burns said that if concerned students want to make a difference at K-State, they should get involved on Senate.

"There's this mystique that Senate doesn't do much," Burns said. "But you get out of it what you put into it. If you get involved and work hard, you will feel like you're making a difference."

Elected representatives responsible for student voices, funding

MEET THE CANDIDATES

Candidates were asked to complete a five-question survey concerning their goals for the positions for which they are running. Answers were cut off after the 20-word limit and were not corrected for grammar. Some of these candidates may not appear on the ballot due to disqualification. This is the most accurate information available at press time.

COLLEGE COUNCILS

Each college has a council with its own set of rules. There are about 10 to 16 students on a council. Councils work with Student Senate to fill open senate positions, determine funding and change constitutions.

STUDENT SENATE

Senate consists of 60 elected representatives, and each senator represents each individual college.

Two faculty members also serve on Student Senate, while three students serve on Faculty Senate.

Standing committees are also a part of Student Senate. Committees include the Operations Committee, which tallies senator absences and makes sure senate runs smoothly; the Academic Affairs and University Relations Committee, which deals with issues pertaining to student life, student representation and services; the Governmental Relations Committee, which lobbies state and local governments to address student concerns; Privilege Fee Committee, which is responsible for evaluating the allocation of student fees; and the Student Affairs and Social Services Committee, which is concerned with all matters of student life that relate to student rights, student services, student representation, university policies and campus facilities.

Senators write legislation, look over recommendations and maintain contact with the Kansas Board of Regents.

Senators also enact policies for the student body, college councils and Student Senate committees.

BOARD OF STUDENT PUBLICATIONS

The Board of Directors of Student Publications Inc., oversees the business of all student publications. The Board hires editors in chief for the Collegian and the Royal Purple. It also hires the advertising sales manager for both publications on a semester basis.

The board is not allowed to direct publications content. The board manages finances for the Collegian and Royal Purple and approves the budget.

UNION GOVERNING BOARD

The Union Governing Board focuses on issues concerning the K-State Student Union.

Fiscal issues are also handled by UGB and reviewed annually.

Casey Bieroth
AGRICULTURE COLLEGE COUNCIL—PRESIDENT

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I am leader, and I will effectively follow through with any goals that Ag Council sets for next year.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I would like Ag Council to be more accessible to College of Agriculture students in order to serve them better.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Another goal is for Ag Council to develop a strategic plan and periodically evaluate the progress being made.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Continuing to produce students who meet and execute the expectations of their employers will continue to be K-State's biggest challenge.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
As Ag Council becomes more accessible to College of Agriculture students, their concerns will be more easily heard.

Jarrod Bowser
AGRICULTURE COLLEGE COUNCIL—PRESIDENT

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I believe in leadership by service. I will listen to students and their concerns to voice their opinions.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Allowing students to take ownership in their college and empower them to make an impact.

What is another goal you have for your term?
There are always a lot of great ideas — follow through is necessary. I will make sure things happen.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
It is important that we help the new students of the Big Red One while improving our current system.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will have an open ear by just listening to student concerns and needs.

Stacy Mayo
AGRICULTURE COLLEGE COUNCIL—PRESIDENT

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have experience on the council executive team and some new ideas for next year's council.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To be a strong link between the university level and SGA and the club level with strong club participation.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To start some new programs that get both alumni and students involved.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The issue that should always face students is making sure that we have a strong voice in happenings of K-State.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I hope to get the executive team out to club meetings to show we are here for support and guidance.

John Bergin
AGRICULTURE COLLEGE COUNCIL SECRETARY

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
My diverse experience in agricultural organizations has helped me understand agricultural programs from a broad perspective.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I would like to focus on student developmental programs to ensure that purple stays dominate in the Ag industry.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Ensuring that all College of Ag departments, clubs and activities are treated with equality is another goal of mine.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Funding is always a primary concern for agricultural departments and clubs. Two-thousand six will be no different.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
If curiosity killed the cat, I must be treading on thin ice. I am always curious of another's perspective.

Jarah Casten
AGRICULTURE COLLEGE COUNCIL SECRETARY

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I am responsible, dependable, creative and will make Ag Council a first priority of mine if elected.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To get more students involved within the college clubs and organizations and show them the opportunities these hold for them.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To come up with new ideas and exciting innovations to current traditions here in the College of Ag.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The rising cost of tuition — we need to make sure there are scholarships available to students within the college.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I would encourage students to come to council meetings and voice their concerns and opinions, or find me on Facebook.

Melinda Tebow
AGRICULTURE COLLEGE COUNCIL SECRETARY

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have many years of secretarial experiences, as well as two year of Ag Council serving as an appointed officer.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
The most important role of a secretary is to keep good minutes from meetings. This is definitely goal number one.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Informing members of events at meetings through minutes is my second goal. I promise to e-mail minutes promptly following meetings.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
I believe the most important issue is the parking garage. It will change the parking situation and the look of campus.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
By e-mail or phone, students may contact me anytime with concerns about the minutes, list serve, or meeting times.

Kyle Baker
AGRICULTURE COLLEGE COUNCIL TREASURER

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have been on a nationally-ranked Par Law team and have a great passion for agriculture.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I would like to make it mandatory for professors to choose one book so there aren't five books per course.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I would like to develop low-interest student loans for the university to provide students.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
What to do with the extra $1.5 million just sitting around.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will always be around to talk to, or you could e-mail me issues that you think are important.

Matthew Pachta
AGRICULTURE COLLEGE COUNCIL TREASURER

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have practical experience and have held related offices in the past, so I am familiar with the skills needed.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Keeping all finances balanced and up-to-date and reporting accurate information back to the Agriculture Council.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Keep all council members and representatives informed of the proceedings from the Allocations Committee meetings.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Keeping tuition affordable for both present and future students is a top priority.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I am involved in many student organizations, making myself available to students so they can share concerns they might have.

Robin Ruff
AGRICULTURE COLLEGE COUNCIL TREASURER

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have held numerous leadership roles from student council president of my high school or offices in different college organizations.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
My goal is to fulfill all required duties and promote excellence within the College of Agriculture and on campus.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To attend every meeting with up-to-date information and provide quick feedback on all questions and concerns.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
KSU is facing lack of state financial support to help fund programs and departments within the college.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Have an open-door policy with knowledge of issues, so I can handle problems and concerns.

Clint Blaes
AGRICULTURE SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
My two years of experience as a senator and at-large committee member make me well-qualified for Student Senate.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To make sure students have a high-quality education and the services they want while keeping tuition and fees low.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I support the efforts to increase communication between students and SGA, and I hope to see that project be successful.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Tuition has and will be a big issue. We need to keep K-State affordable and provide the best education possible.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will keep an open communication policy for students and solicit opinions on any controversial issues that may arise.

Jarrod Bowser
AGRICULTURE SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?

Mary Geiger
AGRICULTURE SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have a combination of experience on Senate and a genuine concern for improving the K-State experience for all students.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I want to make the university seem small to agriculture students by voicing their concerns and representing their values.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I want to increase the understanding of SGA to agriculture students by reporting to them about SGA projects and accomplishments.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Funding is the biggest issue, and my goal is to educate my peers about where their money is spent.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will continue being active and continue asking my peers about their concerns with K-State.

Melissa Hildebrand
AGRICULTURE SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
Past experience in SGA and involvement on campus give me an understanding of how I can best serve the students.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I want students to have a greater understanding of what SGA does and the opportunities available to them in SGA.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I hope to attend a College of Agriculture organizational meeting once a month to visit with students about SGA.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The big three issues of tuition, parking and textbooks — all issues which SGA is heavily involved with.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
By attending organizational meetings beyond what I'm involved in and by actively participating in the College of Agriculture.

DaNesha McNeely
AGRICULTURE SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I will be a sophomore next year, and I've already served as an intern for a year — senator is next.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To let the student body know what SGA is and what we can do for them and then do something.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Make sure that the "Hey SGA" Web site becomes a successful tool for students to voice their concerns.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Every issue is important. The parking garage and tuition — we should address these problems together — student body and SGA.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Students can submit their concerns online at the Web site that the SASS committee created. I'll know through that.

Emily Schmeidler
AGRICULTURE SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
Dedication and commitment to service will allow me to devote my time and energy to K-State students and our community.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Primarily, I aim to bring student issues forward so that they can be addressed and solutions can be made.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I plan to serve as a voice for students not just in the College of Agriculture, but across campus.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Continuing progress in creating high-quality, affordable education will be of utmost importance for our students and their academic success.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will openly listen to student concerns through organizational, social and professional engagements and purposefully seek to understand their issues.

Dillon Stum
AGRICULTURE SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
My work ethic and determination to get the job done right.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To be an active representative of the students so I can convey their needs.

What is another goal you have for your term?
No comment

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The resale value of textbooks back to the bookstores.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will set up a meeting where students can come to voice their concerns.

Phil White
AGRICULTURE SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I feel my term in Senate has helped me familiarize myself with SGA and how it can best help students.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I simply want to make sure College of Agriculture students feel their interests are being fully represented to the university.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I want to make sure that all K-State students are heard as we continue to struggle with education funding issues.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Tuition will likely continue to be a major concern for students. I will continue working toward keeping these costs reasonable.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will continue to engage fellow students in conversation about campus issues. Likewise, I will remain open to their concerns.

Shandelle Renyer
ARCHITECTURE COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I'll combine my enjoyment of interacting with students and leadership experiences to obtain positive results from the concerns of students.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To increase the financial status of students by directing more money and reducing the difficulty in receiving scholarships.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I think it's important to increase students' awareness of the decisions being made that involve them.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Tuition increases and how the $1.5 million surplus account — acquired by the students' payments of bonds — will be spent.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will seek out the advice and concerns of KSU students and remain open to any suggestions brought to myself.

Bryan Cox
ARTS AND SCIENCES COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I will be a mover to make the council meet its goals and surpass its expectations to better serve you.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I want to strengthen the college's presence at Open House, not just for prospective students, but current students as well.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I support King/Besler's platform — specifically GTA language and teaching improvements — to make your math and biology classes easier to understand.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
K-State needs to stay strong, advancing our strengths while also dealing with problems (such as safety) in the community.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will work to encourage direct communications by all council persons with students in the college through visitations and personal discussion.

Annie Dwyer
ARTS AND SCIENCES COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have worked with SGA for two years, and I am dedicated to serving the interests of our student body.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To increase awareness of student concerns to SGA through personal communication, utilizing committees, new programs and ideas.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To further the progress of students' ideas and concerns by working with the leaders of our local government and community.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Working closely with the Manhattan area leaders to ensure progress concerning student issues — tuition costs, the parking garage and more.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Through personal communication, answering questions through e-mails and promoting usage of a public forum.

Luke Finley
ARTS AND SCIENCES COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I will bring a fresh voice to the college council and will represent the smaller majors in Arts and Sciences.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Making sure that helping students is the main focus of the college council.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Getting the highest quality services and teaching for our educations.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Continuing to produce students who meet and execute the expectations of their employers will continue to be K-State's biggest challenge.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I'll listen to the ideas and concerns of all students, not just the ones who voice their opinions the loudest.

Krista Leben
ARTS AND SCIENCES COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
My experience in politics makes me qualified because I'll listen to students and effectively represent their needs in political settings.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Arts and Sciences has the most students but the weakest voice. My goal is to give a voice to all our students.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Although Arts and Sciences is my main concern, I will make sure that all K-State students' interests are heard and met.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
K-State must remain competitive in recruitment. To do this and keep college affordable, we must keep tuition hikes low.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I am involved in many activities, and I will use this experience to make sure SGA is hearing students' needs.

Jenna McGovern
ARTS AND SCIENCES COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I know what it is like to be a student and want to know more about available opportunities.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I want to inform all students about the diversity of the Arts and Sciences College.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I want students to know where to go to ask questions and feel comfortable doing so.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
I would like to see more student involvement in improving the university and its communication with students.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I want to make sure students know that we want to hear their voices and know where to express them.

Jacinda Mein
ARTS AND SCIENCES COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
This would be my second term on college council.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To better establish the council on campus and get the council's name out.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To let students know the resources that are available to them through the council.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Safety and monetary concerns on campus.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Council has been working on attending Arts and Sciences organizational meetings.

Ashleigh Reynolds
ARTS AND SCIENCES COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have a good deal of leadership experience, and I am passionate about the future of K-State.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Above all, I want to make sure that I listen to the concerns of students and am a good representative.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I would like to make the Arts and Sciences Council a more active part of SGA.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Retention of students. We're great getting students here, but we need to work on keeping them.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will make myself available to the student body and take the feedback I receive back to the council.

Taylor Symons
ARTS AND SCIENCES COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
Senate intern, understanding of SGA and advanced communication skills.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Make sure the governor's higher education budget raise goes through.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Improved and continued contact with Dean White and other college of Arts and Sciences administration.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Parking and construction. With the beginning of the garage construction, my goal is make sure it passes as smoothly for students as possible.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Visitations to Arts and Sciences organizations, consistent communication with friends and peers and casual conversation with peers in Arts and Sciences classes

Lauren Tipton
ARTS AND SCIENCES COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
My current experience with Arts and Sciences Council and my dedication to all organizations I am currently involved with.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Students can feel like a number in a large college, and a better faculty-student connection could help alleviate this problem.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Involvement from all majors in Arts and Sciences Day. We are a diverse college and should be proud of it.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
There seems to be a continuing issue with the lack of student involvement and diversity in student organizations.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
By being available to listen and work toward a system where concerns can be voiced anonymously for the council.

Jamie Ball
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I'm currently serving as a Senate intern who's actively involved on campus and participated in student government in high school.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To provide an open and approachable link for my constituents to voice their opinions and concerns about their university.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To try and provide a unified atmosphere for all students and to keep tuition at a manageable rate.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Finding a solution to the current textbook problem of having to buy books that students don't actually need for class.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
By remaining active and involved on campus and communicating with as many students as possible.

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I was a Senate intern this year, so I have experience working with SGA. I'm also very involved on campus.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I want a more user-friendly textbook system with earlier notice so students can buy books elsewhere if they choose.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I want to increase the communication between SGA and students so that you always know where we stand.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
I think it comes down to getting a fun and quality — yet affordable — education.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I welcome your comments at all times on whatever subject. E-mail or call me, and I'll get back to you.

Nacole Boan
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
Three years of experience. Passion, knowledge and a genuine concern for K-State and the students here.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To continue taking steps in student-centered tuition enhancements, parking, safety and staying ahead of student concerns.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Helping improve the image of SGA and to show students the positive effects of the organization.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
There is no one issue. Rising tuition, safety, textbooks — they all are important.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Continue to make myself open for communication and concern from students.

Marty Boeschiling
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
As just another ordinary student at K-State, I feel I have an excellent idea what issues students have concerns about.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I have serious concerns with several measures begun by the current senate and others, including the proposed parking garage.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I would also like to see changes in the way the budget is distributed and how the community perceives K-State.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The proposed parking garage is one of the major issues, and I know there are students who are against it.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will hold office hours every Friday and Saturday night from 10 p.m. to 3 a.m. somewhere around campus and Aggieville.

Jessica Chipman
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have a genuine interest in campus affairs, experience with student government in high school and was Senate intern.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I hope to increase awareness about Senate because many students don't realize the impact it has dealing with campus life.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I hope to increase involvement of Senate members with the rest of the KSU students.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Probably the rise of tuition costs and the increase in textbook buy-back costs.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I remain active in a diverse group of activities on campus and will continue to encourage communication between students.

Bryan Cox
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have a familiarity with the SGA legislative and procedural process, as well as a working coalition with other senators.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I will bring the power in Senate back into the hands of elected senators and away from the unelected leadership.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I support Matt King and Emily Besler's action plans and will work with whichever candidate wins to make K-State better.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
K-State needs to stay strong, advancing our strengths while also dealing with problems (such as safety) in the community.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will work to encourage direct communications by all senators with students in their college through visitations and personal discussion.

Molly Hamm
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I'm personable, innovative, ambitious and determined. As a Senate intern, I've had multiple experience creating and implementing programs for K-State.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I would like classroom environment to improve substantially with English-proficient staff, better seating and technology, visible TEVALS, etc.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I want to continue making Senate more visible and accessible in order to better solve the problems that impact students.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
As many candidates would agree, I think the issues students are most concerned with are parking, safety and textbooks.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I'm approachable and encourage any student to contact me when they want issues addressed, or use our Web site: www.ksu.edu/heysga.

Josh Hersh
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I've been on Senate for a year and now understand the process of advocating for the interests of students.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Inform students where their money is being spent and promoting services to students that they already pay for.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To see SGA collaborate with Leadership Studies in promoting community service and to encourage civic awareness and involvement.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Campus safety — we need to educate students on being safe at night and increase lighting in areas surrounding campus.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Ernest Hemingway said, "When people talk, listen completely. Most people never listen." I'll talk less, and listen more.

Piper Hoskins
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have had many experiences in leadership, and I am active in school. I also have a passion for change.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I want to bring the issues that K-State has to Senate and keep in touch with the students.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Creating more of an awareness throughout the student body of what SGA can do for them.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The rising cost of tuition and textbooks.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I am very involved on campus and easily accessible to hear the suggestions and concerns of fellow students.

Matt King
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
My two years of experience in SGA as the Governmental Relations Chair makes me the most qualified candidate.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I want to revamp SafeRide to ensure students do not wait longer than 10 minutes for safe rides home.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I want to increase GTA participation in teaching workshops and increase the number of high-tech classrooms to better our education.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
We must discover how K-State best fits into the greater Manhattan community in areas like parking, rental properties and safety.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will make myself available to students once a week during a question-and-answer forum in the Union.

Kyle Lawrence
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I am the most qualified candidate due to the experience I have in SGA and in other organizations around campus.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
The single most important goal I would accomplish is to bring the student government closer to the student body.

What is another goal you have for your term?
One important goal for my term would be to find new ways to make college more affordable.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The most important issue at K-State is maintaining the superior standards that K-State has become known for.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I would be aware of student concerns by visiting groups and organizations as well as staying informed.

Krista Leben
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?

Madison Loeb
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I've already gained a year of experience in Senate being an intern and would effectively represent students' concerns.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Creating a stronger link between Senate and the students, making it easier for concerns to be voiced with visible results.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Making campus and the surrounding areas a safer and more secure atmosphere for the students, especially at night.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The issues that have gained the most attention this year are safety of the students, parking, tuition and textbooks.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Making myself easily accessible and actually going out on and around campus to see which concerns are most pressing.

Jim Mosimann
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
There are many excellent candidates. I simply promise you that I'll fight for student issues and represent you with honor.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To continue working on uniting the student body with its student government.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Another goal is for Ag Council to develop a strategic plan and periodically evaluate the progress being made.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Ensuring students that their teachers will be held accountable in regards to language proficiency requirements.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
By keeping my eyes and ears open to the concerns of others. It's that simple.

Erin Muse
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
To be qualified, you need to be a K-State student who has classmates' best interests at heart. That's me.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I want to reconnect SGA to the entire student body. Student Government shouldn't be intimidating.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I'm not going to make any promises I can't keep.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Parking and tuition — those two will be important issues every year.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I'm a friendly person willing to listen. Plus, I'm on Facebook. That keeps me connected to hundreds of students.

Mike Puzzele
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
My experience, sense of service to something greater than myself, empathy with diverse people and my commitment to excellence.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
The optimal allocation of finances to programs and projects that best serve the students, the university and the community.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To find a proper balance between accessibility to and quality of education for all of our increasingly diverse student population.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Accommodating the impending influx of people to Manhattan and K-State as a result of the reorganization of Fort Riley.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have served as a Senate intern, one year as a senator and am the Privilege Fee Committee Vice-Chair.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Stay in touch with other K-Staters. Student input is important to SGA — it makes it stronger and more creative.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Getting the campuswide honors system off the ground will require a lot of student leadership from SGA.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
K-State students are always concerned about tuition, textbooks, campus safety and financial aid.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will stay active in other campus organizations and be in tune with student concerns.

D'Andre Williams
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
My desire to make all the voices of my constituents heard makes me the most qualified candidate for Arts and Sciences senator.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
My goal this year is to work to improving equipment and technology in the Arts and Sciences classrooms.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To make the student body more aware of what's going on in senate and issues involving their welfare.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Tuition increases

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Through the new "Hey SGA" Web site, where students can go and share concerns, ideas and desires with student government.

Alyssa Williams
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
Experience — I've always held leadership positions to the highest standard. I personally feel satisfaction from constituents is the greatest accomplishment.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Student Senate relations — I represent KSU students. I want to hear your voice, and I want to act on it.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Safety — I am sick of rape, fear and unsolved problems. I don't want problems. I want solutions.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Cost — Tuition, books and parking fees costs are rising every semester. KSU students need affordable education.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Taking action — I want to take your voice to the floor and debate it until I find a suitable solution.

Keaton Brewer
BUSINESS COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I am a well-rounded student who is goal-oriented and motivated to provoke change.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Unite the administration, faculty and students of the College of Business Administration so that the college can continue to progress.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To promote cooperation between the college administration and councils.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
What comes next — K-State has progressed greatly during the past 20 years and needs to decide what comes next.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will always be open to listening to students concerns and taking the proper course of action to formulate solutions.

Larry Fadler
BUSINESS COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I'm the most qualified candidate because of my hard work ethic and dedication to K-State. No one will outwork me.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Bringing down book prices. Giving Varney's competition on their current monopoly is necessary — books shouldn't cost as much as tuition.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Enactment of an English-speaking test for all professors. It's impossible to learn if you can't understand your instructor.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Book prices is the biggest issue facing K-State. We pay some of the highest prices for books among the Big 12.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Talking to students is a major part of this office. Asking people about their K-State-related views is a necessity.

Vanessa Gower
BUSINESS COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I really care about the issues within the College of Business, plus I'm hard-working and organized.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I am interested in making Business Council more effective by truly focusing on the needs of students in the college.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I would like to see Business Council collaborate with other groups within the college to, again, be more effective.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
I believe the wait-listing system still presents a problem in the College of Business, as well as the entire university.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
By being both observant and approachable, I hope to always be conscious of the concerns of other students.

Cody Herbster

I have served on Business Council and Student Senate for the past year. I am hard-working and enthusiastic.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
My goal is to provide students with more availability into business classes, which are needed to graduate on time.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To promote and help students get involved in the new honors program in the College of Business Administration.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The need for an improvement of communication between the student body and student government.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Through listening and communicating with students for comments and concerns.

Jacob Will
BUSINESS COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have already served on Business Council once and Chuck Norris approved.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I want to have piñatas at Open House so that the children may whack at them with big sticks.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I want to make Business Council a more happenin' place. It's time to get this group riled up.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
I believe the squirrels are under-represented. I want to give them a vote on Business Council.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will keep my ear on the ground and my eye in the sky.

Matt Woodward
BUSINESS COLLEGE COUNCIL

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have served on SGA for the past two years and have worked for my constituents in the College of Business.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To help develop a working and efficient honors program in the College of Business that students know about.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To help students have more tangible evidence that SGA works for them and to better the university as a whole.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The most important issue facing K-State is keeping tuition at a constant rate for current students.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I am always open to suggestions from students about the College of Business and the university.

Cameron Addington

Keaton Brewer
BUSINESS SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I am a well-rounded student who is goal-oriented and motivated to provoke change.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Unite the administration, faculty and students of the College of Business Administration so that the college can continue to progress.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To promote cooperation between the college administration and councils.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
What comes next — K-State has progressed greatly during the past 20 years and needs to deride what comes next.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will always be open to listening to students concerns and taking the proper course of action to formulate solutions.

Larry Fadler
BUSINESS SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I'm the most qualified candidate because of my hard work ethic and dedication to K-State. No one will outwork me.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Bringing down book prices. Giving Varney's competition on their current monopoly is necessary — books shouldn't cost as much as tuition.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Enactment of an English-speaking test for all professors. It's impossible to learn if you can't understand your instructor.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Book prices is the biggest issue facing K-State. We pay some of the highest prices for book among the Big 12.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Talking to students is a major part of this office. Asking people about their K-State-related views is a necessity.

William Lopez

I have served as a senator for the past two years and really have come to understand the system.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To really get the student body interested in SGA.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To provide the student body with the correct information about SGA.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
How we are going to continue to unite as a campus.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Talking to as many (students) as I can.

Gavin Couvelha
EDUCATION SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
Being a student senator for two years understanding how SGA works through experience, representing students' voices and producing reputable results.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I would like to see more student concerns addressed with prompt responses and reliable, realistic advantageous solutions.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I will strive to create accountability on all levels for the students I represent, ensuring a homogeneously qualitative collegiate experience.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Tuition, books and personal safety are all issues prominent to students for which I have experiences working with.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will keep an open advantageous dialog for collective communication to address and represent all student issues.

Whitney Hubert
EDUCATION SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
My experience as a student government intern has given me the insight to be a successful senator.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To represent the College of Education to my best.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To resolve issues surrounding the rising costs of textbooks and tuition.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Continued desire to be the university of choice for most students academically, financially and socially.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
By being available, listening to everyone's concerns and voicing these concerns at Senate.

Nicole Hunter

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I'm experienced and want to help K-State be a better place. I'm extremely outgoing and want to do something good.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To change things that the students want changed at K-State. Give feedback from the students to better Manhattan.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To change the views on education. It is a very important department, and I feel it would have changes to better it.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
I would have to say either parking or tuition. Each of these can and should be fixed.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
First off, by listening to my peers, see what they have problems with and then go from there.

Lydia Peele
EDUCATION SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
My experiences with both Student Senate and the College of Education will help me effectively represent K-State students.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To be a positive representative of the College of Education.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To increase student involvement and communication with members of student senate.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?

I am involved on campus and I feel that I could represent a large number of people.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
My main goal is to improve the teacher evaluation process in order for the student body to be more successful.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I would like to see a decrease in the price of textbooks.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
One important issue is obviously parking. I would love to see K-State make a final decision and pursue it.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
By being involved on campus and in the community I will hear from a large variety of the student body.

Allison Day
ENGINEERING COLLEGE COUNCIL - PRESIDENT

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have three years of experience serving in ESC and held leadership positions with other activities.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
My main goal is to increase awareness and involvement in the activities our council coordinates.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I would also like to increase membership and attendance at meetings.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Funding for student organizations and projects.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
By allowing discussion in meetings and being available to discuss any student concerns.

Shannon Timmons
ENGINEERING COLLEGE COUNCIL - PRESIDENT

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
My dedication, appreciation and motivation will produce unification, communication and collaboration within ESC and College of Engineering.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Increase the publicity of K-State engineering organizations and societies' purpose, participants and meeting times.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Unification through service — I plan to establish, continue and develop programs whose purpose is to serve students and faculty.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Increasing tuition load causing students to rebalance work, study and extracurricular involvements, so college organizations must maintain efficiency and effectiveness.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
Availability, approachability and reliability. I will welcome communication by phone, e-mail, in person.

Tim Weninger

I am currently a Student Senate intern and also serve as the Student Senate Liaison to the College of Engineering.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
My most important goal is to better the relationship between Senate, the staff and the engineering students.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Another goal of mine is to look at the fees engineering students pay and see if they can be lowered.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The overwhelming issue facing K-State is the large increase in the cost of tuition and books.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
By making myself available to engineering students through involvement in the college, I will be able to represent their needs.

William P. Service III
ENGINEERING SENATOR

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I am the most qualified candidate because I place the student's ambitions and concerns above my own.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To aid, facilitate and support the ambitions and learning environment of the students.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To adequately deliver the concerns of the students to the Student Governing Association to improve student life.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Working and developing relationships with community members and city commissioners to provide services to K-State students, like parking and housing.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
Being a student senator for two years, understanding how SGA works through experience, representing students' voices and producing reputable results.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
I would like to see more student concerns addressed with prompt responses and reliable realistic advantageous solutions.

What is another goal you have for your term?
I will strive to create accountability on all levels for the students I represent, ensuring a homogeneously qualitative collegiate experience.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
Tuition, books, and personal safety are all issues prominent to students for which I have experiences working with.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will keep an open advantageous dialog for collective communication to address and represent all student issues.

Bryan Cox
BOARD OF DIRECTORS STUDENT PUBLICATIONS

What makes you the most qualified candidate?
I have been a student journalist for four years and believe strongly in the freedom and power of the press.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
My goal is to encourage value in freedom of speech, as well as proper voluntary journalistic restraint in Student Publications.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Another goal is to improve the student body's trust in Student Publications by improving the publications' quality.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
K-State needs to maintain student involvement and awareness of campus events. I hope to encourage Student Publications' part in this.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
I will encourage students to contact the Fourum with their concerns so that the Collegian itself can recognize them.

Primaries used by some to gauge elections

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ten votes separated the top two pairs in Wednesday's primary elections.

This is not the first time in recent K-State history the primary elections have had a narrow margin in Student Governing Association elections.

In the 2004 student body president and vice president primary elections, there were 45 votes separating presidential pairs Hayley Urkevich and Erik Ankrom from Vicki Conner and Jeremy Sandall.

In the general elections, Urkevich and Ankrom won the race by three votes. A total of 6,241 students cast their votes in the general elections in 2004, compared to 3,237 votes in the 2003 general elections.

Usually, the closer the presidential race, the more likely voters are to turn out in higher numbers, said Bill Muir, faculty representative to Student Senate.

"I think that in any year a close primary brings out more people because everybody feels like their vote makes a difference in the general election," Muir said of the higher-than-normal turnout in the 2004 general elections.

In Wednesday's primary elections, there were 10 votes separating the candidate pairs of Matt King and Emily Besler from Lucas and Katie Maddy. There were eight presidential candidate pairs in the primaries.

Muir said since primaries consist of several candidate pairs getting narrowed down to two, it is difficult to make a judgment of what the results mean.

"In the general election, there's only two pairs, and that's when it gets interesting," Muir said.

The 2002 Student Governing Association elections was the first time primary elections took place at K-State.

In the 2000-01 session, Student Senate voted 46-0-0 for a statutes amendment, creating a primary election for student body president and vice president.

The voter turnout for the run-off elections had been significantly lower than general elections, and creating a general election would in theory increase turnout, according to the legislation.

Muir said before primaries, there was a general election that candidates had to get majority of the votes for in order to win. If neither pair received a majority of the votes, there was a run-off election.

Muir said primaries were created to take the focus off of the run-off election.

"If you have a primary, that narrows it down to two," Muir said. "Then, if you have a general election, it gives it more focus."

Another first with elections that affected voter turnout was the use of electronic voting.

Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator for the Office of Student Activities and Services, said 2000 was the first year electronic voting was used in SGA elections. An outside company was used for electronic voting until 2003, he said.

"It was switched to in-house voting because the out-of-house companies were not able to meet our specific needs," Harlan said.

Muir said while electronic voting has increased voter turn-out, there were problems in the past with private vendors and the accuracy of numbers.

In 2002, Zac Cook and Todd Kohman contested the results of the general election after 40 votes separated them from winners Matt Wolters and Mandy Achilles.

The pair's claim for a revote included that students were denied the right to vote because of a confusing voting process provided by the out-of-house online vendor iBallot.com, according to an article in the Collegian on March 26, 2002.

Cook and Kohman won the re-election with 1837 votes, compared to 1740 votes for Wolters and Achilles.

There were 246 abstention votes in the 2002 primary elections.

Muir said in 2002, students could opt not to vote for a candidate, and it was considered an abstention.

Abstention votes are no longer possible since Student Senate amended the election regulations to count actual votes, Muir said.

"You can have write-in candidates, but not abstention today," Muir said. "It only counts the actual numbers of votes today."

Muir said the voter turnout difference between the 2002 general election and re-election might have been due to those who voted in the first one not voting in the second one.

"With most elections, it depends on the day it happens," he said. "That's just the way the votes came out."

Student Senate chair Tyson Moore said primary elections are a decent indicator of general election results.

"They're not always steadfast and true because sometimes the underdog ends up winning," said Moore, who has been involved with SGA for three years. "I think it depends on the year, but sometimes it's a strong indicator."

Moore said he does not think the votes for pairs that did not advance have an effect in general elections.

"In my estimation and from what I've viewed, the candidates that don't advance – although they may say they support another pair – they don't campaign for them," Moore said. "So whoever they support doesn't mean their votes went to the other pair.

"The votes then could go wherever, or they may not vote at all."

Student Body President Michael Burns said primary elections are a fair assessment of how candidates will place in general elections.

Burns, who has been on Student Senate for three years, said it is difficult to gauge where votes for candidates who didn't advance to general elections will go.

"It depends on whether students are voting for their friends or on the issues," he said.

Student dies from injuries sustained in car wreck

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State student died Monday night from injuries sustained in an automobile accident early Sunday morning.

Andrew Allen Young, 19, junior in physics, was pronounced dead at 9:30 p.m. Monday at Via Christi-St. Francis hospital in Wichita, where he was transported Sunday.

At about 1 a.m. Sunday, Young was involved in a chase that included officers from the Riley County Police Department and the Kansas Highway Patrol. KHP Lt. John Eichkorn said Young was partially ejected from the truck he was driving when he hit a post and lost control. Young was not wearing a seat belt, and officers are still investigating whether alcohol was involved.

Young's mother, Sheri Knight, said she hopes students remember her son for the person he was, not for what happened the night of his death.

"He did make poor choices that night, but that's not what defines Andrew's life," she said. "How many of those kids can say they have never drank and drove?"

Knight described Young as a good friend, son and brother.

"He was a very smart, very loving young man who would do anything if you asked," she said. "He just had such a big future ahead of him."

Young
JUNIOR

The last time Knight saw Young was when he went home for a visit the weekend of Feb. 25.

"It's been very tough, you know. When someone dies like this it is an awful thing," she said.

Knight said Young's organs were donated Tuesday.

"Seven people's lives are being saved because of him," she said.

Young also was a member of Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity. Evan Stos, TKE president, said although he did not know Young very well, he remembered him as a courteous person who was easy to talk to.

"We have quite a few guys going to his funeral service, and we are planning on doing some kind of memorial service at the house during our formal dinner," Stos said.

Heather Reed, assistant dean of student life, said the university has reached out to Young's friends on campus since his death. She said University Counseling Services also is available for those who are affected by Young's death.

"It's just part of the support we provide for our K-State family," she said.

Young's memorial service will be at 2 p.m. Friday at St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Olpe, Kan., about 20 miles east of Emporia, Kan. A graveside service will follow at 4 p.m. at the Lincoln Township Cemetery in Lebo, Kan.

Knight said instead of flowers for the memorial service, donations should be sent to the Jones Vanarsdale Funeral Home in Lebo.

Young is survived by his father Keith Young, Debary, Fla.; mother Sheri Knight, Lebo, Kan.; siblings Chelsea and Brandon Knight, Lebo, and Austin and Braeden Young, Debary; stepfather Greg Knight, Lebo; and stepmother Lisa Young, Debary.

Student Union provides students with comfort, service to campus

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Student Union has provided students and alumni with five decades of service and activity, from diverse programs and famous speakers to banking services and a permanent art gallery.

Now, it's time to celebrate.

The Union is celebrating its 50th birthday today, opening half a decade ago on March 8, 1956.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said celebrating 50 years at the Union is a chance for people to look at the past and future of K-State.

"I think it's an opportunity to reflect even back before the 50 years," Connaughton said. "It presents a lot of opportunities for nostalgia and shows the student body of 2006 what it took to get us to today."

Connaughton said he has consistently been impressed with the quality of K-State students and the pride they take in the Union.

"People care about the appearance of the Union," he said. "They treat it like their home."

During his time at the Union, Connaughton said one of his most vivid memories was when President Ronald Reagan spoke at Ahearn Field House in 1982. Although the president did not speak in the Union, Connaughton said a group of secret service agents perched on the Union's roof to get a bird's-eye view of the area.

While the Union has experienced decades of success, economic issues and funding have been cause for concern in recent years.

"The last few years, since we're not state-funded, the spike we've experienced in cost of energy has been a concern," Connaughton said.

After serving the campus for 50 years, Connaughton said keeping the Union a haven for students and alumni is still the focus.

"They can enter in and feel that it's their living room," he said. "This is home away from home."

Bill Wisdom, assistant director and specialized retail liaison of the Union and co-chair of the Union's 50th anniversary committee, has worked about 29 years at the Union and has seen the constant number of students who come to seek refuge in the walls of the structure.

Inside, Page 8
The Union has been host to celebrities and political figures alike.

Wisdom said he thinks much of the Union's popularity stems from services provided.

"The Union's always had good traffic," Wisdom said.

For the future, Wisdom said he wants the Union to continue its mission to provide diverse activities for the student body.

"I would hope our amount of programming kind is there to help support the Union," Wisdom said. "We would never want the Union to lose that aspect."

Beth Bailey, program manager and assistant director of the Union and co-chair of the Union's 50th anniversary committee, said celebrating 50 years

City to use eminent domain

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan City Commission voted Tuesday to use eminent domain to take property from two landowners for the downtown redevelopment project.

The commission unanimously decided to begin the process to take properties located at 517 N. Third St., owned by Penny Ferlemann Sizemore, and 521 N Third St., owned by Sizemore's sister-in-law, Marlene Ferlemann. The property at 517 N. Third St. is leased by Family Dollar.

Representatives of Dial Realty Corp., the company orchestrating the redevelopment project, said it had been able to reach agreements with all the other properties in the project's boundaries except these two.

Dial had been able to build around two other landowners who refused to sell, but their plans call for Third Street to be relocated, and the two buildings, which will be taken with eminent domain, are in the way.

The Simmons Company, which Dial brought in to appraise the properties in question, had decided Sizemore's property is worth $578,000. Dial representatives

Polls close at 6 tonight for elections

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Voting for Student Governing elections ends at 6 tonight, and the results will be announced shortly after the polls close.

Elections Commissioner Tanner Banion said the Office of Student Activities will e-mail the results to campus media outlets shortly after 6 p.m.

Chris Swick, news director for KSDB-FM 91.9, said Wildcat 91.9 will begin covering elections at 5:30 p.m. with live interviews from the two presidential candidate pairs and a taped interview with Banion. The radio station also will announce the results after 6 p.m. and have live interviews with the candidate pairs, Swick said.

Election results also will be announced on a special elections edition of Manhattan Matters on Cox channel 8.

Banion said students should remember to vote today, if they haven't already.

"It's important to pick the best people for the positions, because they are making decisions on millions of dollars of student monies and representing students' views to the university administration," he said.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Immigrant tuition

TOPEKA — A legal battle to repeal a law giving tuition breaks to undocumented immigrants has survived a repeal attempt. The bill allows children of illegal immigrants to receive in-state tuition. Critics of the law say it rewards those who have entered the country illegally, while supporters say children should not be punished for their parents' crimes.

Statewide gambling

TOPEKA — A bill has been introduced into the Kansas Senate that would allow gambling establishments state-wide. Proponents of the bill say the funds could be used to fund increases in school funding mandated by the Kansas Supreme Court. Critics claim the bill is being pushed too fast and not allowing time for those that oppose the bill to testify.

Opium bumper crop

KABUL, Afghanistan — An increase in the cultivation of opium poppies has officials worried that a boom crop may increase trade of opium and heroin. The international community has spent millions of dollars to curtail poppy growth in Afghanistan, which supplies nearly 90 percent of the world's opium and heroin.

Multiple offices still available for write-in candidates

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Within some colleges, there are Student Governing Association elected positions that have a low number of filings.

Bill Muir, Student Senate faculty representative, said the low number of filing for college councils could be attributed to low emphasis on the importance of college councils.

"(The low filing numbers) could be partly because students don't understand what college councils are; people don't emphasize it enough – the college council itself, or the students in general," Muir said.

Responsibilities of college councils include advising the college dean and setting up program activities, Muir said, with those responsibilities varying from each college.

Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore said in the event of a tie with write-in candidates, the college council votes to break the tie.

"If there are vacancies available, they would all be offered positions," Moore said. "If not, it goes off rank of college council."

One college that has a low number of filings is the College of Human Ecology, which has eight filings for 16 positions.

Cara Richardson, events director for the dean of the College of Human Ecology, said the College of Human Ecology Council promote elections in interest groups and encourages students to run for an office. The council also distributes election information packets and sends e-mails to council members to encourage people to run, Richardson said.

"In the past, when students have wanted to be write-ins, we have also sent out e-mails about it on the college council list-serv," Richardson said.

The College of Business Administration also did not have enough filings for its college council, with nine filings for 15 positions.

Ike Ehie, associate dean of business, said the college has a bulletin in the Calvin Hall student lounge to encourage students to run for office.

Darla Stone, adviser for College of Education Council, said the College of Education has problems getting students to officially file to run for a council position.

"We've never had trouble getting enough people to serve on council, but for some reason can't get them to officially file," Stone said.

Instead of students officially filing for office prior to elections, Stone said some council members are elected by the council in April.

"I don't know why it happens that way," she said. "Maybe students don't know right now if they can make the commitment, but in April after preenrollment, they figure it out."

There are some colleges that have more filings than positions available, such as the College of Agriculture. Twelve students filed for five positions within the Agriculture College Council, and nine students filed for five senator positions.

Jackie McClaskey, assistant dean for the College of Agriculture, said the college emphasizes leadership roles for students starting their freshman year.

"We promote leadership as one of the most important roles of being a K-State student, and it is talked about from day one at K-State," said McClaskey, who also was K-State student body president from 1991-93.

McClaskey said within the College of Agriculture, there have been a number of freshman this year that have applied and filed for leadership roles.

"We are trying to ingrain it in what we do, but we also have good years and bad years where we don't have enough candidates running for positions," she said. "We all have good years and bad years (in regards to different colleges)."

Final debate addresses platforms

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Presidential candidate pairs Matt King and Emily Besler and Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy faced off Tuesday in a presidential debate in the Union Courtyard.

The presidential hopefuls were asked questions by audience members and four members of the media convergence panel, including Adrianne DeWeese of the Collegian; Chris Swick of KSDB-FM 91.9; Kelsey Cook, Manhattan Matters reporter; and Alex Yocum of the Royal Purple.

King, one of the two candidates for student body president, opened the debate with his platform after winning the coin toss.

"We have goals for the next year," King said. "We want to decrease the wait time for SafeRide, increase academic excellence in the classroom and have high technology classrooms on campus."

Another of King's ideas would be to start a new tradition for K-State football games.

"We want to implement a student section where students have a place to come and celebrate and get pumped up for the football games in one place," he said.

Lucas Maddy, the second presidential candidate, said his platform focuses around three Cs – Campus, Career and Community.

"I have been involved on campus, in this community and in (Katie and I's) community back home for our entire lives," he said. "Our campaign is built around three things that will affect every person on this campus."

Diversity and international students were points discussed during the debate. Lucas said promoting the diversity programs is a step in the right direction.

"There are diversity programs within our college, but they are not fully set up," he said. "We want to continue to expand that, because if we do, we will continue to be recognized as a national leader. We will be recognized as a place where international students can come and be comfortable and feel at home."

King said K-State is working to help students entering the workforce in a diverse country.

"We have to make sure that students – once they graduate – will be in the multicultural work force," King said. "To be able to make that transition to the workplace after graduation, we want to see that on campus."

In regard to unifying the Manhattan community and K-State, Lucas said the university and the community are becoming closer.

"I hope the Manhattan community pays attention to what K-State does," he said. "Manhattan used to be known as K-State. When people asked where K-State was, they said Manhattan, but when asked where Manhattan was, they pointed to the northeast section of the United States.

"It's definitely something that should be kept together for the benefit of everyone involved."

Elections '06

Voting for SGA general elections ends at 6 p.m. today. Vote at sgaelections.k-state.edu.

To make himself accessible to students, King said he plans on setting up a table in the K-State Student Union.

"One of the easiest ways to be reached is by sitting at a table in the Union," he said. "We would pick an hour when the foot traffic is the highest in the Union."

Lucas said he has an alternative way of receiving feedback if he is elected.

"We plan to host the Hour of Accountability on Wildcat 91.9," he said. "We're going to host a radio show, where we will be able to hear people who can call in and ask questions. It's a way to get in touch with us, without having to worry about coming to the Union or finding us on campus."

During closing arguments, Lucas said he wants to add something new to student government.

"We want to emphasize that putting a fresh voice into the student government is not a bad thing," he said. "Sometimes when you're in the same position over and over again, you get into the same action, and you never want to fall into that."

King said he will bring experience to the office if he is elected.

"What we've really been talking about today is our experiences, and that's the difference between these two campaigns," he said. "Experience is not a bad word. For us, we believe it's a very good one, because we have the results that students have been able to see."

Ryan Bradburn, senior in animal science and industry, said he thought the debate was informative.

"They have run really clean campaigns," he said. "It's good to hear them expound on the issues and where they stand."

Bradburn said although it didn't affect his vote, he enjoyed the debate.

"It brought to light what they really believe in," he said.

TO THE POINT

Union's 50th marks historic event for K-State

One of K-State's best-known icons will reach a milestone this week when the K-State Student Union celebrates its 50th anniversary.

Since its doors opened in 1956, the Union has been host to both the K-State campus and the Manhattan community by offering activities, events and services, as well as being a place for students to relax and take a break from classes.

Those who visit the Union find plenty to do in the Recreation Center. On the weekends, although most of the campus is silent, the Union Program Council offers free eats and activities through its AfterHours program, as well as cheap movies in Forum Hall.

Students regularly enjoy multicultural events, musical performances, speeches and debates in the Union Courtyard, and the second floor of the Union offers some of the most heavily utilized meeting space on campus. In addition, the fact that it houses offices, among them KSDB-FM 91.9 and the Student Governing Association, shows that the Union stands as the epicenter of activity on campus.

Our congratulations and thanks go to the people and organizations who make the Union a landmark on the K-State campus, a place that enriches the personal, professional and cultural experiences of those in the K-State and Manhattan communities. We hope the Union looks forward to a history that is as long and rich as that of K-State itself.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Immigration issues

U.S. must invite outsiders to become Americans

KODY COOPER

The issue of immigration is more complicated than a John Kerry position statement on [insert topic]. Trying to evaluate the situation is somewhat like trying to evaluate Tom Cruise's psychiatric profile.

At least 12 million illegal immigrants reside in America. Some work hard, seeking economic opportunities unavailable in Third World countries. Still others suckle on the American welfare state teat (also unavailable in Third World countries).

Gobs of illegals pour over our porous border every day. Many describe this unprecedented tide as an "epidemic."

The open border is infecting America with open sores. These open sores include the several million pounds of marijuana and cocaine, and the thousands of men, women and children trafficked for profit yearly. Even some corrupt border agents are 'on the take.'

The remedial debate divides Americans into three main camps: "big-business conservatives (also known as luciferians)," "law and order conservatives (also known as xenophobes)," and "post-ephemerally important utopian multiculturalists (also known as liberals)."

Law-order-cons are concerned with a Swiss cheese border because it subjugates the nation's security in favor of drugs and crime. Some law-order-cons simply call for a massive enema of the state, and a summary closing of the borders.

Yet, politicians are wary to invoke a deportation suppository into America's anus because of the political diarrhea storm that would follow. To enforce the law is insensitive, uncompassionate ... even xenophobic.

Big Business (Big Satan) is concerned with the bottom line. "Undocumented migrants" are a ready source of cheap labor. These heartless capitalists argue that laxative measures lack foresight, and that post-bowel movement America would be in a labor quandary.

Who would lay the sod and mow the grass in the conjectural yard of the hypothetically framed, carpeted and painted home that you just left to pick up a theoretical Big Mac?

Finally, where would the debate be without our white knight liberal champions of multiculturalism? Their rainbow fantasy world is one where Third World cultures are as equally true and valid as American culture, and must be treated as such.

Thus, they reject notions of a distinctive American exceptionalism. Instead of a melting pot of unifying assimilation, they advocate a chamber pot of patchwork hyper-tolerance and relativism. Anything else would be "discriminatory" or "judgmental."

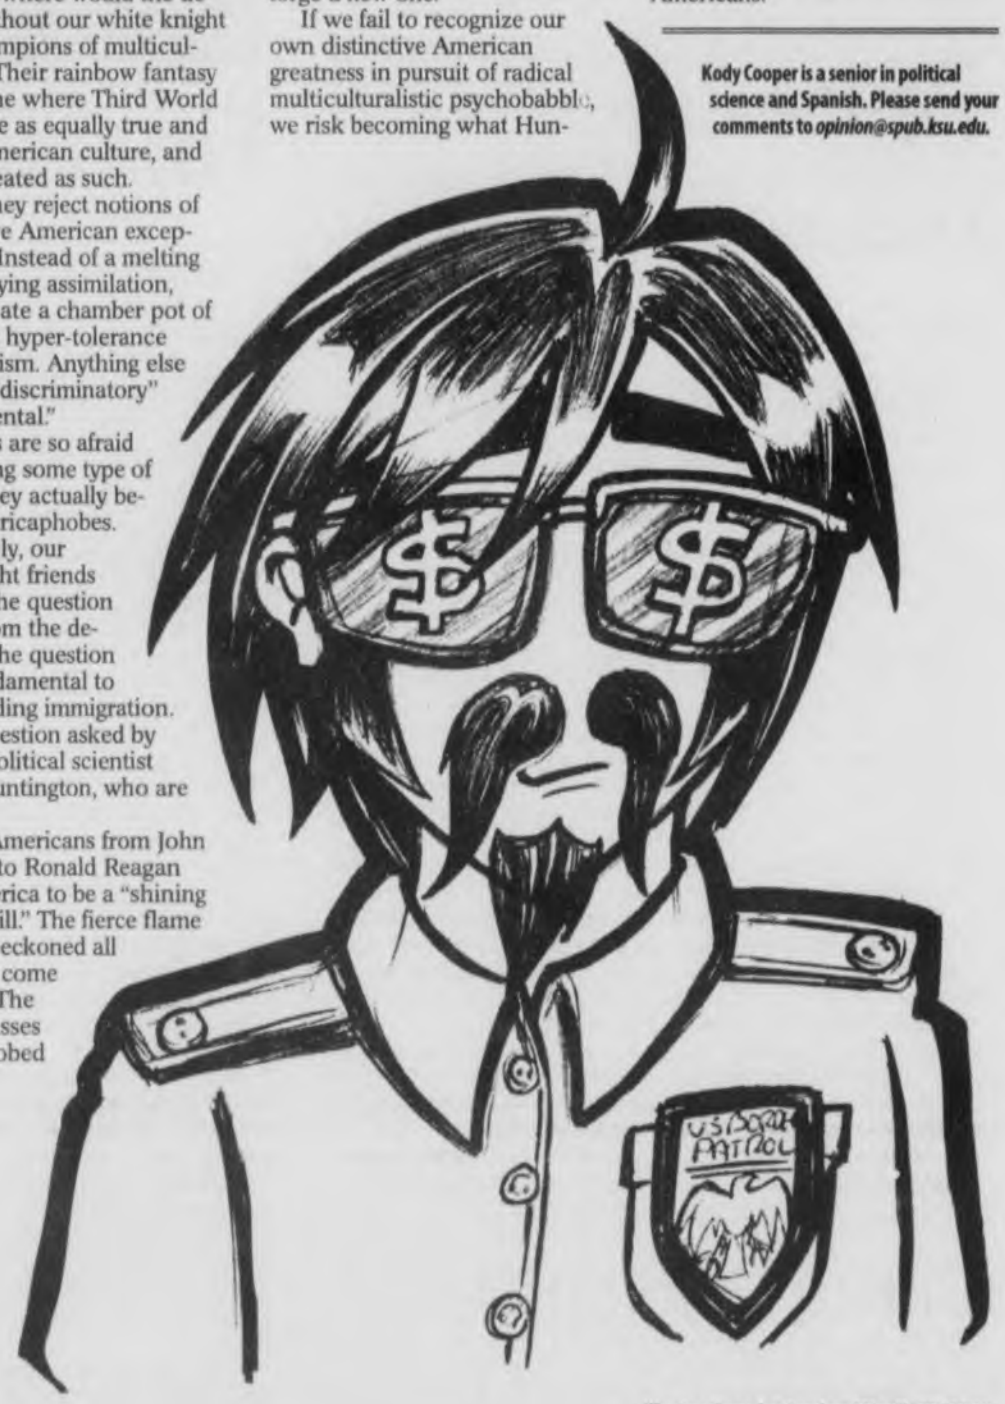
Ironically, our white-knight friends touch on the question missing from the debate. It is the question that is fundamental to understanding immigration. It is the question asked by Harvard political scientist Samuel Huntington, who are we?



Great Americans from John Winthrop to Ronald Reagan knew America to be a "shining city on a hill." The fierce flame of liberty beckoned all peoples to come and bask. The diverse masses came, disrobed of their old skins and became Americans.

In essence, they assimilated into American culture. They learned English, American history, and pledged allegiance to one nation under God. Even liberal historian, Arthur Schlesinger Jr. wrote: "the point of America was not to preserve old cultures but to forge a new one."

If we fail to recognize our own distinctive American greatness in pursuit of radical multiculturalistic psychobabble, we risk becoming what Huntington calls a "cleft society." We risk what Schlesinger calls "the disuniting of America."

Currently, a guest-worker program coupled with border strengthening seems to have political traction. Whatever remedy is adopted, we must reassert the importance of assimilation. We must invite immigrants to become Americans.

Sneaky marketing gimmicks hard to catch

KELSEY CHILDRESS

At grocery and department stores, there are many marketing gimmicks that make the customer believe they are getting a great bargain, when in fact they are only saving a couple of dollars or cents.

Many times, when a tag reads "buy one, get one free," one item is half-price. However, consumers still buy both items, because they believe that is the only way to get the discount.

Another thing many stores do is simply lower the price as little as 10 cents. Customers see the sale tag and believe they are going to have a great bargain. They give themselves a pat on the back, thinking they are great bargain shoppers, when they have saved less than a dollar on their total shopping bill.

Is this fair to the customer? One could put forth the argument that any conscious shopper should know how to spot the real savings apart from the gimmicks that cause one to buy more than normal.

Customers 'stock up' on an item and believe those savings will not come along again any time soon.

This makes them pay more at each grocery store visit than they normally would.

There are several gimmicks besides 'buy one, get one free' and slightly marked-down prices. Many stores offer 'sales events' where they have free demonstrations or food/drinks that cause many people to make a special trip to a store they wouldn't normally frequent.

They, in turn, spot something the store is promoting and buy it. So a 'free' bra consultation or cooking lesson turns into buying ingredients for an entire meal, or the purchase of a new $50 bra.

Specialty credit cards also provide a way to lure customers into buying items at certain stores. By offering cards that can only be used at certain stores, the customer is forced to spend only at these locations. Credit card bills also are mailed with many special coupons that offer deep discounts but only when the items are purchased with the store card.

This is part of 'impulse buying,' in which consumers are attracted to smaller items they might not need but that are present around staples such as milk or bread.

Obviously, customers keep signing up for new credit cards and buying products that are 'on sale,' so these ploys work. Marketing is all about getting people to notice the company's product or chain of stores, and they have created an innovative base to get people to buy their products.

As long as customers fall for credit cards promising special discounts – but an additional credit card bill – or a 'buy one, get one free' sale, there will always be tricks and strategies to get customers to buy more.

While this might not seem 'fair' to people who believe they are getting a great deal, it is up to them to realize and decide what is worth buying or signing up for.

Being a smart customer and learning about price tags and bargains is a responsibility that all people must place upon themselves.

Peace Corps volunteers give lecture

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stephanie and Adam Springer told of the experiences they shared during the two years they spent in the African country of Lesotho as Peace Corps volunteers on Tuesday in the Ramada Inn Ballroom.

The event, "A Mission of Hope: Peace Corps' Response to HIV and AIDS" was part of the Vernon Larson International Luncheon Lecture Series.

Stephanie is a 2002 K-State graduate in speech communication and anthropology, and she serves as K-State's Peace Corps coordinator.

The Peace Corps, formed in 1961 by President John F. Kennedy, was established to promote world peace and understanding of other cultures.

The couple left for Lesotho in June 2003 and returned in August 2005. They were stationed at a small mountain town in northern Lesotho, and were given local names to make communication easier.

"My name literally translated into 'mother flower rabbit' and Adam's was 'father happy rabbit,'" Stephanie said.

Volunteering as the youth development adviser, Stephanie worked closely with government and community leaders planning and facilitating youth empowerment and HIV/AIDS prevention programs.

"There are about 40.3 million people around the world who are HIV-positive," she said. "About 8,500 people die every day. That's about a third of the people who died in the 9/11 attacks."

Stephanie said about 27 percent of the adult population in Lesotho is suffering from HIV/AIDS, but less than 1 percent have been tested and know they are positive.

The couple attributed a number of factors for the high percentage of people suffering from HIV/AIDS.

"In Lesotho, there is a great deal of poverty, sparse natural resources, illiteracy, lack of nutritious food and little or no access to health care," Stephanie said.

Adam, who serves as the agriculture and natural resource extension assistant, lent his agricultural expertise to the people of Lesotho.

"At the end of two years, I had helped create 24 gardens, 12 greenhouses and a few nurseries," he said.

Adam said he involved the local community, especially children, in his work, and showed that with the help of greenhouses, crops could be grown in winter.

"We grew tomatoes, green peppers and broccoli, which are considered exotic in that part of the world," Adam said.

The United Nations has identified Adam's projects and has decided to implement his model across Africa.

In addition to spreading public health awareness, Stephanie helped introduce technology into classrooms.

"We screened videos on living life positively despite having the virus," Stephanie said. "Most people refuse to get tested because of the stigmatization they face when tested positive."

She said she also served as an aerobics instructor where a group of 12 women got together and also freely discussed women's health issues.

Through the Peace Corps' language training programs, the couple said they learned the local dialect and touched the lives of several thousands of people who put their trust and faith in them.

"The experience gave them a venue to know how diverse the world is," said Stephanie's father, Randy Higgins, who is a professor of entomology at K-State. "They touched individual lives and made changes at the grassroots (level)."

Describing the communication difficulties the couple experienced over those two years, Higgins said the 82 letters the couple had taken turns writing were good insight into their challenges, successes and daily experiences.

"Personally, this will be the most rewarding job in my entire life," Stephanie said. "People confided in me, and I lent them an ear and a shoulder for them to cry on."

Stephanie said she plans to pursue a master's degree in public health, and the couple plans to return to Africa soon.

"This was an excellent lecture on a subject which most people would consider grim," said Glenna Burckel, former instructor for modern languages at K-State. "It is extremely important for the youth to know about the world and be empathetic."

TABOR introduced to House Judiciary

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A House Concurrent Resolution that would amend the Kansas constitution has been introduced to the House Judiciary Committee.

The amendment, known as the Taxpayers' Bill of Rights, would put tax, revenue and expenditure limits on state government.

A House Concurrent Resolution is different than a bill because it does not go to the governor, and can not be vetoed.

Rep. Joe McLeland, R-Wichita, said the measure would help control the spending of the Kansas legislature, and would benefit Kansas residents.

"Legislature and government agencies only know how to spend money and the only way you can pay for the spending is to raise taxes," McLeland, co-sponsor of the resolution, said.

Once TABOR goes into effect, you cannot raise taxes without voter approval, McLeland said.

McLeland said TABOR would help population growth in Kansas.

McLeland said he does not think the measure has a good chance of passing this year, but he expects the measure to pass eventually.

"The tax burden in Kansas is very high," McLeland said. "And we want an environment that will encourage people to stay in Kansas."

A number of Kansas organizations formed a group last year to lobby against TABOR.

The group, the Coalition for a Prosperous Kansas, has more than 70 organization and individual members.

April Holman, director of Fiscal Focus for Kansas Action for Children, one of the organization members of the group, said that she was concerned about the design of TABOR.

"It places the resolution in the constitution and the constitution is definitely not a place where we want to put this experimental law," Holman said. "I think this will change the ability of the government to respond to the needs of the people."

Holman said Kansas Action for Children got involved with the Coalition for a Prosperous Kansas because of the effect TABOR had on children when the measure passed in Colorado.

"Certain indicators of child well-being have fallen dramatically after TABOR was introduced in Colorado," Holman said.

"If this was in place, we would see a huge difference in the ability to keep up with the needs of children," Holman said.

"We are all touched in some way by services the government provides, and TABOR really jeopardizes those services."

Putting tax caps on governmental spending is a risky business, said Karen McCulloh, former Riley County Commissioner, Manhattan City Commissioner and assistant to the dean.

"It is very important that we don't put restrictions on taxing entities because it's impossible to know what might come up in the future," McCulloh said.

"And when we put these artificial lids on we don't know what future costs may be," McCulloh said, "and therefore we may not be able to adequately deal with concerns that the state should support."

She said Kansas should provide services regardless of the cost taxpayers are willing to pay.

"I'm sorry if people don't want to pay taxes, but we have to support child care, roads, health, and mental health ... and that costs money," McCulloh said.

Dining center promotes good habits

Staying fit and healthy doesn't have to be dull, as members of various groups displayed to students Tuesday evening.

The Food, Fitness and Health Fest took place in the Kramer Dining Center from 4:45 to 6:30 p.m. Tuesday, with 10 groups present to share what services they have to offer students.

"Students should find this information very important," said Sheryl Powell, director of Kramer Dining Center for the Department of Housing and Dining Services. "They can learn more about what services and help are available on campus in order to be healthy and happy. I'm most excited about kids knowing where to go for these resources and the amount of information on stress and wellness."

Housing and Dining Services had a table full of handouts about healthy snacking and portion control, as well as offering snacks containing fewer than 100 calories.

Groups in attendance included K-State Research and Extension, Nutrition Counseling, Johnson Cancer Center, and Recreation Services.

Lafene Health Center also had tables pertaining to health education, including the Student Health Advisory Committee, Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators and Sensible Nutrition and Body Image Choices.

"I'm really hoping to have a lot of people stop by," said Mindy McMurry, sophomore in biology and member of SHAC. "We're kind of the liaison between Lafene and the student body, so we represent the students and get the word out about what they want to the people at Lafene."

Not all the groups were campus organizations. The Kansas Wheat Commission also was present, stressing the importance of whole grains.

"We just want to promote Kansas wheat products, and increase the awareness of dietary grain," Donita Cohorst, Kansas Wheat Commission spokesperson, said. "We're offering cookbooks today, with recipes you can make in the dorms, like granola cereal."

Kellogg's Tony the Tiger, who posed for pictures with fans and mingled with the crowd, also made a guest appearance.

APR not expected to affect K-State this year

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The NCAA wants to know how student-athletes are performing in the classroom, and, until 2003, its only data was based on the graduation rates of collegiate athletes.

Phil Hughes, associate director of intercollegiate athletics for student services at K-State and director of the academic support program for all student-athletes, said the graduation data was not beneficial because the information coming in was six or seven years old.

The NCAA wanted to have a better understanding of how each class of student athletes was performing, so it created the Academic Progress Rate, which began measuring academic progress in the 2003-04 academic year.

"This rate is intended as a 'real-time' assessment of each team's academic performance," Hughes said. "It awards points for academic eligibility, retention and graduation on a term-by-term basis.

"I think it is a good tool to use to give yourself and the university a sense of the student athletes and whether they are a good fit for the university."

The APR is calculated by measuring the academic eligibility and retention of student athletes by programs each semester. An APR of 925, which is the cutoff line, out of a possible 1,000, calculates to an approximate graduation success rate of 60 percent, based on current data, according to APR regulations.

Specific standards were established for awarding penalties and rewards based on each athletic program's APR. Probationary warning letters will be mailed to institutions that are below the APR after three classes of data have been collected (fall 2006).

The NCAA will begin sending out warning letters next year to schools whose teams have historically fared poorly in academics.

In 2007-08, those schools could face the loss of scholarships, and in 2008-09, the penalties could include a ban from postseason tournaments.

Teams that fall below the NCAA's cutoff line will not be able to replace those scholarships when academically ineligible athletes leave school. The NCAA has limited penalties to a maximum of 10 percent of the scholarships, according to the guidelines of the APR.

Hughes said the penalties are in place because there must be some sort of consequences if the rules are to be followed.

"More than being informational, the NCAA put teeth into it saying that you will lose scholarships if you are underachieving, which is a good thing," Hughes said.

Hughes also said this information is intended to serve as a meaningful management tool for presidents and directors of athletics to help student athletes graduate.

The NCAA announced March 1 that 99 Division I sports teams at 65 colleges and universities of the 6,112 Division I sports teams nationwide will lose scholarships for poor-scholastic performance by their student athletes, according to APR reports.

Of the 99 sports teams, 90 are men's teams and nine are women's teams with the majority coming from football (23), baseball (21) and men's basketball (17).

The Big 12 Conference has three schools on the hot seat, as Oklahoma State, Texas Tech and Texas are all being sanctioned, due to insufficient

Negro leaguer Buck O'Neil's omission from the Baseball Hall of Fame last month leads to public outcry across the nation

By Austin Meek
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This was supposed to be one of those feel-good sports stories.

Buck O'Neil, 94, finally reaches the promised land – the National Baseball Hall of Fame. But somewhere between Kansas City, Mo., and Cooperstown, N.Y., the wheels fell off.

O'Neil was passed over by the Hall of Fame selection committee on Feb. 27 in Tampa – a decision that sparked national uproar.

Doswell, curator of the Negro League Baseball Museum in Kansas City, Mo., and graduate student in educational administration and leadership at K-State, served on the 12-man selection committee that rejected O'Neil's Hall of Fame bid and is one of his strongest supporters.

Doswell said serving on the Hall of Fame committee was a bittersweet experience.

"From the standpoint of the work that was done, the committee was successful in honoring 17 candidates," Doswell said. "Buck O'Neil was not voted in, and that was a huge disappointment for me."

Doswell is not alone in his disappointment. Media pundits, politicians and former players blasted the committee for failing to elect O'Neil.

Former Major League Baseball Commissioner Fay Vincent, who served as the selection committee's non-voting chairman, defended the committee's decision but refused to discuss specifics of the selection process.

"I don't think it's possible for us to speak to why an individual was elected or not elected," Vincent said in a press release. "Buck O'Neil has been a great credit to baseball. He's a friend of all of ours. He has credentials that are absolutely wonderful. The committee did not elect Buck O'Neil to the Hall of Fame.

Doswell made no secret of the fact that he lobbied hard for O'Neil.

"I can live with my choices. I voted for (O'Neil)," Doswell said. "A lot of those other (committee members) have chosen not to speak about being involved in the committee. I think it hampers their credibility in the eyes of the public."

Candidates had to receive "yes" votes from 75 percent of the committee members to be elected. Doswell said the committee used unpublished statistics when evaluating candidates, which might have contributed to the public confusion surrounding O'Neil's snub.

"Some of the decisions that were made were based on new research statistics that haven't been published," Doswell said. "Because that material hasn't been out there and hasn't been absorbed, people who criticize don't have that material to fall back on."

However, Doswell said O'Neil, a lifetime .288 hitter, contributed to the game in ways that transcend statistics.

"What people were asked to consider were contributions to the game,"

A brilliant career cut short, a life that ended in anonymity

ANTHONY MENDOZA

To say former Minnesota Twins' outfielder Kirby Puckett's popularity was nearly equal to Michael Jordan's during the late 1980s and early '90s is not a stretch.

Puckett was the ultimate fan player. One with a belly the size of the average person sitting in the bleachers with a beer in his hand.

But he could do things on the field of which weekend warriors could only dream.

On the field, Puckett was one of the best center fielders in the game, elected into the Hall of Fame on the first ballot in 2001.

With a smile plastered on his face, the pudgy outfielder had a career batting average of .319, won six Gold Gloves, two championships and was elected to the All-Star Game 10 times in his 12-year career.

Puckett is remembered most for his walk-off homerun in game six of the 1991 World Series, leading to a dominant pitching performance by Jack Morris to top the upstart Atlanta Braves in the following game.

His career was cut short in 1996 when he was forced to retire from baseball after developing glaucoma in his right eye, which eventually caused him to lose his sight.

Taken away from the game and the team he spent his entire career with, things went from bad to worst for Puckett.

After his induction into the Hall of Fame, his former wife accused him of threatening to kill her during an argument.

Five years earlier, he had been selected as the Roberto Clemente Man of the Year for community service.

Puckett denied the charges but described to police a history of violence and infidelity.

Two years later, he was cleared of all charges from an alleged sexual assault of a woman at a Twin Cities restaurant bathroom.

Puckett eventually fled Minnesota, moving to Arizona, cutting his ties with the Twins organization in 2002.

The organization tried to re-establish a connection with its former star, but Puckett stayed away.

Hopefully, Puckett will be remembered for the good days he had with the Twins as the best overweight athlete in professional sports that never gave up.

Not just the overweight former baseball player who eventually just gave up on life.

MLB | Hall of Famer Puckett dies at 45

MINNEAPOLIS — Kirby Puckett, the bubbly, barrel-shaped Hall of Famer who carried the Minnesota Twins to two World Series titles before his career was cut short by glaucoma, died Monday after a stroke. He was 45.

Puckett

Puckett, whose weight gain in recent years concerned those close to him, was stricken early Sunday at his Arizona home. He died at St. Joseph's Hospital and Medical Center in Phoenix.

Puckett led the Twins to championships in 1987 and 1991. He broke into the majors in 1984 and had a career batting average of .318. Glaucoma left the six-time Gold Glove center fielder and 10-time All-Star with no choice but to retire after the 1995 season when he went blind in his right eye.

MLB| Book reveals Bonds' steroid, other drug use

NEW YORK — Barry Bonds used a vast array of performance-enhancing drugs, including steroids and human growth hormone, for at least five seasons beginning in 1998, according to a book written by two San Francisco Chronicle reporters.

Bonds

An excerpt from "Game of Shadows," which details the San Francisco slugger's extensive doping program, appears in the March 13 issue of Sports Illustrated.

Bonds, who testified before a California federal grand jury looking into steroid use by top athletes, repeatedly has denied using performance-enhancing drugs.

According to the book, Bonds was using two undetectable designer steroids, informally known as the cream and the clear, plus insulin, human growth hormone and other performance enhancers by 2001, when he hit 73 home runs for the Giants to break Mark McGwire's single-season record of 70 set in 1998.

BKC | AP announces 2005-06 All-Big 12 team

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — P.J. Tucker and LaMarcus Aldridge, who anchored the conference's highest-ranked team while leading Texas to a share of the regular-season title, are both unanimous selections to The Associated Press All-Big 12 basketball team for 2005-06.

Tucker

Joining them on the first team are Texas Tech's Jarrius Jackson, Colorado's Richard Roby and Curtis Stinson, the hard-nosed, do-everything guard for Iowa State.

K-State junior guard Cartier Martin was named to the AP's second team.

The team was selected by a panel of 24 media representatives who cover the Big 12 on a regular basis.

WBC | U.S. wins opener against Mexico

PHOENIX — A pair of big swings and a parade of strong arms got the United States off to a successful start in the World Baseball Classic.

Derrek Lee and Chipper Jones homered, Jake Peavy and six U.S. relievers combined on a four-hitter and Team USA beat Mexico 2-0 on Tuesday.

Peavy allowed one hit -- an infield single by Karim Garcia that easily could have been ruled an error on second baseman Chase Utley to start the game.

Mike Timlin, Chad Cordero, Dan Wheeler, Todd Jones, Joe Nathan and Brad Lidge each threw an inning of relief for the U.S. squad, which has 11 relievers on its roster.

Plastic surgery on the rise, area surgeon struggles to find college-age clients

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

* Total amount of money spent on plastic surgery in 2004. Cost is measured in billions, Source: www.plasticsurgery.org

Liposuction: $2,700.
Breast augmentation: $4,200.
Face lift: $7,000.
Feeling good about the way you look: priceless.

Between popular TV shows like Nip/Tuck and Dr. 90210, some Americans have put their bodies under the microscope.

More than 9.2 million people underwent cosmetic surgery in 2004, according to the American Society of Plastic Surgeons. That's nearly 500,000 more than those who went under the knife in 2003.

In the Manhattan area, nearly 400 people have plastic surgery every year. Most of those patients, however, are not college students, said Dr. Kenneth Fischer, the only board-certified hand, reconstructive and cosmetic surgeon in Manhattan.

"I've tried to market to the student population, but I've probably had two K-State students a year," Fischer said. "I just think back to when I was in college. I didn't have money. Those that had money would spend it back in their hometowns, not here."

Fischer has been operating for four and a half years at the Plastic Surgery Clinic at Manhattan Medical Center, 1133 College Ave, Building A, Suite 211.

Despite the lack of business from college students, however, Fischer said he tries to maintain a positive attitude about campaigning to different audiences.

"I'm the only plastic surgeon from Topeka to Denver," he said. "I've tried radio, the Mercury and the Collegian. The locals know me. The best advertising is patient-to-patient. People need to find you."

He said he even had one patient who found his clinic solely through the Internet, even before he developed his clinic Web site, www.drkennyfischer.com.

"There are so many people tapping into the Internet nowadays, and there really is no limit to what people can find on the Web," said Manhattan resident Christy Spencer, 22. "Most of the younger generation is educated enough to seek specific services, and research a little more about the businesses they invest in."

Fischer said he and his family have invested a lot in his career. He grew up in Manhattan, and his father, who was an obstetrician, heavily influenced his career choice.

"Dad was a doctor," he said. "I wanted to be an orthopedic surgeon. The dynamics of it, the horizons – I could just grab and take things more in this dynamic field. We can operate on any place on the body."

Fischer is medically certified to work in Kansas and Mississippi, where he earned his residency. He is experienced with several different procedures including breast augmentations, rhinoplasties, tummy tucks and even permanent makeup.

With several popular plastic surgery shows on TV, however, Fischer said there are many misconceptions patients have about surgery.

"It's so far from reality," he said. "I've never seen Dr. 90210 or Discovery, but from what I have seen, I find myself being overly critical of their work."

Although Fischer's office is a business, he said his practice profits from only a small portion of the fees. Nearly half of his fees go toward hospital fees and to pay an anesthesiologist. These fees don't include products like the actual implants.

Many patients walk into his practice believing surgery can fix their problems at a snap of a finger, but Fischer said the process is quite complex.

"When people come to get surgery, the first thing I ask them is 'what is bothering them,'" he said. "A lot can be corrected easily. I ask them how they would like to look. Basically, I want to know if I can help. The goal of my practice is to meet or exceed the expectations."

And when those patients finally sit through a consultation with the doctor, there are several things they might not have realized based on reality TV alone.

"Probably the biggest misconception is that I can do things without a scar," Fischer said. "You will have a scar, but it's my job to make it as best as possible. I try to tell my patients the pros and cons, giving them a real perspective."

MTV's acclaimed 'Real World' takes on Key West

By Sarah Campbell
EAST CAROLINIAN (EAST CAROLINA U.)

GREENVILLE, N.C. – Drama, sex, drinking, lies, fighting and friendship are just a few of the exciting elements that combine to make MTV's pioneering reality show, "The Real World," a must-see hour of television that leaves viewers craving more.

Fans of the show won't be disappointed with the latest location for the filming of the 17th season: Key West, Fla.

For 16 seasons, MTV's "The Real World" has entertained viewers with the concept of "the true story of seven strangers, picked to live in a house and have their lives taped, to find out what happens when people stop being polite and start getting real."

"Real World: Key West" will offer the roommates some special challenges. The first of these challenges was battling Mother Nature in the form of three hurricanes: Katrina, Rita and Wilma.

However, Mother Nature didn't stand a chance in the wake of their obligation to open and run Mystic Sunless Tanning studio, a first for Key West.

As expected in true "Real World" fashion, the roommates managed to cause plenty of trouble when they set out to party the night away on the strip at hot spots such as Fat Tuesday's and Lazy Gecko.

"The Real World" isn't all fun and games; it places focus on issues that are often brushed under the rug by our society. The reality of the show echoes the personal battles that not only each roommate faces, but also we as individuals in our everyday lives face.

Since its premiere in 1992, "The Real World" has put a national spotlight on societal issues such as AIDS/HIV, sexual orientation, racial tension, eating disorders and alcoholism. This season, two of the roommates will face a battle with anorexia and anger management problems.

Whether you've been watching "The Real World" for years, just caught on to the craze or have never seen a single episode, "Real World: Key West" is sure to quench your appetite for drama. No matter what goes on throughout the season, the diversity of the roommates will definitely play an important role in keeping things real.

"Real World: Key West" airs Tuesdays at 9 p.m. on MTV.

Bad day to feed the Bengal tiger. Let someone else do it today. Probably just an "off" batch of the Purina Tiger Chow, but why risk it?

Gemini
(May 21 - June 20)
You will send away for the pamphlet titled "The Manly Art Of Knitting", today, but sadly, it will be out of print. You should check with a rare books merchant.

Cancer
(June 21 - July 22)
A brilliant idea for a new hand tool will strike you today, but it will be years too late. People these days are much less likely to buy an "M.C. Hammer" than they would have been a few years ago. If you're really intent on being an inventor, you should come up with a "drum roll", which you can sell to Pillsbury. Ta dah dum.

Leo
(July 23 - August 22)
You are about to have an unfortunate episode involving insects, grape Kool-Aide, and a revolving door.

Virgo
(August 23 - September 22)
You will hear screams coming from a Hungarian restaurant, while you are walking by. Don't worry, though. That's normal.

Libra
(September 22 - October 22)
Three kings from arid countries will wander by, leading their horses, and apparently searching for something. This will seem innocuous at first, but later, you'll start to worry.

Scorpio
(October 23 - November 21)
On a pre-arranged signal, you and three cohorts will start talking complete gibberish today, leaving the fifth person in your meeting entirely baffled. Act as if he's behaving strangely, and look concerned.

Sagittarius

50 Years for the Union

- 1953: Ground broken for the Union's construction.
- March 8, 1956: K-State Student Union opens. Original building was 110,000 square feet and cost $1.65 million.
- March 1958: Automatic pin-setters purchased for bowling center.
- October 1960: Union takes responsibility for campus's vending program.
- 1963: Union's first addition is completed. The 40,000 square-foot addition cost $900,000.
- 1970: Second addition is completed, adding 100,000 square feet and cost $2.88 million. Addition included creation of Union Bookstore.

At one time, mobiles descended from the ceiling inside the courtyard of the K-State Student Union.

UNIVERSITY ARCHIVES

UPC, UGB work to entertain, govern

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Student Union has served the campus for 50 years as a place to meet with friends, a meeting place for organizations, and a place to eat and buy textbooks.

Verlyn Richards, professor emeritus of finance, graduated in 1956. As an undergraduate, Richards said he managed the temporary Union, which was in barracks obtained from the military facility at Herrington, Kan. They were in the south section of where the north parking lot is now.

"When I graduated, I moved to (the new Union) and set up the business office," Richards said.

Richards said he remembered the change the Union brought to students.

"There was no convenient place for student groups to meet on campus," Richards said. "The barracks building had really no space for that. Getting a meeting room for organizations to meet was a big thing."

Richards said he thought the Union was an ideal place for students to meet one another.

"We used to always have the spring prom, crowning the queen and the king," Richards said.

"Having the ballroom facilities allowed us to do all that. It was a dramatic change in student life on campus. Back in the '50s, it was full of people all through the evenings and through the weekends."

Richards said one of his fondest memories of the Union was the performance by the Four Lads, a nationally known vocal quartet at the time. They performed at the first dance in the Union.

"There was a place where you could come on campus, where you could just sit down and chat," Richards said.

The Union Program Council and Union Governing Board have helped keep the Union building and entertainment up to date throughout the decades.

In 1953, the Council for Student Affairs established the Union Governing Board. The first meeting occurred on March 15, 1955. This was a year before the opening of the new building, according to the timeline on UPC's Web site.

Loren Kottner was named the first Union director on Feb.1, 1955. He helped with the organization of UPC and UGB. He will receive the Vision Award at a banquet March 11.

In 1964, more than 300 students worked with UPC, and musician Jerry Lee Lewis performed at K-State.

In the 1970s, 200 students worked in UPC and brought Bill Cosby, Jerry Lewis, Bob Hope and Billy Joel to campus during those years.

After Hours made its debut in 2001. It was called "First Friday." It was on the first Friday of every month of the 2001-02 school year. The goal was to introduce new students to the Union and give them an alternative to Aggieville. After funding was approved by the Student Governing Association, it became a weekly event called After Hours.

There are about 50-75 students actively participating in UPC, Ben Hopper, UPC program adviser, said.

Hopper said the UPC sponsors about 85 events each semester.

"We service tens of thousands of people a year," Hopper said. "UPC provides the fun aspect of your college experience. We deal with student life and provide fun things to do to relax. It would be hard to imagine life at K-State without the UPC."

UPC aims at providing activities many students will enjoy, Hopper said.

"Our goal is to provide cultural, educational and recreation events to entertain the students," Hopper said. "Our goal is to provide experiences to students that they wouldn't get in the classroom. I think our students are quite successful at doing so."

He said he felt student responses from the events show the progress of these goals.

"It's seeing our own students grow and develop as leaders," Hopper said. "Seeing people come away from an event with a smile on their face, I think, is one of the coolest things. Those are the things that stick with students. Something the students are going to remember more than what history class they had when they were a sophomore."

Nacole Boan, senior in political science, vice president of UGB and president of UPC, said she defines UGB as the governing body of the Union that oversees all aspects of the building and its operations.

"Our interest is in the success of the Union," Boan said. "We implement policies of the behind-the-scenes stuff and oversee the Union's best interest as a whole."

She said she appreciates the work and planning for the Union by students in the past.

"Those who were involved with the opening and been involved in the beginning, I want them to see what the Union has become," Boan said. "The seeds they have planted have prospered so much. We are a lot bigger influence on campus than we were 50 years ago. We owe a lot of that to the desire they had. They built the foundation on which we operate now."

Famous personalities have visited Union

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Singer Jimmy Buffett was one of the highlights of performers to grace the K-State Student Union, Bill Wisdom, assistant director of the Union, said.

"Jimmy Buffett was here three times before he made it big," Wisdom said.

When K-State was known as Kansas State College, student Gordon Jump performed during the opening festivities of the K-State Union on March 8, 1956.

The show, "A Night at the Circus," featured Jump, who later went on to star in "WKRP in Cincinnati" and as the Maytag repairman in commercials.

Since that time, the Union has played host to hundreds of famous people, beginning in the 1950s, when Dizzy Gillespie, the Count Basie Orchestra and Ella Fitzgerald all performed at one time or another in the Ballroom.

While most of the performers the Union sponsored performed at the Union or at Ahearn Field House in the early days, with the construction of McCain Auditorium and Bramlage Coliseum the Union Program Council was able to schedule Landon Lectures and other performances in those locations.

"It was between us and Ahearn," Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said.

With other facilities being built to host events, there were more options for UPC to bring them to K-State.

"Most of the Landon Lectures have lunch here before or after the lecture," Connaughton said.

One of the memories that Connaughton said stood out was the visit from Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani of Saudi Arabia on March 28, 1983.

"We had pretty heavy security for him, including snipers on the roof," Connaughton said.

At the time there was a crisis in the Middle East involving Iran, Connaughton said, and Yamani was concerned about security.

Red Skelton was another visitor to the Union, and he was there for between four and six days, Connaughton said.

Skelton even went to Aggieville during his visit, Connaughton said.

The Nitty Gritty Dirt Band performed at McCain Auditorium and was sponsored through UPC.

Actor/comedian Steve Martin opened for the band and played a banjo at one point, Wisdom said.

Other musical acts that performed through UPC were Chicago, Jefferson Airplane, and the Pointer Sisters.

Actress/comedian Lily Tomlin performed in Forum Hall, and country music performer John Biggs performed 13 times for the Union, Wisdom said.

Upcoming performances sponsored by UPC at the Union include "A Night at the Circus" and the Texas Hold 'Em Poker Tournament.

The "A Night at the Circus" performance will take place in the Union Courtyard on today, as part of the 50th Anniversary celebration, and the Texas Hold 'Em Poker Tournament will take place from 7 p.m. to midnight April 1 in the Union Ballroom.

Groups use Union facilities

Members of student body, Manhattan community gather in meeting rooms

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Student Union is a popular gathering place for campus clubs and community organizations.

There are 32 rooms at the Union that can be reserved for events, ranging in capacity from 15 people to several hundred.

Student groups, including the Student Governing Association, College Republicans and Young Democrats, regularly conduct meetings at the Union.

According to the Union's Web site, more than 11,000 meeting reservations are processed annually. Programs featuring social, cultural and recreational entertainment have all been featured at the Union.

Gavin Couvelha, junior in secondary education, is a member of the Union Governing Board. He said several factors give the Union an edge over other meeting locations.

"It has convenient parking right in front of the building, and its use is provided for students at little to no cost, which makes it very competitive," Couvelha said.

Nacole Boan, senior in political science and vice-president of the Union Governing Board, said students should take advantage of the Union because it was built as a resource specifically for them.

"It was built for students by students," she said. "The board's ideals haven't changed since the Union was built in 1956. The cornerstone of our mission is for the Union to be available to student groups, to be the living room of the campus."

Campus groups' use of the Union's meeting rooms has grown over the years. Boan said its popularity was partly due to positive word-of-mouth and partly due to the growing number of campus groups, as well as their rising memberships.

Boan said the Union also has tried to stay on top of changes in technology and makes electronics such as DVD players and laptop projectors available for meetings.

Business organizations and conferences bring in much of the Union's revenue, Boan said.

She said that although it was primarily used by students, the Union also was a valuable fixture in the city of Manhattan.

"K-State plays such a significant role in the community," she said. "It's so important for that connection to be there, for people who walk into the Union to see what's going on on campus by looking around the Union, which they otherwise might not see."

A pair of bowling shoes sits on display in the William T. Kemper gallery in the Union. The shoes, along with other memorabilia, are being displayed as a part of the K-State Student Union's 50th Anniversary.

Building celebrates 50th anniversary with display of historic items in gallery

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fifty years ago, a tradition began at K-State that continues to serve students today.

Today marks the 50th anniversary of the K-State Student Union. To commemorate the event, many activities and exhibits will be on display in the Union, and among these is an art display put on by the Union Program Council.

"The display will consist of pictures of the Union throughout the years, and old artifacts," said Erica Boatman, sophomore in apparel and textiles and UPC employee. "All the artifacts were university-owned."

The group most in charge of putting together the details is the 50th Anniversary Committee, consisting of Laura Roth, senior in fine arts and UPC intern, and Jeff White, Union graphic coordinator.

"The biggest part of the display will be 35-by-16 pieces of past logos and pictures of the Union," Roth said. "It's basically a life-size timeline."

The pictures will be available for viewing in the William T. Kemper art gallery in the Union through Saturday.

The many artifacts on display include an old cash register, bowling ball and other items all previously used in the Union's past.

"We also have a Wasily Armchair, a type of chair that used to be used in the council chamber meeting room, which is now the Greek Affairs room," White said. "These chairs are now worth $1,300."

The items used for display were found in strange places, and many were set aside in storage, ready to be dusted off and used again, Roth said.

"I'm excited to get everything done and put together," Roth said. "We've been working on this project since the beginning of the semester, with most of the work taking place the last couple of weeks."

Roth said she believes the display will be very powerful, especially the panels of photographs. She said she hopes the gallery will draw a lot of people in, and looks forward to seeing their reactions to her committee's hard work.

White shares in her excitement.

"I've really enjoyed being a part of the history and seeing it all come together," White said. "Since the timeline contains certain events, I also learned a lot about the Union's past."

Along with the exhibit in the gallery, the 50th anniversary celebration will have events taking place in and around the Union through Saturday.

Corkins addresses public education

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas Education Commissioner Bob Corkins gave a speech Tuesday night at the Robinson Education Center, 2031 Poyntz Ave. Corkins discussed how to tailor public education to meet students' individual needs, best-practice promotion and funding.

"I am a product of Kansas public education, from kindergarten to post-graduate," Corkins said. "A large part of why I'm here today is because of the deep debt I owe public education."

Two issues the Kansas State Board of Education is considering are best-practice promotion and tailoring education to meet the needs of individual students, he said.

Best-practice promotion, the process by which different school districts communicate successful methods, needs to improve, Corkins said.

"So many of these practices that you see are doing terrific things, but unfortunately they too often remain in isolation, and the rest of the districts around the state know nothing about them," Corkins said.

One method being considered to better individualize education is the implementation of a longitudinal data system.

Under the federal No Child Left Behind Act, student achievement is traced according to grade levels, but it doesn't compare the same students over time, Corkins said.

The implementation of this technology would keep a record of how much each student's performance improves over time, and what factors contributed to the change.

This idea has been well received by the legislature, but the department of education will need to spend at least the next couple of years working on it, Corkins said.

One common concern presented by community members was school funding.

"The legislature is going to have to get some more money," said Roger Brannan, Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 board of education member.

Tuesday night's forum was sponsored by the NAACP, Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, and the USD 383 Diversity Commission.

"It was just basically an opportunity for him to come in and get to know the community, and to share some concerns on different issues," said Keener Tippin, chair of the education committee for the NAACP.

Response to the speech was mixed.

"I think the positives that I heard were figuring out new systems for accelerating kids, and that he's listening to superintendents," USD 383 board member Beth Tatarko said. "A negative would be that several funding plans have been suggested, and the state boards have chosen the lowest one consistently."

Making music together

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students at Roosevelt School have been rehearsing songs and reviewing lines.

But this is not just another spring concert for a group of sixth-grade students. It is a performance they have created together.

The Broadway Beginners Opera Company consists of students from Roger Gibson and Susanna Parker's sixth-grade class at Roosevelt School, 1401 Houston St., The company will perform its original opera, "The House of Mirrors" at 7:30 tonight and Thursday at Roosevelt. Admission is free.

Gibson and music teacher Parker said they have helped direct students and prepare them for the opera.

"I think it's an excellent opportunity to see possibilities come to fruition," Gibson said.

This will be the ninth production for the Broadway Beginners Opera Company, but Gibson said every production is different from previous years.

"The process has been very similar," Gibson said. "Of course this is a different group of kids, with different personalities and different strengths."

As a student working on public relations, Ben Stegeman, sixth-grader at Roosevelt School, said the opera's setting is in a carnival, and focuses on the theme "fear of being yourself." Stegeman said he thought the opera would be unique from previous years.

"I think this opera isn't like the others, because the characters are more developed," he said.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Presenting one of the attractions of the freak show, Janae Horchem, as Gloria, explains the necessity of a cage to hold the wolf-boy Vic, played by Ben Stegeman. The original opera "The House of Mirrors," will be performed by sixth grade students at 7:30 p.m. March 8 and 9 at Theodore Roosevelt School.

Stegeman said his favorite part of working on the opera has been working with classmates on a single goal.

"It's being able to do something as a team effort," Stegeman said.

Max Pease, sixth-grader at Roosevelt School, is also working on public relations, and said he wanted people to attend the performance to gain a broader view of entertainment.

"I think it will be a good experience for them to see live entertainment like it was a long time ago," Pease said.

Pease said the hardest part of the process was picking the theme and setting, but he said the outcome is a performance he thought the audience would enjoy.

"I think that we worked on it really hard, and we have a lot more songs than the other operas," Pease said.

Shawn Sheu, sixth-grader at Roosevelt School, will play the part of Lydia, the cleaning girl, in the opera. Sheu also worked as a composer for the opera, writing music for the words her classmates wrote.

"We had to wait for the writers to write the words first," Sheu said. "Sometimes it was hard."

While the days to the performance are closing in, Sheu said she has had a mix of energy and nerves for Wednesday night.

"We haven't had a lot of time to prepare the actors," Sheu said. "I'm kind of excited, but nervous."

of history will help students and faculty see what it took to make the Union a reality.

"If you've read some of the history, when the students didn't have a union, they paid a lot to get one," Bailey said.

Because the Union has a long list of history and highlights, Bailey said a book has been compiled to help cover the gamete of events at the Union in the past 50 years.

The book, "K-State Student Union. From Concept to Creation – The History and Memories of Your K-State Student Union," will be for sale for $25.

Copies can be purchased next week in the Union director's office on the second floor of the Union.

O'NEIL | Doswell: Hall of Fame should respond to national outcry

Doswell said. "Of all the candidates, Buck O'Neil needed to be considered for his contribution in that area. In my opinion, that was enough to earn him induction. For others, it was not.

"You can have your head in the numbers so deep that you don't have your heart in the game, and you forget what it means to be a fan."

Bob Kendrick, director of marketing for the Negro Leagues Museum, said some committee members might have allowed preconceived notions to interfere with the selection process.

"You can't help but wonder if Buck had a fair opportunity," Kendrick said. "It almost seems as if there was some predetermination in the minds (of the committee members), and regardless of the outcome you couldn't have changed their minds.

"Sometimes, unfortunately, you can get a group of intelligent individuals together and, they can do something dumb."

Doswell said the selection process was equitable, and attributed the decision to a simple difference of opinion.

"As a whole, I can't say enough about the Hall of Fame and how they set up the process," Doswell said. "Every candidate got an open hearing. (The committee members) have to live with their decisions."

O'Neil's Hall of Fame snub was overshadowed by an otherwise notable group of Negro League inductees, including Ray Brown, Biz Mackey, Mule Suttles and Effa Manley. Manley, general manager of the Negro League's Newark Eagles, was the first woman to be selected to the Baseball Hall of Fame.

Still, the 17 people who were elected have been eclipsed by the story of one man who was not.

That's a regrettable side effect of the process, Doswell said.

"It's unfortunate for those who were honored that this has overshadowed their induction," Doswell said.

This Hall of Fame rejection has many wondering if O'Neil will have another opportunity for enshrinement.

Doswell said another round of Negro League elections is unlikely, which makes O'Neil's Hall of Fame future uncertain at best.

"There is no mechanism in place right now for (selecting more Negro League inductees)," Doswell said. "The Hall of Fame really has a lot to think about.

"They probably will respond because of the national outcry, but I don't know what they can do.

"They hopefully will at least consider (finding a way to induct O'Neil)."

Even if O'Neil does not end up in Cooperstown, Doswell said the disappointment will not define O'Neil's baseball legacy or hamper the efforts of the Negro Leagues Museum.

"He is truly a leader because he's taken it very graciously," Doswell said. "He's going to keep rolling on. The mission continues – we've got to keep educating people (about Negro League history).

"Our mission continues and doesn't stop."

ACADEMICS | Baseball transfer rules adversely affect APR ratings

scores coming from their baseball programs.

K-State's baseball team, along with the other athletic programs, is not being sanctioned, but is not in the clear yet, as some of the Wildcat teams are below the cutoff line for the APR and could be affected in the future, Hughes said.

"Next year, we might be one of those schools," Hughes said. "Our men's basketball program is below the cutline. But you lose scholarships only if you have a zero-for-two result with an athlete that has eligibility remaining, and men's basketball didn't have those cases last year, but might not avoid losing scholarships next year."

K-State baseball coach Brad Hill said he believes the one-time transfer rule in baseball might affect his program more than other sports with a more severe transfer rule, like basketball, which insists players who transfer must sit out one season before competing for their new team.

"The biggest thing baseball is concerned about is the draft issue, players leaving for the draft, and then obviously players transferring," Hill said. "It is difficult in baseball because you don't have full-ride scholarships, and if a kid does not have a lot of money, which happens in baseball a lot, it is a little more appealing to go somewhere else, which might hurt a team's APR."

The APR is just one component of the Division I academic-reform initiative created to encourage improved academic performance and progress toward graduation for all student-athletes.

The goal, according to the overview of the academic reform, can best be achieved by enhancing academic standards, improving measurements of academic success, increase accountability and consequences for the academic success of student athletes and adjusting student-athlete time demands to meet the new academic standards.

The APR is one plan to improve measurements of academic success and better understand the "real-time" success of all student athletes.

New football Coach Ron Prince said he agrees with the APR and the Division I academic reform, because it is a step in the right direction in helping players graduate and become more well-rounded people.

"This whole thing is about helping players get the opportunity to have a quality education, and I think that's a good thing," Prince said. "It's all about continued progress and continual improvement academically."

CITY | Kansas Legislature considering eminent domain limits

said they'd offered her $750,000 for the property, which was appraised by Riley County for 2005 at $354,820.

Simmons appraised Ferlemann's property at $66,000; Dial representatives said they'd offered her $100,000 for it. The county appraised it at $39,430 for 2005, city documents said.

Sizemore appeared at the commission and said she'd driven all the way from Oklahoma to appear. She made an emotional appeal to the commission, crying and comparing them to the communist government in her native country, China.

"I believe now I'm in America, far away from the communists," Sizemore said. "Please, leave my property alone."

The commissioners said they understood Sizemore's situation, but agreed the property must be taken to allow the project to continue.

"The good of the city must be the trump card over the good of the few," commissioner Jayme Morris-Hardeman said.

However, this doesn't mean the property is guaranteed to be condemned by the city. City Attorney William Frost said the two parties may still reach an agreement.

"This commission has the choice to abandon this case up until the point that it is consummated," Frost said.

Eminent domain comes from the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution, which states that private property may not be taken for "public use without just compensation." It was interpreted at first to allow government entities to force the sale of property to government for use in buildings like schools.

In recent years, the action has become controversial because of its use by municipal governments to acquire land for local redevelopment. The United States Supreme Court ruled in June that "public use" can include development projects that benefit the public good.

It was pointed out to the commission that the Kansas Legislature is considering a bill that would limit the use of eminent domain, and may or may not include an exception for projects that are already underway.

Nancy Bammes, owner of Family Dollar's neighbor Nancy's Boutique, 501 N. Third St., said she believed the city's use of eminent domain should be against the law.

"To me, it is not what the founders wanted, not what they wanted at all," Bammes said. "Eminent domain like this shouldn't be legal."

The Commission also voted to designate 17th Street as Martin Luther King, Jr., Memorial Drive. They had been asked to commemorate a Manhattan street in honor of King by the Manhattan Martin Luther King Memorial Committee.

Seventeenth Street runs in front of Ahearn Field House, where King delivered his final speech at a university before his death in 1968. A bronze bust of King will be featured outside the east side of Ahearn, facing 17th Street.

The street will not be renamed, the designation will be an addition to the street's name.

"We have a memorial that is not only a worthwhile memorial, but also a significant memorial," the Rev. Jim Spencer said.

K-State handles Kansas in Dallas

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

DALLAS – The K-State Wildcats advanced past the first round of the Big 12 Conference Tournament for the fifth consecutive year with a 72-52 win against the Kansas Jayhawks on Tuesday evening at Reunion Arena.

The win gave the No. 7-seeded Wildcats (19-9) their third-straight win against the No. 10-seeded Jayhawks (16-12) this season, and extended their series-best win streak to 11 games.

Kimberly Dietz puts up a layup over Kansas' Marija Zinic during the second half Tuesday night. Dietz scored 11 points to help the Wildcats to a 72-52 win over the Jayhawks in the Big 12 Tournament.

"I thought it was a really well-executed basketball game by our team, and I really appreciate the intensity, high level of accountability on the strengths that KU brings to the basketball floor, and I thought that gave us a chance to be competitive," Coach Deb Patterson said.

The Wildcats had four players in double figures, and were led by freshman Shalee Lehning, who scored a career and game-high 20 points on 7-of-11 shooting.

"We just have a lot of players that are willing to step up, and we have a lot of depth," Lehning said. "Any given night, different people step up, and our inside game is doing a great job of creating a big presence and that opens things up for the outside."

K-State opened the game by scoring the first 12 points while holding Kansas scoreless for almost four minutes. After being down 12-0, the Jayhawks went on a 10-0 run to pull within two points, 12-10, with less than 11 minutes remaining. Kansas would take a 24-22 lead with 5:05 left in the first half, but K-State went on a 15-3 run to build a 37-27 lead at the break.

"We really wanted to put everything we had onto the court, and we really didn't want to go home tomorrow (Wednesday)," said freshman JoAnn Hamlin, who scored all of her 12 points in the first half on 6-of-6 shooting.

In the second half, Kansas would get as close as eight points, but with 12:53 left in the game, K-State used an 18-4 run to rebuild the lead to 22 points.

For the game, the Wildcats kept the Jayhawks to just 16 field goals, and scored 27 points off of 18 Kansas turnovers. The win also gave the Wildcats their first victory since 1997 against the Jayhawks in the conference tournament.

K-State will take on No. 2-seed Baylor at 6 tonight in the quarterfinals of the tournament, and will try to avenge a 79-70 loss to the Bears (22-5) on Feb. 25 in Manhattan.

Patterson said the Wildcats are aware of the magnitude of tonight's rematch with the defending national champions.

"They are just a fabulous basketball team, and we understand that," Patterson said. "We know we have our hands full, and I think for us, it's just stepping on the floor and bringing a real high level of accountability and attention and effort and intensity to our defense. On the offensive end, we are hopeful that we can do a good job with their pressure, and you can't string together wasted possessions against a team like Baylor. It's part of what separates them."

Lehning tallies game-high 20 points in Big 12 Tourney win against KU

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

DALLAS – Few things have not been said about freshman Shalee Lehning during her first season with the K-State Wildcats.

Parts of Lehning's season were defined by her ability to share the ball and allow teammates to score. In Big 12 Conference play, she notched a team-high 86 assists.

Lehning's ability to add points to the scoreboard seemed to take a backseat during the conference season, when she averaged only 6.2 points per game.

In her first Big 12 Tournament, Lehning's 3-pointer to open the game set her offense-focused tone during K-State's win against KU.

"Lehning and (JoAnn) Hamlin really established early in the basketball game they were going to be factors for us offensively, and I thought that was absolutely huge," Coach Deb Patterson said.

When the final buzzer sounded, Lehning claimed a new season and career-high of 20 points.

"I just wanted to come in and contribute any way I could," Lehning said. "Tonight, they were slacking off on me a little bit, and I made that first shot, and it gave me confidence. I was trying to take what I could, and it was actually falling."

Patterson said Lehning's realization that teams have been guarding her less shows her growth as a player. In past games, Lehning's supposed reluctance to take shots seemed to sometimes hinder the team's performance.

"Shalee had demonstrated all season long she understands the game and as she has begun to understand the significance of not being guarded, she assumed a greater sense of needing to be a scorer," Patterson said. "So, I think it's always been more about need and not necessarily a gap or a hole in her game.

"At the same time, I think she's gotten better as a shooter. I just think it's one more element of the incredible basketball she brings to the floor."

In the previous two meetings this season, Lehning scored a combined 19 points against the Jayhawks. Tuesday night, she went 3-of-5 from beyond the arc and made 7-of-11 field goals.

"The opportunity was open for me to take the shot, and so I did," Lehning said.

"It's not the fact that it's KU, it's just that I'm coming into my shooting technique and a little more confidence that I'm willing to take the shots."

Next, the Wildcats move on to face Baylor in the next round of the tournament. Lehning said the tournament win against rival Kansas helps before moving on.

"This is a game that we love," she said. "There were some nerves before the game, but at the same time, we use those as positive motivation to give us energy and enthusiasm coming in. To come out with a win in our first Big 12 Tournament game is just a great boost for us."

Freshman Shalee Lehning spins to shoot a left-handed lay-up during the first half. Lehning scored a career and game-high 20 points to help K-State advance to the quarterfinals where it will play Baylor.

Big 12 Women's Basketball Championship

Off The Court
with Claire Coggins

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Junior Claire Coggins is one of the few K-State Wildcats who has participated in the Big 12 Conference Tournament and she used that experience to help the Wildcats advance past Kansas to the second round of the tournament Tuesday night.

Coggins, a Lee's Summit, Mo., native, led the team in scoring, averaging 12.6 points per game during the regular season. She recently sat down with the Collegian before the Wildcats' third meeting of the season with the Jayhawks to talk about her favorite moments of the postseason, Tina Turner's shaking ability and the "real" reason the movie "Glitter" flopped.

Q. Favorite tournament moment, on the court?
A. "Definitely beating Texas last year in the Big 12 Tournament to get to the championship game. That was probably one of the best games that I've ever been in."

Q. Favorite music to listen to before a game?
A. "I like to listen to slow songs. I like to think a lot, and I think a lot about the game on the bus ride over, but in the locker room, we listen to 'Check on it' by Beyonce (Knowles) and then 'Grillz.'"

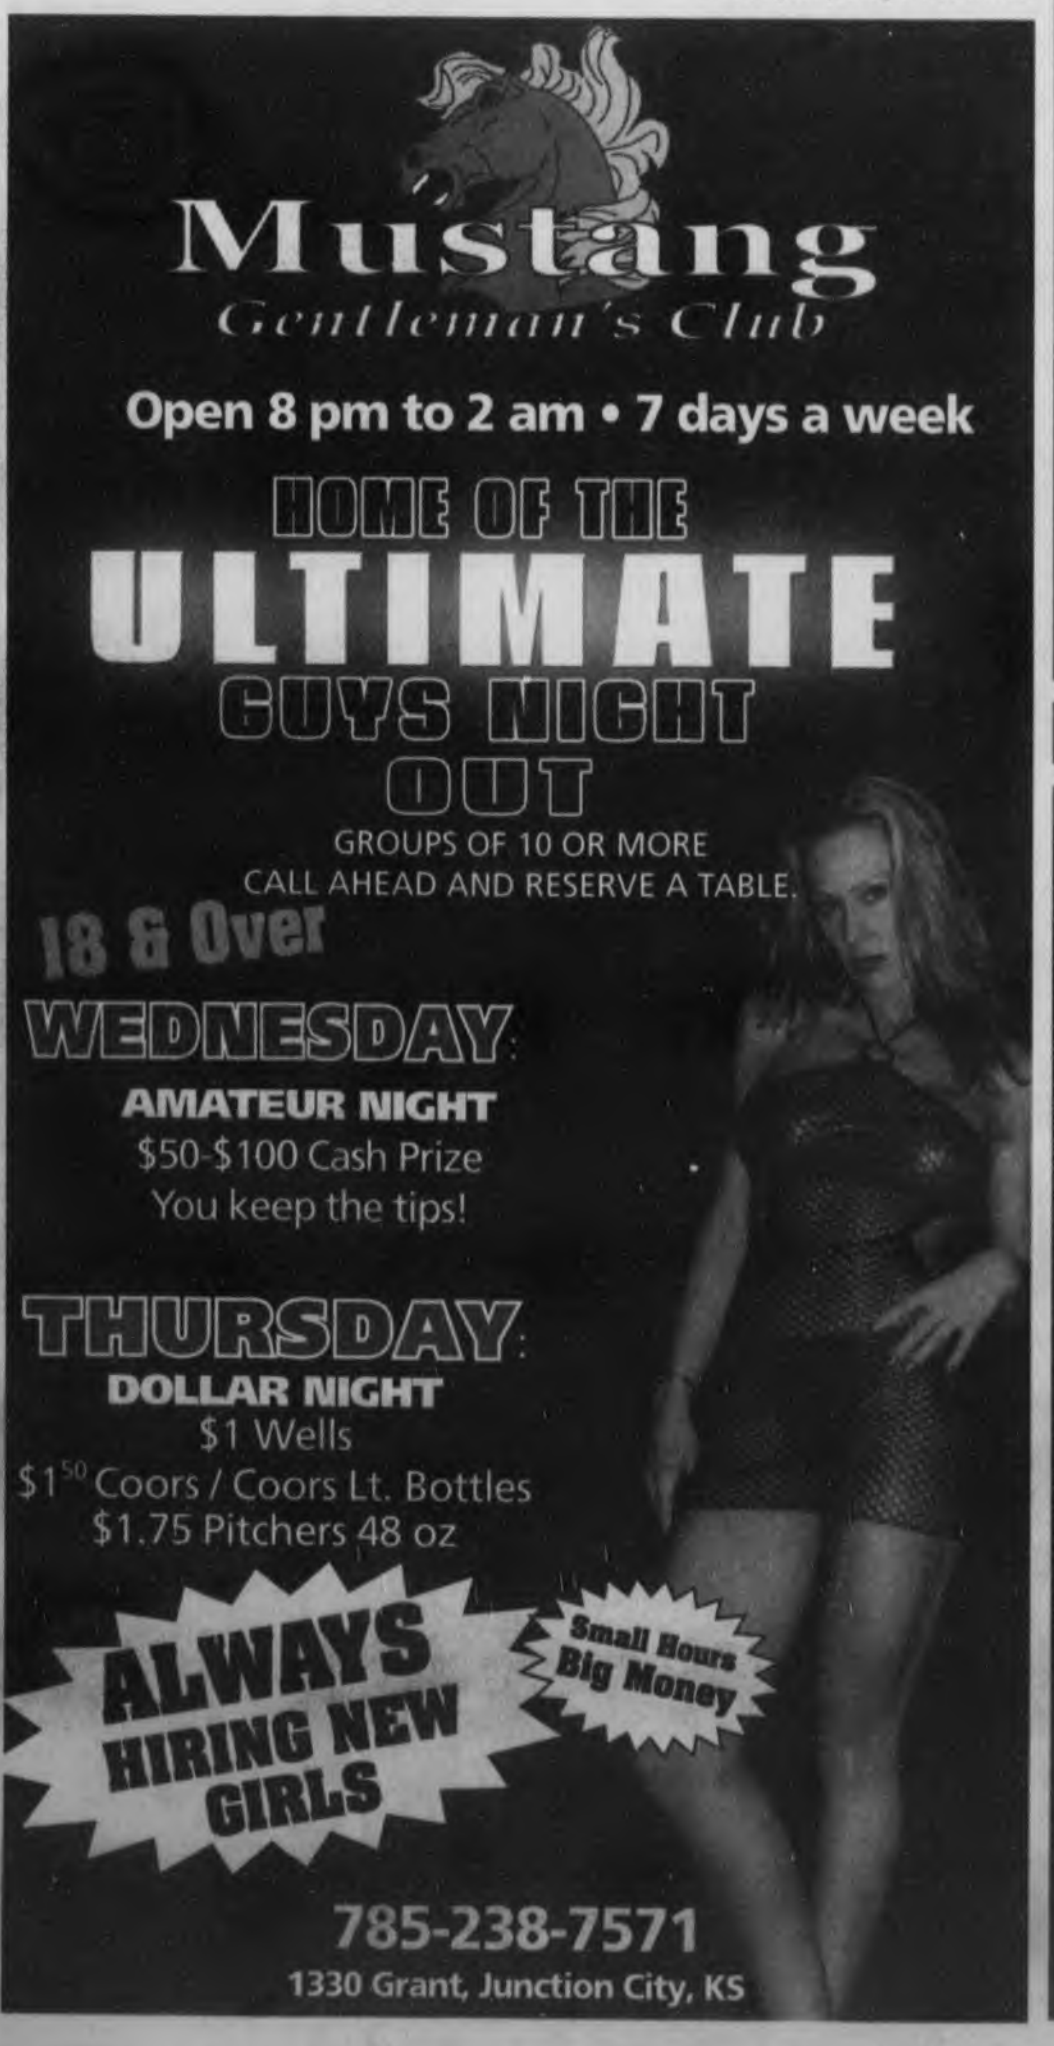
Q. Who is your favorite Family Guy character?
A. "Stewie. He's just crazy, and he cracks me up. He's just so sarcastic."

Q. When you were younger, what did you want to be when you grew up?
A. "A professional basketball player."

Q. Favorite off-the-court, post-season tournament moment?
A. "Last year we were in Kansas City and Coach P (Patterson) had us all in the meeting, and we were in there thinking we were going to talk about the game, but she sits us down, turns off the lights and puts on Tina Turner, and, man, watching a 60-year-old woman just shaking it, it was the best. It still sticks with me today."

Q. If you could dunk on any person, who would it be?
A. "I would probably dunk on Kobe Bryant to hurt his pride a little bit."

Q. What's the most creative pick-up line you have ever heard?
A. "I don't really get pick-up lines. I think people are too scared to talk to me. People never hit on me unless it's over Facebook."



Q. If you could bring back any player from last year's Big 12 Conference Tournament runner-up team, who would it be?
A. "It would be Megan Mahoney. She's the smartest person ever to run a team. Without Megan on the court, we are easier to beat, but with Megan on the team we're pretty tough. I've never seen that girl give up."

Q. I hear you are a Mariah Carey fan; what did you think of the movie "Glitter?"
A. "I loved 'Glitter.' I got so mad because she didn't get any props for that movie. It was a good plot, and I guarantee if they would have had some other famous actors in it, it would have been a hit."

Q. What would be your ultimate spring break destination and why?
A. "I would go to Capri because I would love to go over seas, and it's Mariah's favorite spot."

Junior Akeem Wright dribbles past Kansas' Julian Wright in K-State's 66-52 loss to the Jayhawks on Saturday. Wright said he is prepared for Texas Tech play to the best of its ability, just like every other team competing for the Big 12 crown in Dallas.

K-State men open Big 12 Tourney play Thursday

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If K-State believes Coach Jim Wooldridge's job depends on the Wildcats' success at the Big 12 Conference Tournament in Dallas, they sure seem to be hiding it well.

"We really don't know too much about that situation, but obviously, it would be good to keep Coach Wooldridge around," junior forward Cartier Martin said.

Martin, named to the coaches' All-Big 12 second team Monday, said he doesn't feel additional pressure in preparing for Thursday's opening round matchup against eighth-seeded Texas Tech.

"We are just focused on playing our style of basketball," Martin said. "We want to play together, and surprise some teams."

Though Wooldridge's job security has become a hot topic among many K-State fans, junior guard Akeem Wright said the team has not discussed the issue internally.

"That hasn't come up in any team conversation whatsoever," Wright said. "We just want to go out and win, and let the inside stuff take care of itself."

Wright said the only pressure he feels is directed toward helping K-State get to the postseason for the first time since 1996.

"We want to do whatever it takes to get there," Wright said. "But I think we need to make some noise in the Big 12 Tournament."

For starters, ninth-seeded K-State (15-12, 6-10 Big 12) will try to avenge a 70-56 loss against Coach Bob Knight's Texas Tech squad (14-16, 6-10) that the Wildcats suffered Feb. 15 in Lubbock, Texas.

The rematch is set for 11:30 a.m. Thursday at the American Airlines Center in Dallas.

Texas Tech's back-court duo of Jarrius Jackson and Martin Zeno is arguably one of the best guard tandems in the Big 12.

Jackson, a 6-foot-1 junior, leads the Big 12 in scoring at 20.3 points per game, and in minutes played, at 38.27 per game. For his efforts, Jackson recently was named to the coaches' All-Big 12 first team.

Zeno is a 6-foot-5 sophomore who ranks 14th in the Big 12 in scoring, at 13.9 ppg, and fourth in minutes played at 35.27 per game.

Though Tech defeated K-State rather comfortably in February, Wright said he doesn't think that will give the Red Raiders any comfort heading into Thursday's game.

"On any given night, anyone can get beat, so I think (the Red Raiders) will keep that in their head," Wright said. "I think they will come out well prepared, not big-headed."

K-State is trying to salvage its season on the heels of Saturday's 66-52 loss to Kansas.

K-State pulled within three points (49-46) of the Jayhawks but failed to score a field goal in the final 11 minutes.

The loss dropped K-State to 6-10 in conference play and, perhaps more importantly, lowered the Wildcats' chances at a postseason bid.

To add to K-State's problems, junior guard Mario Taybron suffered a thigh injury late in the game against Kansas.

"What basically happened was I was trying to fight through a screen and a KU player kneed me in the thigh," Taybron said. "I got a little treatment Sunday morning and Sunday night, so I was able to practice (Monday). It's a little sore, but I will be ready to go on Thursday."

If the Wildcats get past Texas Tech, they will face No. 1 seed Texas at 11:30 a.m. Friday.

But right now, Martin said K-State is only focused on taking care of business against Texas Tech.

"We are looking at this tournament as a whole new season," Martin said. "We are just going to take it day by day."

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Coach Jim Wooldridge found something to applaud about in K-State's 66-52 loss to Kansas Saturday. The applause might continue in Dallas, as Wooldridge said K-State is capable of beating any team in the Big 12 Conference at the tournament.

Despite losses, Cats still wow 'em

There have been multiple instances this season where I've found it hard to agree with Coach Jim Wooldridge.

ANGIE HANSON

I haven't agreed with his choice to play freshman Deilvez Yearby at all. I haven't agreed with his choice to bench senior Schyler Thomas throughout most of the season. I haven't agreed with most of his substitutions. I haven't agreed with his motion offense. I think he should've implemented his zone throughout most of February.

But there is one thing he has consistently said throughout the season that I agree with – he has one heck of a good team.

He does, and he said it again, in Saturday's post-game press conference.

"You guys might not agree with me, but I think I got a good team," Wooldridge said after the 52-66 loss to Kansas.

This year's Cats have proven they can play against quality opponents. They beat Kansas on Jan. 14, and almost beat top-25 teams Texas and Oklahoma, losing by only one point to each. Last year's team didn't.

The only thing is, close losses don't count. This year's squad finished out the regular conference season with the same record last year's did – 6-10.

Then, Wooldridge said something else. Something a little more profound, and a little more direct than usual.

"I wish I could've done better with them in some aspects," he said Saturday.

Now, Wooldridge has never been one to place any blame on his players. He always, maybe even too often, accepts blame for anything that happens on the court, including close losses, decision-making, play calling, etc.

There were times I didn't believe he deserved to carry all that weight on his shoulders. In basketball, it takes two to tango – the coaches calling the plays, and the players who are supposed to successfully execute.

But now he has me convinced. I fully agree with Wooly. He might be the responsible party, and he should've done more with this team.

Last year, Wooldridge had roughly five players he could count on. Senior Jeremiah Massey was the Wildcats' offensive leader, averaging 17.9 points per game.

He was followed by former K-Stater Fred Peete with 13.0 and then-sophomores Cartier Martin with 10.5 and Lance Harris with 10.4. Then-freshman Clent Stewart led the Cats in assists and started every game.

This team is putting up similar numbers, with Martin pacing the Cats at 18.3 ppg, sophomore David Hoskins with 12.7 ppg and Harris at 10.7 ppg.

But statistics are overrated.

Juniors Akeem Wright and Mario Taybron came to Manhattan this year and helped build the quick-transition offense and scrappy defense that has become synonymous with this team. Senior Dramane Diarra took off his redshirt and has been a big body down low and a consistent offensive contributor.

Harris, Martin and Stewart have matured, and Martin is averaging seven more points per game.

There are 10 players, rather than five, on this year's team, who are accountable and can come out against any team and be expected to perform. They have been fueled by the surprising upset to Kansas all season. Even when they lost to the likes of Baylor, Missouri and Iowa State – all of which finished below K-State in Big 12 standings – they have found a way to come back fighting.

This K-State team easily could be a 12-4 team and not a 6-10 team in the league, and Wooldridge easily could have taken his team to the NCAA Tournament or National Invitational Tournament this year.

Starting Thursday, Wooldridge has one more chance to do something with the 2005-06 team that he didn't do with the 2004-05 roster.

He can carry this team to the third round, or even the championship game in the Big 12 Tourney in Dallas, which would encourage and/or cement a post-season invite.

Wooldridge said one more thing on Saturday that I'm in agreement with. Something I hope the Cats can prove on the court in Dallas.

"We feel like we can beat anyone in the league," Wooldridge said.

I agree with Wooldridge, and for his sake, it better happen.

Potential candidates

Coach Jim Wooldridge's two-year contract extension is almost up, and if the requirements in his contract are not fulfilled by the end of this season, there has been speculation as to who will replace Wooldridge, should he not return next year. Here are some of the biggest names that have surfaced surrounding K-State's potential coaching search.

Steve Henson

Henson, a six-year NBA veteran and former K-State guard, is a second-year assistant coach at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, under former K-State great Lon Kruger. Previously, he was an assistant coach at South Florida for a year and assistant coach and scout for the NBA's Atlanta Hawks from 2001-03. In 1999-2000, he was an assistant coach at Illinois.

Henson

Henson played at K-State from 1986-90, and it's been rumored he is a candidate, should Wooldridge leave.

In his four-year career as a Wildcat, Henson was a two-time honorable mention All-American and earned All-Big Eight Conference accolades as a junior and senior.

Greg McDermott

Greg McDermott is in his fifth year coaching at Northern Iowa. This season, the Panthers are 23-9, breaking into the top 25 on Jan. 30 at No. 24, with notable wins against teams like Iowa, Wichita State, Bucknell and Louisiana State, all of which were top-25 teams this season.

McDermott

Last season, McDermott took his team to the NCAA Tournament for the first time in school history, and in the 2003-04 season, he led Northern Iowa — a team who hadn't experienced a winning season since 1996-97 — to its first-ever Missouri Valley Conference title and second-ever NCAA Division I tournament.

Tim Jankovich

Tim Jankovich, a former point guard at K-State, is in his third year as an assistant coach at Kansas under Coach Bill Self, whom he followed from Illinois where he served as an assistant.

Jankovich

In his 21-year coaching tenure, Jankovich has been an assistant to former K-State Coach Jack Hartman, and Lon Kruger, Oklahoma State Coach Eddie Sutton and Pittsburg State Coach Gene Iba, at schools like Texas, Oklahoma State, Vanderbilt and Colorado State, in addition to Kansas and Illinois.

In his first head-coaching stint at North Texas, Jankovich proved he could turn a team around. In his first year as coach at North Texas, his squad went 5-22, and the next year, Jankovich took his team to the conference championship.

Jankovich was a three-year starter at point guard for K-State from 1979-82. Jankovich led the Cats to three-straight NCAA Tournament appearances.

Bob Huggins

Bob Huggins, who spent 16 years as head coach at Cincinnati, was forced to resign from the Bearcats' program in August 2005, after receiving a DUI arrest. Ever since, there has been mass speculation of where Huggins will land a job, and he has emerged as an attractive candidate — despite his record — to many schools nationwide.

Huggins

In his 24 years coaching, Huggins has collected a cumulative 567-199 record, making him the eighth-winningest active coach in Division I and his 14-straight NCAA Tournament appearances is the third-longest active streak. He is averaging 23.5 victories per season and led the Bearcats to 10 regular-season conference titles and eight conference tournament crowns. Cincinnati advanced to postseason play in all 16 seasons under Huggins, continuing to the Elite Eight in the NCAA Tournament three times and the Final Four once.

Huggins has received multiple national coach of the year awards from various outlets in his coaching tenure.

Voting bug had no effect

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A computer malfunction occurred Wednesday morning with the online voting system for Student Governing Association elections.

Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator for the Office of Student Activities and Services, said the glitch did not affect the elections results or their release.

Rob Caffey, director of the Office of Mediated Education, said there was a problem with the student information system that updates students' majors.

"As I understand it, there was part of the process that updates the eID system with information from the student information system," he said.

Caffey said the glitch was fixed at about noon Wednesday.

"The election system was designed so that if that happened, students could just sign back in and get it corrected," Caffey said.

The two scenes could not have been more different.

Longhorns Saloon was silent with about 20 of presidential candidate pair Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy's friends and supporters. Lucas Maddy sat quietly on a barstool, watching the student body elections coverage on Cox channel 8 before 6 p.m. Wednesday.

Across the street at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque, more than 100 friends and supporters gathered at Matt King and Emily Besler's watch party. The room was filled with conversation and laughter until about 6:25 p.m.

Faculty member dies Saturday in Union parking lot

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State faculty member died Saturday.

Peggie Armour, accountant for the College of Education, died of a sudden illness Saturday evening in the K-State Student Union parking lot.

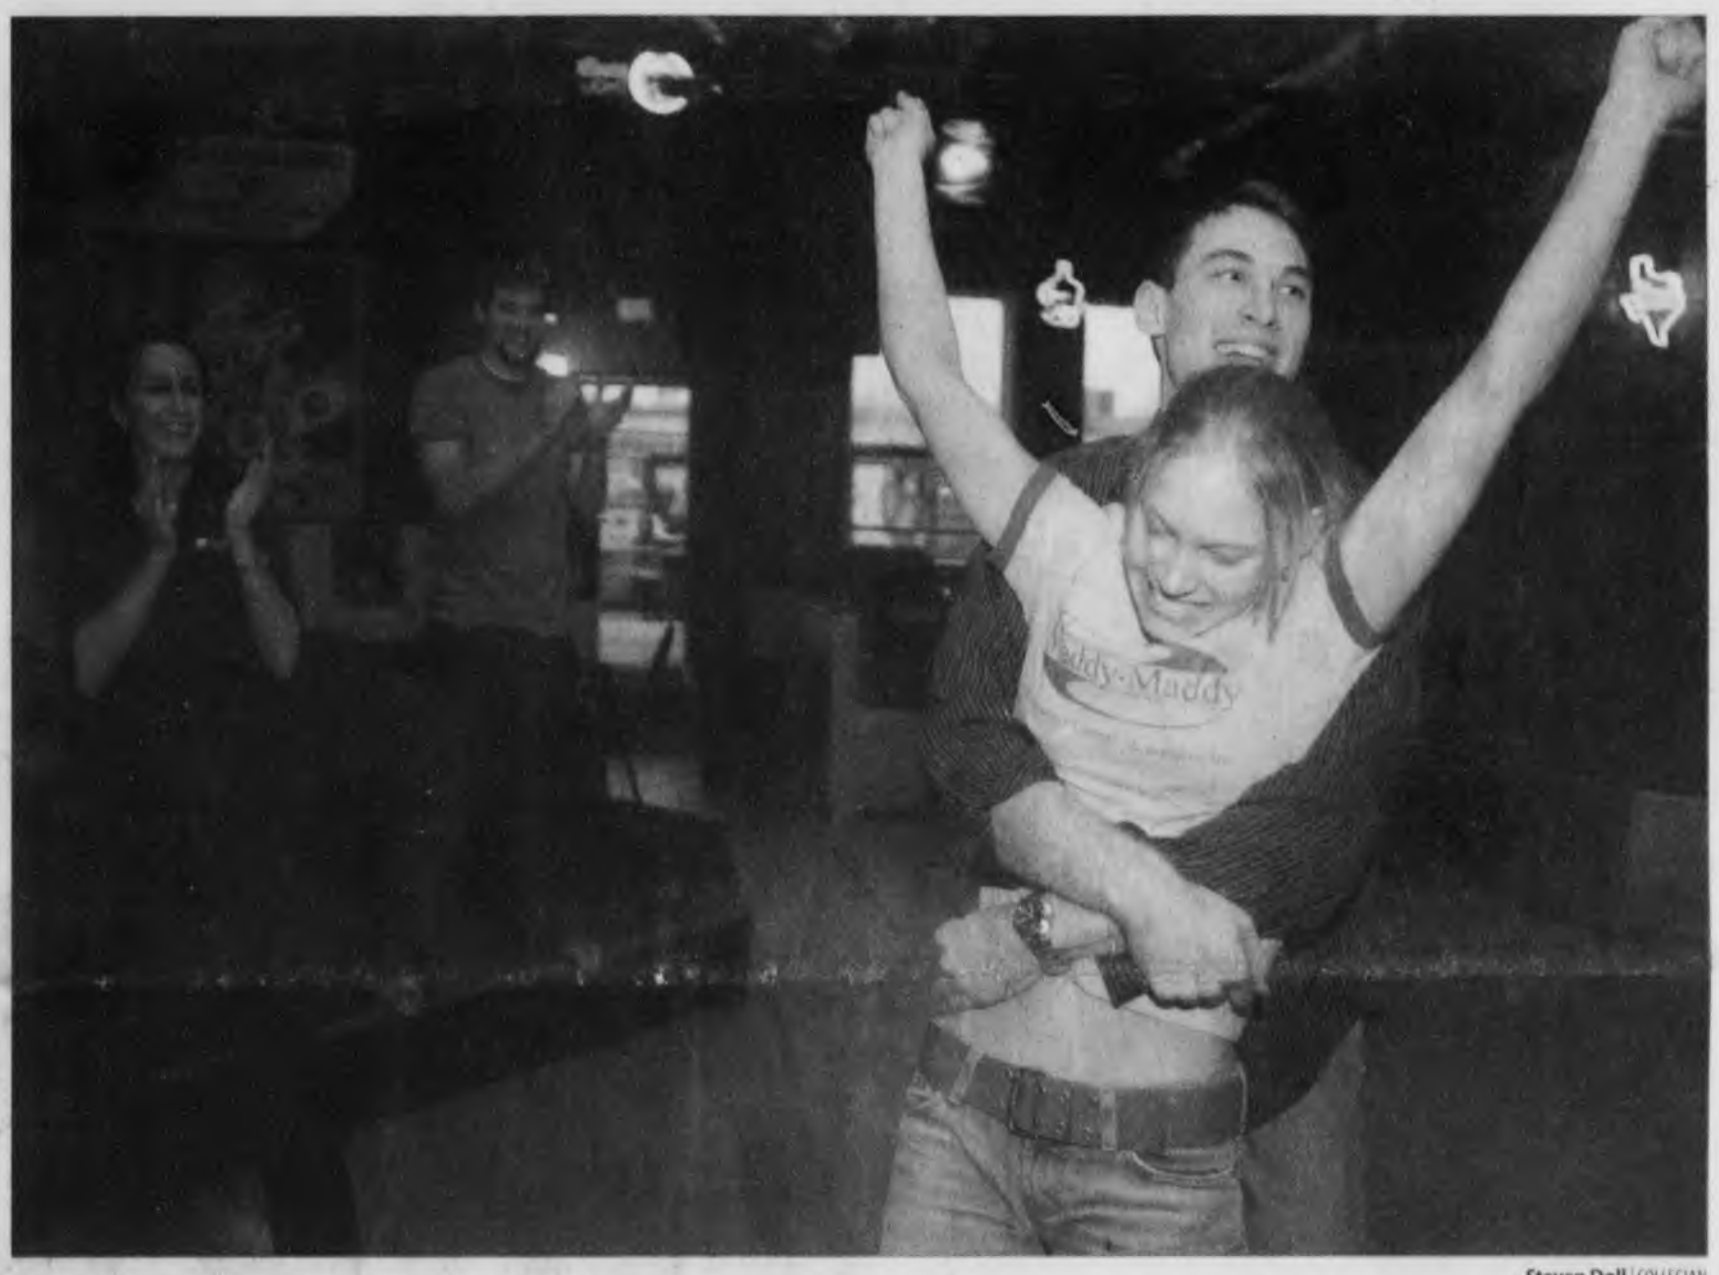
Armour lived in Wamego, Kan., with her husband, Patrick, who said friends and neighbors have stopped by to share their memories of his wife.

"Some we've known for 30 years and haven't seen for five," Patrick said. "You get to renew those old friendships through something like this."

Patrick said his wife left a legacy of compassion and support.

In response to Peggie's death, many K-State colleagues have expressed their sympathy and support for the family, which Patrick said is a testament to Peggie's personality.

Jackie McCormick, senior administrative assistant for dean of the College of Education, had known Peggie for 30 years.



"Our children went to school together, were in the same grade," she said.

Peggie's colleagues, like her family, have come together to remember her.

"We've talked about her and talked about all the good she did," McCormick said.

A memorial service will be at 7 p.m. Friday at Stewart Funeral Home in Wamego, and the funeral will be 10:30 a.m. Saturday at St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Flush, Kan.

Maddy siblings win race for presidency, vice presidency over King, Besler

By Owen Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Katie Maddy held a cell phone to her ear, pointed to a radio and screamed two words: "We won!"

The crowd at the Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddys' watch party stared at the TV screens in Longhorns Saloon, waiting to hear which pair won the general election for student body president and vice president. But KSDB-FM 91.9 was the bearer of the good news.

Wildcat 91.9 announced the unofficial results that siblings Lucas and Katie will be K-State's next student body president and vice president.

The Maddys won the race with 3,019 votes, or 53.9 percent. The pair placed only 10 votes behind candidates Matt King and Emily Besler in the primary election.

After hearing the results, Lucas, senior in agricultural technology management, hugged his sister, and ran to the disc jockey booth. Seconds later,

King, Besler fall to Maddy duo; unsure of SGA future

There were tears and there were hugs.

The once-electric atmosphere at Matt King and Emily Besler's watch party at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque quickly turned somber after the announcement of Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy as the next student body president and vice president.

King and Besler received 2,585 votes to the Maddys' 3,019.

King and Besler said they were shocked and frustrated.

"We think we're the most qualified candidates," King, junior in political science and natural resources, told supporters. "Our issues were strong. Our support was strong. I think the fact that we lost, and you (the audience) cheered says a lot about the great support we had."

The two said they were proud of how they ran their campaign.

"Our campaign was completely clean, and that's huge," King said.

Both said they will continue to work on their issues – campus safety, academic excellence, the creation of a student pre-game section and the "Big Three" issues of tuition, textbooks and parking – until their current Student Senate terms are completed.

"We don't need the title to make things happen," said Besler, junior in marketing and political science.

Neither King nor Besler knows what role they will play in Student Governing Association next year, they said.

"We'll still be leaders on this campus, and we challenge our opponents to do the same," King said.

But SGA might not be in the future for the pair, both of whom won Senate seats for the College of Arts and Sciences.

"It might be time to do something different," Besler said. "There's something better out there for us."

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Topeka church protest
TULSA, Okla. — The Topeka-based Westboro Baptist Church said Wednesday that it will not violate new state laws that limit where and when demonstrations may take place. The group has gained media attention lately by picketing the funerals of service members killed in Iraq and Afghanistan. The church is considering challenging laws and said it successfully challenged a similar law in Kansas 10 years ago.

Security firm stormed
BAGHDAD, Iraq — Gunmen wearing Interior Ministry uniforms stormed an Iraqi security company and abducted 50 hostages. The ministry has denied involvement and called the abduction a "terrorist act." Gunmen also have attacked the convoy of Interior Ministry Undersecretary Hekmet Moussa, killing two bodyguards and injuring two others.

Protests in Darfur
KHARTOUM, Sudan — Tens of thousands marched in protest of plans to deploy U.N. peacekeepers to Darfur. The Sudanese government opposes the deployment and threatens violence if the U.N. troops replace African Union peacekeepers. Three years of violence in Darfur have seen 180,000 killed and 2 million displaced.

Presidential Approval
For the first time since he took office, Bush's approval rating among self-identified conservatives has fallen below 60 percent.

Union 50th anniversary event recreates theme

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Student Union celebrated its 50th anniversary by recreating the original grand opening theme of 1956 – A Night at the Circus.

The celebration took place in the Union Courtyard between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. Wednesday.

"This is a mile-marker for the Union," said Anthony Carter, president of the Union Governing Board and junior in pre-professional secondary education.

"This university and the Union is about the students and is all for the students."

The afternoon had a series of events. There were different flavors of birthday cake; magician Kipp Van Dyke performed tricks; a balloon twister was present; Big Cats distributed candy; radio station KJCK-FM 97.5 provided live coverage; Cadence, the a capella group, performed; and samples of Diet Mountain Dew were distributed.

Belinda Neibling and Becky Parker, co-chairs of the UPC special events committee, said they have been working for months on the birthday celebration, and they were eagerly waiting to see how the event would be received by the students.

K-State football Coach Ron Prince was present at the birthday party to meet and greet students and get to know people from the academic community.

"This is the celebration of humanity and a forum for the exchange of ideas," Prince said.

Planning for the events of this week began about two years ago, Ben Hopper, program adviser for UPC, said.

"It is hard to imagine campus life without the Union," Hopper said. "The services and the programs enhance the K-State experience."

Mandy Squib, senior in physical sciences and a former student of the University of Kansas, compared the unions of the two universities.

Celebrating 50 years, the K-State Student Union sponsors a birthday celebration Wednesday in the Union Courtyard. Activities included free cake, pop, and activities from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

"The K-State Union is extremely accessible to students compared to the one at KU, and there is a wide array of facilities it offers to the students," she said.

Marylyn Bell, K-State alumna, said she enjoyed coming back to campus and witnessing the activities and improvements.

"This occasion celebrates the past and helps us look into the future," said Nacole Boan, UPC president and senior in political science.

"Being consistent with our mission statement, we want the Union to be the living room of the campus where students can hang out and feel comfortable."

Union director aims to keep building up to date by providing latest technology

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Student Union has been operating for half a century, and a question that often might come to mind is whether it adapts to the changing needs of the students through the years.

"The Union strives to provide opportunities for people from all walks of life," said Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union. "It helps develop an appreciation for mankind and respect for other beliefs."

Referring to the renovation that was undertaken from 1998 to 2000, Connaughton said the changes positioned the Union for at least the next 15 years.

"The building was somewhat dated," Connaughton said. "When freshmen, parents and alumni walk in, they should experience a contemporary feel to the Union."

The renovations, which amounted to $12 million, transformed the Union into its current state, Connaughton said.

The whole first floor was revamped, with additions like the Union Food Court, the radio station, Multicultural Student Organizations and the Cat's Den, which replaced the previous small convenience store.

The Computer Store, which formerly was integrated with the bookstore, got its own new location. The layout and functionality of the Union Bookstore also received a face lift.

"We try to keep abreast with the latest technology," said Chris Loehr, Computer Store manager. "We are working with CNS, the ITAC center and tech services to provide seamless operations to the students."

The renovations also allocated a new area for copying and printing services, which formerly was housed in the basement of Kedzie Hall.

Glenn Hoover, assistant director of K-State Printing Services, said having the printing and copy center at the Union was well-received by K-State students, because of the twin advantages of convenience and affordability.

"We handle digital, wide-format printing and binding," he said.

"We provide the newest technology, and students can just e-mail in their printing requests."

An important part of the Union is the Union Program Council, Beth Bailey, assistant director of UPC, said.

Bailey said the UPC provides entertaining, cultural, recreational and educational programs each year.

"Committees have ebbed and flowed according to the needs of the students," she said.

The entertainment hub of the Union remains the Union Recreation Center, home to the bowling alleys, pool tables and other forms of entertainment.

"We are the foundation of the Union," said Terri Eddy, recreation manager at the Union. "Our poles hold up everybody."

Eddy said the trend nationwide lately has been the closure of recreational centers in universities.

She said the bowling alley has features like automatic scoring and complete lane overlay, which help keep the appeal fresh.

"We have five-year plans which we continuously update," Connaughton said. "We constantly upgrade the technology like computers, cash registers and equipment in the ID center."

The Union currently is host to about 15,000 to 17,000 people every day and is open for 112 hours a week.

Connaughton said that with the upcoming parking garage, the Union would become more of a focal point for K-State students and faculty.

The Union's latest concern is energy-efficiency, Connaughton said.

"We have faced criticisms, but we constantly work as a team and try hard to serve the students and guests by listening to all their comments and feedback," Connaughton said.

Richardson, Mikols win Salina elections

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lauren Richardson and Robin Mikols won the K-State-Salina general election for student body president and vice president Wednesday with 127 votes, 66.5 percent of the total votes.

Jacob Mitchem and Robert Penner received 64 votes, or 33.5 percent.

K-State-Salina students cast 191 votes for student body president and vice president, 26 votes fewer than the 2005 K-State-Salina general elections.

Richardson said she was surprised to hear the results.

"We have definitely been anticipating finding out," she said. "This is just awesome – I'm doing a happy dance."

Richardson said she plans to continue with her original three-issue platform of atmosphere, activities and alliance.

"We are getting the GlobalFlyer again next year, so I think that will really help out a lot with getting students involved," Richardson said.

Mitchem said he was disappointed with the results.

"I am little surprised, but it has been a lot of fun," he said.

Andrew Wilber, K-State-Salina elections chair, said the presidential election went smoothly, but the Student Senate elections had problems.

"The problem mainly had to do with the way the majors are programmed into the computer," Wilber said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Elected officials need to fulfill campaign goals

Congratulations to new Student Body President Lucas Maddy, Vice President Katie Maddy and all new and incumbent members of Student Senate and all college councils.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The high voter turnout in Wednesday's elections reflect a student body that cares about campus politics and the future of K-State. All students who voted should be proud of their willingness to exercise their democratic right to vote.

It is the job of students to look to President Lucas Maddy and Vice President Katie Maddy, as well as their other newly elected officials, and hold them accountable to the campaign promises they made when they announced their candidacy.

Similarly, our newly elected officials should keep the needs and desires of their constituents at heart and act in their best interests.

More importantly, the president, vice president and student senators must keep lines of open communication between themselves and the campus. Students should not be afraid to bring their own questions and concerns to their elected officials. It is right, and they should expect these officials to listen to them with an open mind.

We wish Lucas and Katie Maddy and all other elected officials the best of luck in their tenure ahead. May they always act for the betterment of this campus.

Recruiting rights

Military should be allowed to target college students on campus

ZACHARY T. ECKELS

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled on Monday that the government can still force universities to allow military recruiters on their campus. The case, Rumsfeld v. Forum for Academic and Institutional Rights, came to the courts after several law schools and professors objected to the militaries, "don't ask, don't tell" policy on homosexual the universities questioned the constitutionality of the statue that allows the Secretary of Defense to deny federal funding to those universities that refuse the recruiters.

Now, I might not agree with this discriminating law the military refuses to let go, but trying to refuse recruiters is ridiculous.

Aren't content-based restrictions what we are trying to fight in America? We go out of our way to make sure the Ku Klux Klan can march down Main Street, but we want to keep the military's voice off of our campuses?

Sure, in this situation, the military seems outdated and homophobic, but avoiding interaction is hardly the best way to solve any issue.

Even if you could justify muffling the military, aren't we supposed to be angry that the military is recruiting the poorer areas of America more heavily?

I know I wasn't the only one who cheered on Michael Moore as he investigated this problem and questioned the powers that be on why their children were too good to serve our country.

Personally, I can't think of a better place to recruit a population that has it better off than a good portion of America.

We're lucky to be where we are, and perhaps the military is a perfect solution to students who need to pay back loans or figure out their life.

These are the people the recruiters are here for. And while I know these recruiters can be horribly annoying, it's not too difficult to say, "no, thank you," and walk away.

Luckily for us, the court pretty much eliminated any questions on how the universities would reply.

According to the San Francisco Chronicle, the court added that Congress could now demand military access to a campus without a financial requirement.

In other words, even if a university gets the courage to push their luck and give up their federal money, they would most likely still end up with recruiters on campus.

The other day a friend of mine said college is the place to go to figure out who you are, to decide whether you want to leave here the same person or to completely change your life. By trying to restrict military recruiting on campus, the universities would have taken away one of the options students can decide to take.

As our leaders in this period of our life, they should only be trying to give us more.

State has no right to endorse single religion

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

The state of Missouri has done it again.

Legislators in Jefferson City, Mo., want to pass a resolution stating that they "stand with the majority of our constituents and exercise the common sense that voluntary prayer in public schools and religious displays on public property are not a coalition of church and state, but rather the justified recognition of the positive role that Christianity has played in this great nation of ours, the United States of America."

Sure, Christianity has played a role in "this great nation of ours," but so has Judaism, Islam and other non-Christian religions.

In fact, "this great nation of ours" was inhabited by non-Christian people until Christians introduced smallpox-covered blankets and started slaughtering everything that could be seen as food, thereby eradicating most of the native people.

This saved the nation, so the Missouri Legislature could debate turning its collective back on everyone who isn't Christian.

Just to put up a Christmas tree on the courthouse steps or thank Jesus for that test being cancelled.

The problem with this resolution is the use of the word "majority." As in the majority of people are Christian, so we should protect their rights, but not those of the minority.

The resolution also states that, as elected officials, they should protect the majority's right to express their religious beliefs while showing respect for those who object.

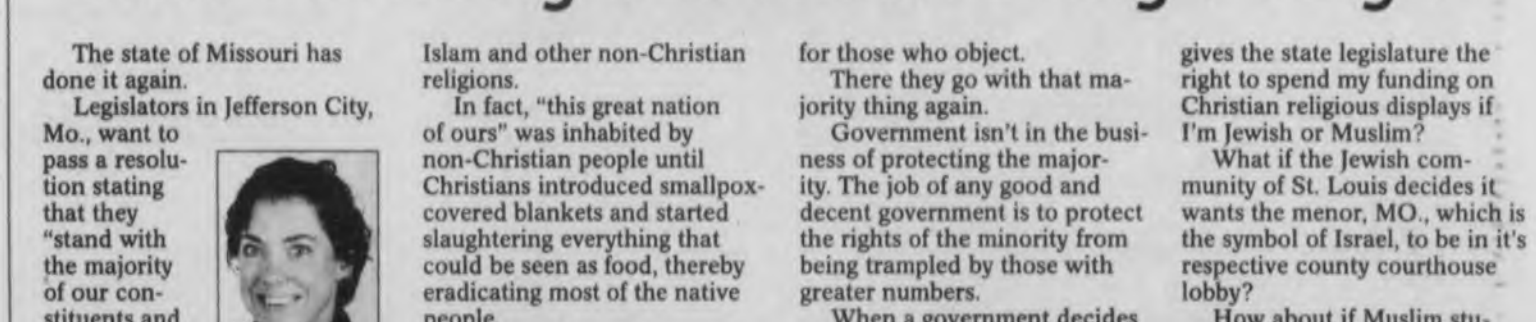
There they go with that majority thing again.

Government isn't in the business of protecting the majority. The job of any good and decent government is to protect the rights of the minority from being trampled by those with greater numbers.

When a government decides it needs to protect the rights of the majority from the views of the minority, it fails in it's mission.

So why does Missouri need a resolution stating the majority of its citizens are Christian? Has it taken a poll? Is that a standard question when people go to vote or get their driver's license? How does it know?

Is it the same common sense that tells these legislators voluntary prayer in public schools and religious displays on public property should be allowed?



If I live in Missouri and my tax funds go to the county and school district I live in, what gives the state legislature the right to spend my funding on Christian religious displays if I'm Jewish or Muslim?

What if the Jewish community of St. Louis decides it wants the menor, MO., which is the symbol of Israel, to be in it's respective county courthouse lobby?

How about if Muslim students want to pray to Allah and have everyone join?

I'm not good at predicting government actions. Lord knows I've been wrong before, believing government actually might make sense in what it does, but I don't imagine it would take the Missouri Legislature long to pass not only a resolution, but a law making both of those illegal.

Plan B pill not same as RU-486; prevention is purpose, not abortion

Editor,

I am writing in regards to Stephen M. Johnson's letter to the editor on March 3.

Plan B has been proven to have very little consequences on the body when taken correctly. According to the official Plan B Web site (www.go2planb.com), "Plan B is approved by the FDA and contains the hormone levonorgestrel, the same hormone in the birth control pills that health care professionals have been prescribing for more than 35 years."

According to my OB/GYN, Dr. Cynthia Eckert of the Women's Clinic of Johnson County with locations at Menorah Hospital and Shawnee Mission Medical Hospital, Plan B is the equivalent of taking three or even four birth control pills and will not hurt your body unless you use it continually time after time.

The Plan B Web site also goes on to say, "Remember that Plan B is not RU-486 (the abortion pill). Because Plan B is used to PREVENT an unplanned pregnancy, it will not work if you're already pregnant."

It is to my understanding that if Stephen M. Johnson is going to call this an abortion, then one can also assume that he thinks taking regular birth control pills are simply another form of an abortion. The fact that Johnson says, "... we must acknowledge that this is indeed an abortion" shows how little he really knows about the subject.

Plan B has never been related to an abortion and is in no way illegal or wrong if the FDA has approved it and OB/GYN's across the country prescribe Plan B to their patients.

In some cases, women who have taken Plan B are not careless but have been raped, or, in other cases, women may take it as a back-up to their regular birth control pills because birth control pills are not 100 percent effective, especially within the first one or two months of starting the pills.

Humane horse slaughtering is necessary for population control

Editor,

I would like to applaud the USDA for setting up a fee-for-service inspection program at the horse slaughter plants. What USDA/FSIS is doing is saving the United States horse industry from a complete disaster.

The means to handle the large amount of unwanted horses produced each year does not exist. Sure, some could be adopted and some could go to retirement farms, but eventually, the money and manpower needed to support all of these excess horses no longer will be there.

The majority of the horses slaughtered each year are killed because they are unwanted, and it is better for the horse owners in an economic sense and the horses in a humane sense for them to be slaughtered.

Also, let's not forget that many of these horses are dangerous, not only to humans, but also to themselves and other animals. The horse slaughter plants are providing a necessary service to the American horse industry.

I would like to thank Megan Green for her concern about the humane treatment of horses at slaughter plants. However, she should do her research before bashing the USDA and what it is doing.

As to her comment about eating horse meat being un-American, I would like to say, she has the choice and right to decide whether to eat horse meat and THAT is the essence of being American. I have eaten horse meat several times, in America, and would do so again without hesitation.

It is important that all food animals be slaughtered humanely. Reforms for the transport of horses to the slaughter plant as well as changes in the way horses are stunned in the slaughter process are needed. However, banning horse slaughter is by no means a solution to the problem.

John D. Lutter | COLLEGE OF VETERINARY MEDICINE ALUMNUS

Regulation of breeding in horses, not slaughter, is solution to overpopulation

Editor,

Megan Green's column on horse slaughter provided an interesting perspective – that of a person who has eaten horse meat and is now vehemently opposed to it – that reiterates once again why horse slaughter should be illegal in the United States ("Save a horse," March 6).

Horses are loving, caring animals who are as loyal as the family dog, and they ought to be afforded the same care as the family companion animal when they become old or sick. We at People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) are calling for an outright and permanent ban on slaughtering horses in the United States and the prohibition of exporting live horses for slaughter in other countries. PETA encourages concerned constituents to go to House.gov and Senate.gov and contact their legislators to request that they support bills related to this matter.

People can help prevent horse slaughter by avoiding horseracing, an industry which carelessly breeds and discards countless animals each year. Refuse to patronize existing tracks, work to reform and enforce racing regulations, lobby against the construction of new tracks and educate your friends and family about the tragic lives of racehorses.

If you have the money, acreage and time, consider adopting a rescued racehorse from an organization that rehabilitates them, such as the Equine Rescue League in Virginia or Redwings Horse Sanctuary in California.

For more information, please visit PETA.org.

Health and welfare of animals would be at risk if ban is passed

Editor,

There have been many opinion articles over the years with which I have disagreed. That's the point of opinion articles – not everyone will agree. However, I found Megan Green's article 'Save a Horse' in Monday's Collegian to be absolutely ridiculous.

I, too, grew up around horses and have tremendous respect for their power and beauty. However, there are far worse fates for unwanted horses than humane slaughter. Recently in the news there was a story of several horses right here in Kansas that starved to death because their owner couldn't afford feed. Officials were notified of the situation, and the remaining horses were rescued. But now who foots the bill?

According to the April 2005 Guardian, published by the American Association of Equine Practitioners (whose mission it is to "improve the health and welfare of the horse"), banning horse slaughter will create a series of unintended consequences that negatively impact the health and welfare of the horse. AAEP specifically opposes the bill H.R. 503, which bans horse slaughter. Many others who are educated in this matter oppose the ban.

I hope anyone reading this will get their facts straight before forming hasty opinions.

Finally, according to the January 2006 issue of The Horse, Megan exaggerated the number of horses slaughtered by 10,000. The figure I found even includes horses exported to Canada and Mexico for slaughter. I hope she sticks to opinions, because I wouldn't want her writing my news.

Lack of Collegian coverage insults Kansas State College Bowl Club

Editor,

Recently there was an academic competition between 11 schools hosted here at K-State. It was the 2005-06 College Bowl Regional Championship Tournament for Region 11. K-State itself competed against the likes of Washington University-St. Louis and Truman State University. We placed third, beating KU and numerous other schools.

I find the lack of coverage by the Collegian very disturbing. My team did very well, and no coverage or acknowledgment by the Collegian is an insult to my team and the Kansas State College Bowl Club.

I hope the Collegian will cover the Kansas State College Bowl Club in its future endeavors.

Texas will face Kansas in title game

CEDRIQUE FLEMMING

I finally can breathe a sigh of relief after months of waiting.

The NCAA Tournament is right around the corner, and that means only one thing – March Madness is here.

The bracket consists of the 65 best men's basketball teams from all around the country, and it provides college students, like myself, a month to sit and enjoy good, quality basketball.

Before the games begin, we have to find out what the bracket will look like.

I cannot wait to get my bracket printed so I can start filling it out, but as of now, I am more excited about a game starting five hours before the beginning of Selection Sunday.

The Texas Longhorns will take on the Kansas Jayhawks for the Big 12 Tournament Championship and an automatic berth into the NCAA Tournament in Dallas.

Now, these might not be the two teams playing for the conference championship, because the Big 12 is so close in talent that anybody can be beat on any given day, but the top-two ranked teams in the tournament, who also shared the regular-season championship, will find a way to reach the championship game in a rematch from Feb. 25, when Texas blew out KU 80-55 in Austin, Texas.

These two teams will have similar paths to reach the Big 12 Tournament finals. Both teams have first-round byes and will face inferior opponents in the second round.

Texas will have an easy first game against K-State, who will struggle against Texas Tech in the opening round today, but find a way to win.

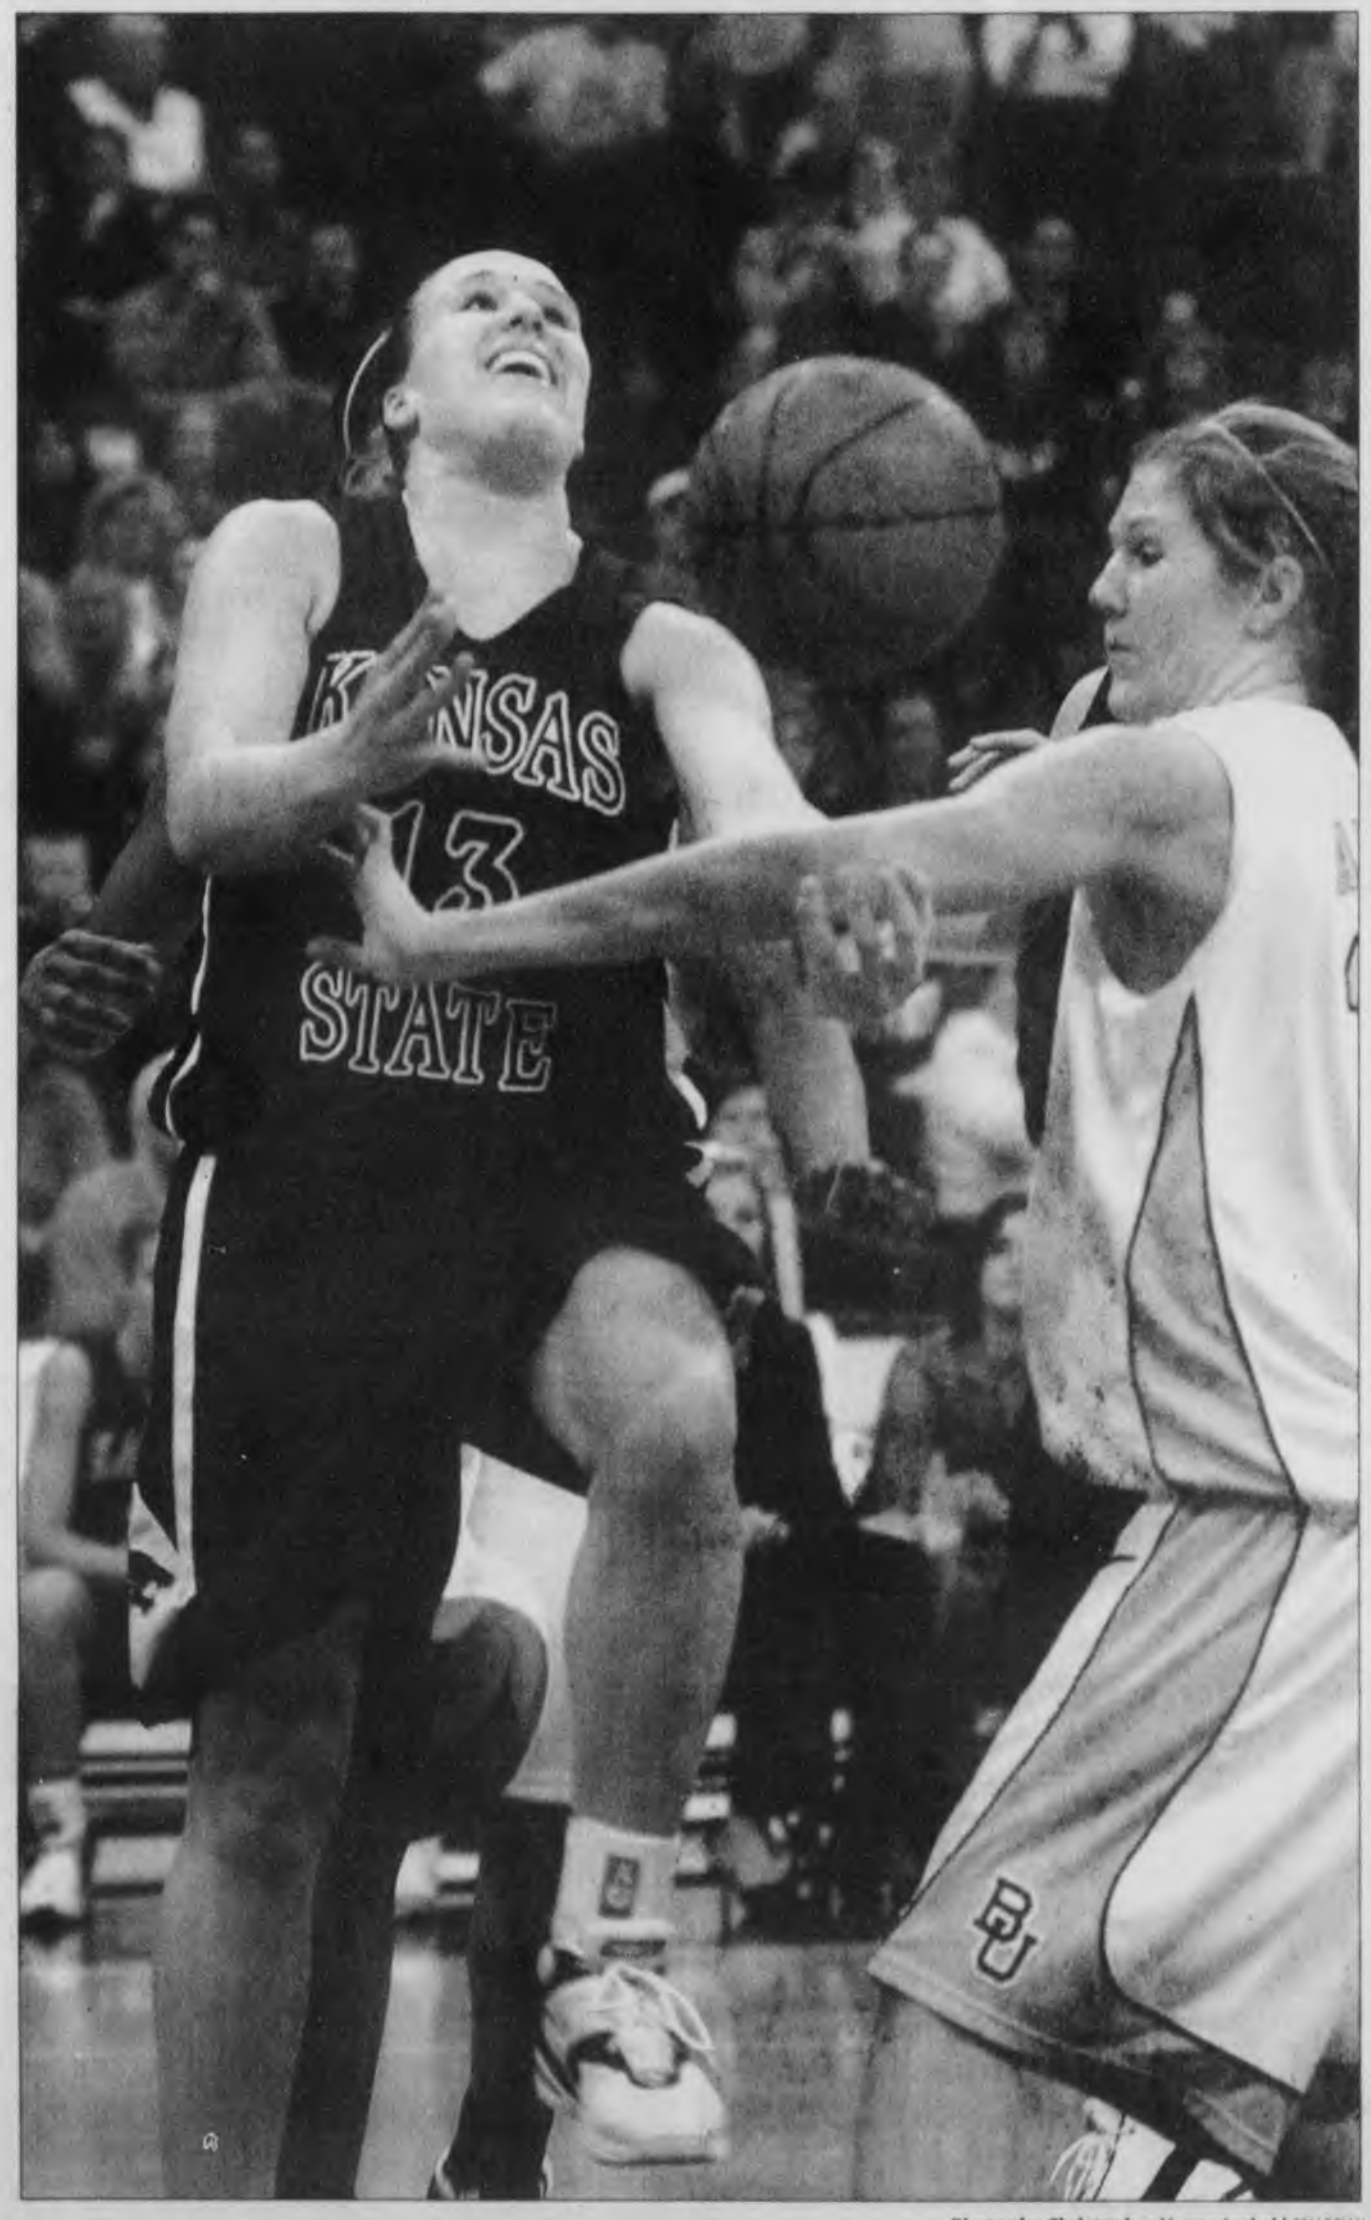
KU also will face an inferior opponent in its first game against Oklahoma State, who will take down Iowa State in the Cowboys' first round matchup today.

Both teams will cruise through their first games and move on to take on scary opponents in the semifinals.

Kansas will face Oklahoma – who already lost once to the Jayhawks on Feb. 5, 59-58 – in the first semifinal game. This game will feature the Sooners, with their veteran leadership in seniors Kevin Bookout and Taj Gray, while the Jayhawks start two sophomores and three freshmen. Look for KU freshman Brandon Rush to have a stellar game against the Sooners to propel the Jayhawks into the finals.

Texas will face a dangerous Texas A&M team, who is riding a seven-game win streak, including the last regular-season game in which the Aggies upset the Longhorns 46-43 in College Station, Texas.

I am worried about this game, because Texas A&M has the talent to upset the Longhorns again; but this time the two Texas stars, junior P.J. Tucker and sophomore LaMarcus Aldridge, will shut down the Aggies' tandem of junior Acie Law IV and sophomore Joseph Jones.



As for the winner of the championship game, I like the Longhorns. KU is a better team than the one that Texas blew out earlier this season, and the Longhorns sometimes don't bring their A-game.

The Longhorns will take down the Jayhawks in a thriller because KU does not have enough experience to win a game of this magnitude, and Texas has too much experience to let this one slip away.

Baylor beats Wildcats as Young becomes Big 12's top scorer

DALLAS – The K-State Wildcats nearly ended the Baylor Bears' chances of repeating as Big 12 Conference Tournament champions but fell short as the Bears came away with a 79-74 victory in overtime Wednesday in Reunion Arena.

Baylor's Sophia Young led the No. 2-seeded Bears (23-5) to their sixth-consecutive victory with a game-high 35 points and also became the Big 12's all-time leading scorer (2,366 points), surpassing former K-State great Kendra Wecker.

Coach Deb Patterson said Young was the difference in the game.

"I thought it was just a great Big 12 Tournament basketball game," Patterson said. "Two teams really battling possession-by-possession, and obviously Sophia Young

K-State suffers 4th overtime loss of season

By Matt Gorney

DALLAS – K-State played three overtime games during the season, and all three were in regular-season Big 12 Conference play.

The problem is, K-State lost all three games. Twice the Wildcats lost by only one point, and once they lost by two.

Wednesday night, in the second round of the Big 12 Tournament, K-State's game against defending national champion Baylor fell into overtime and, once again, the Cats couldn't come through in the extra five minutes.

With 27 seconds remaining in regulation, sophomore Kimberly Dietz hit a 3-pointer to tie the game at 66.

"It was just pure excitement," Dietz said. "I knew we had to get down to the other end and make a stop, and we did, and that was just so exciting. I got, I think, a little bit lucky, but it went in so that's all that matters."

At the other end of the court with 16 seconds left, Baylor's Angela Tisdale missed a jump shot allowing the Cats a last-second shot attempt.

Dietz again took the shot.

"It almost went in, and that's all I could do, try my hardest, try to get that ball in the hole," she said.

Junior Claire Coggins, who was injured during a rebound attempt a few minutes earlier, watched Dietz's shot from the sideline.

"Dietz hit a really big three to tie us up, and then we got a really good look there at the end, and we couldn't convert," Coggins said.

In overtime, K-State fell behind by as many as seven points due to Big 12 Player of the Year, Sophia Young, who scored six points in less than two minutes.

Senior Jessica McFarland played her final Big 12 game Wednesday night. She finished her conference career with 15 points and five rebounds for the game.

"Baylor's a top-10 team, and nobody expected us to play with them," McFarland said. "We fought our hearts out there tonight and left it all on the court.

"I'm just hopeful we get another chance to play in the postseason."

CFB| Alleged victim in Naval rape testifies

WASHINGTON — A midshipman who says she was raped by the Naval Academy's starting quarterback, Lamar Owens, testified Wednesday that with her help academy investigators secretly taped an apparent admission of the assault.

Owens

The woman, who has not been publicly identified, said she called Owens on the phone, and an investigator listened as he told her he felt distraught about what he had done and considered killing himself.

The alleged victim testified the assault occurred after she had been out drinking at an Annapolis bar with friends.

She said she was examined for rape on Jan. 31 and reported the attack to criminal investigators on Feb. 6. The taped conversation occurred shortly after.

Under cross-examination, the woman acknowledged she was very drunk on the night of the assault and that her memory of events was spotty. When defense attorney Wroble asked her if it was possible that she had consented to sex, she answered, "I suppose."

Owens' lawyer, Steven F. Wroble, has predicted that his client will be cleared by a military court.

Arctic Monkeys' album is fun to listen to, but not an instant classic

"Whatever People Say I Am, That's What I'm Not"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

You will excuse me if I was a little skeptical on first listen of "Whatever People Say I Am, That's What I'm Not," the debut album from England's Arctic Monkeys.

This may be hyperbolic, but hyperbole does not even begin to explain the hype-storm that has surrounded this debut. British music magazine New Music Express gave the Arctic Monkeys' album its highest score, 10 out of 10.

Fans of the band made the album the fastest-selling debut ever. During the first week of its release in Britain, it sold 118,501 copies – more than the rest of the Top 20 combined.

The Monkeys were quickly declared our generation's "Most Important Band."

Whenever I read such salivating in a review, there is always something in my mind that immediately puts on the brakes. It is hard to believe a lot of the hype the music press slathers on "The Next Big Thing," because the past is littered with too many disappointments – I still have flashbacks to the letdown of bands such as The Vines.

The author of the review even deftly dropped the names of every great British band from The Beatles to The Sex Pistols when describing the Monkeys' sound. Others have declared these boys as heirs to The Clash's legacy.

I wonder if these magazine writers have heard the same album that I have. I would say a closer description of the Arctic Monkeys' sound is The Strokes or The Libertines, filtered through a cheesecloth of Franz Ferdinand. It is a skuzzy garage-rock, built on angular riffs with a distinctly British sound and a steady, danceable back beat.

But while The Strokes have the style and the swagger, The Libertines have the druggy lifestyle and the turbulent genius, and Franz Ferdinand has the sexiness and the sense of history, the Arctic Monkeys seem content to mash their various influences together with no real sense of the past.

They are in it for the quick hits of the cigarettes and the fast hook-ups at the local pubs.

The four boys in the Arctic Monkeys are simply regular blokes playing music to which other regular blokes and their mates can drink and dance, fight and drink some more.

Perhaps the purest distillation of their sound is captured in the first single, "I Bet You Look Good On the Dancefloor." The song is a messy three-minute burst of bouncy guitar riffs and punk-rock energy peppered with hazy call-and-response vocals.

The real treat is the words of Alex Turner. Turner's sharp wit and keen eye, mixed with his unmistakably British delivery, is what helps separate Arctic Monkeys from all the other bands that churn out this usually emotionless, run-of-the-mill post-punk sound.

For example, "Dancefloor" is the story of a cat-and-mouse game between Turner and a sexy bird standing across the bar. It perfectly captures the nervous energy present between two people flirting and making eyes at one another.

The majority of "Whatever People Say I Am" fails to recapture the perfection of "Dancefloor," but I cannot discount these boys for trying.

"Still Take You Home" is an Elvis Costello-esque bit of punk fury. Turner really shines as he describes a "tarted-up" girl who has all the guys in the club eating out of her hand. Turner chides her for her apparent vapidness and not being able to see through her fake tan; the real treat is the chorus, in which Turner simply declares, "But I'd still take you home."

Turner truly reflects the sour grapes thoughts of every average-looking bar-goer who spots the hot girl every guy is tripping over to take home; our thoughts might be awash in spiteful jealousy, but if we had the chance, we'd still be more than eager to take her home.

Other highlights are "When the Sun Goes Down," which tells the story of Turner's run-ins with lonely prostitutes, and "Riot Van," which shows the Arctic Monkeys can turn down the tempo without losing their emotional urgency and quick wit.

Ultimately, the Arctic Monkeys' debut album has grown on me. It definitely is not worthy of the hype it has received, but it is a truly fun, catchy and life-affirming album.

"Whatever People Say I Am, That's What I'm Not" is a promising start for a band that very well could produce a classic album among the ranks of Oasis' "What's the Story Morning Glory," Blur's "Parklife" or Pulp's "Common People."

I certainly am not holding my breath for that album – history has proven too many promising upstarts to be talentless hacks – but you'll excuse me if I secretly hope these boys can pull it off.

The Arctic Monkeys are one of the most hyped-up bands in recent years. From left: Jamie Cook, guitar; Alex Turner, vocals and guitar; Matt Helders, drums, and Andy Nicholson, bass. The band will appear on Saturday Night Live this Saturday, and will begin their sold-out tour March 13 in San Francisco.

Monkey bread makes an excellent breakfast dish choice

ANNETTE LAWLESS

For those looking for a dessert that will dazzle your taste buds and your pocketbook, consider using this monkey bread recipe, also known as pull-apart or bubble bread.

Ever since I was little, this recipe has been a favorite of mine.

My mother used to spend two days making the dessert, but I've simplified the process, altering the types of dough my family uses.

The size of the dessert is ideal for you and a few friends.

And the best part is, if you don't like it, it will cost you no more than $1.

This monkey bread recipe has a great mix of caramel and bread pieces, keeping it lightly rich and even slightly addicting.

I recommend serving it for breakfast, as my mother did. The aroma is a great scent to wake up to in the morning.

Though leftovers are unlikely, the dessert can be stored in an air-tight container for a few days. Microwave for 20 seconds on a low setting before serving.

Monkey Bread

Time
Preparation: 10 minutes
Baking time: 25 minutes
Ready in: About 25 minutes

Ingredients
1 (12 oz.) package of biscuit dough
3 teaspoons ground cinnamon
1/2 cup margarine
1/2 cup and 2 tablespoons granulated sugar, separated
3/4 cup brown sugar, packed
1/2 cup pecans, chopped (optional)

Cooking instructions

Preheat oven to 350 degrees Fahrenheit. Grease one 8.5"x4"x2.75" loaf baking pan.

In a small saucepan, melt the margarine with the brown sugar and two tablespoons of granulated sugar over medium heat. Boil for one minute, stirring occasionally. Pour caramelized mixture into baking pan.

In a medium bowl, mix 1/2 cup of granulated sugar and cinnamon together. Cut biscuits in half. Coat biscuits in sugar-cinnamon mixture.

Arrange pieces in the bottom of the prepared pan. While arranging these pieces in the pan, sprinkle layers of pecans throughout to give the soft bread crunchy contrasts.

Continue until all biscuits are coated and placed in pan.

Bake at 350 degrees Fahrenheit for 25 minutes or until golden on top. Let bread cool in pan for six minutes, then flip upside down onto a plate. The caramel will ooze over the bread.

Change it up

- Those wanting a lower-calorie version should reduce the amount of margarine from 1/2 to 1/3 cup for caramel mixture. I also recommend reducing the brown sugar from 3/4 cup to 2/3 cup, omitting sugar from caramel mixture, to using reduced-fat margarine and omitting pecans.
- For a more moist bread, try using a can of buttermilk biscuits. My mother also coats her biscuits in melted margarine before dipping in cinnamon-sugar mixture.
- Give the bread your own personal pizzazz. Feel free to add an extra teaspoon of cinnamon, other nuts or even raisins.
- More traditional monkey bread recipes use frozen bread roll dough. My mom uses Rhodes International frozen rolls. If you use this dough instead of biscuits, defrost about seven rolls and cut them into quarters. Now, just substitute this dough for biscuit dough in the recipe. Be sure to dip this dough in margarine, though, before you sift through cinnamon-sugar mix.

Teri Hatcher reveals sex abuse from childhood

LOS ANGELES — "Desperate Housewives" star Teri Hatcher revealed on Tuesday that she was sexually abused by an uncle as a child but kept it secret until he was arrested years later for molesting a girl who ultimately committed suicide.

In an interview appearing in Vanity Fair magazine, Hatcher said she told prosecutors about her abuse in 2002 because she was haunted by thoughts of the 14-year-old girl who shot herself and feared that her uncle might escape conviction.

"I was just blown over by this girl's pain," the 41-year-old television star told Vanity Fair, recalling she learned about the case from newspaper clippings.

"I thought, 'Boy, that's really close to being me.' Any day of the week, I could feel that sort of pain. I haven't tried to kill myself, but I've certainly thought about it, and then I feel guilty about thinking about it, because what's so terrible about my life?" she said.

Santa Clara County Deputy District Attorney Chuck Gillingham credits Hatcher for putting her uncle, Richard Hayes Stone, who was then 64, behind bars.

Animated show created by Wayans Brothers

Call it Charlie Brown with a twist. Brothers Keenen Ivory, Shawn and Marlon Wayans, of "Scary Movie" and "In Living Color" fame, have created a series of animated children's shows, with books and toys to follow.

Its name: "Thugaboo."

The series of three specials will premiere on Nickelodeon, then air on the network's all-animation channel, Nicktoons, a network spokeswoman said Wednesday.

Inspired by the Wayans brothers' favorite childhood cartoons, "Thugaboo" follows the misadventures of nine kids growing up in the inner city.

"It's like hard meets soft," Shawn Wayans told The Associated Press. "The thug is how they dress, kind of street, but they're good kids and they make the right decisions."

Boy George picks rehab in plea bargain

Boy George, in a plea bargain deal that spared him possible jail time, agreed Wednesday to enter a drug rehabilitation program and perform community service to resolve his arrest last year on a cocaine charge.

The former pop star entered his guilty plea to third-degree false reporting of an incident in Manhattan Criminal Court. He only spoke to answer questions from Judge Anthony Ferrara with a simple "yes."

Under the deal, he will enter a drug program in England and perform five days of community service in Manhattan, N.Y.

SUV backs into Aggieville Pizza Hut

By Kelsey Childress
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A sports utility vehicle backed over a curb and smashed into the front windows of Aggieville Pizza Hut, 1121 Moro St., on Wednesday night.

"The SUV was parallel parking and hopped over the curb," Brett Schmidt, Pizza Hut employee, said. "It reversed, ran into the whole building and took off."

Pizza Hut's front door and windows, which open into the main dining room, were destroyed in the incident, which occurred at about 8:30 p.m. The windows shattered into the street and onto the tables inside.

"There was no one in the area of the windows when the accident happened," Jessica Appleby, Pizza Hut employee, said.

Most of the employees heard the SUV trying to back up and went to the front of the restaurant to see what happened.

"I was cutting a pizza, and I heard the tires squealing," said Cody Moreland, Pizza Hut employee and sophomore in hotel and restaurant management. "I thought (the SUV) would stop before backing into the window, but they didn't."

The SUV, identified by witnesses as a Dodge Durango, fled the scene shortly after the accident and later was caught by police. At press time, no information was available about whether the female driver was arrested or if alcohol was involved.

"We're still working the scene," said Sgt. Connie Miller of the Riley County Police Department. "We have no direct information (yet) as to the outcome of the accident."

The police arrived at the scene shortly after the incident, helped clean up glass and talked with the Pizza Hut manager before leaving the scene. Workers from a private company were called in to remove the excess glass left hanging from the windows and around the sidewalk.

Travis Arnold, Pizza Hut general manager, said management is unsure about the redesign of the front windows and whether the store will remain open during construction.

"Right now, we're just looking for someone to board up the windows tonight," Arnold said. "As for tomorrow, another supervisor will be here to determine what to do next."

Fossett plans attempt to set record at K-State-Salina campus next week

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State-Salina will be host to Steve Fossett's next attempt to set an aviation record.

In March 2005, Virgin Atlantic sponsored Fossett in his success at completing the first solo flight around the world and in setting the nonstop distance record a month ago. Fossett and Virgin Atlantic involved K-State-Salina students in both instances.

Next week, Fossett will attempt to set the closed-course distance record, beginning and ending in Salina.

"Virgin Atlantic usually provides the equipment and handles most details, but this time, they will not be sending people or supplies," said Pat Rinearson, senior in professional pilot, and mission control worker for the flight.

"We have to come up with our own equipment and are in the process of turning our conference room into a high-tech facility to communicate with the world."

Those involved are focusing on the flight-planning aspect of the flight, Rinearson said. This involves setting the flight plan, although they receive some assistance along the way.

"Kevin Stass, the route planning manager for Virgin Atlantic, sends us his flight plan, then we enter it into our software and make modifications," Rinearson said. "We will also be tracking the aircraft during flight, which means giving air traffic control mission control reports."

Since the plane will fly over different countries with different tracking agencies, Rinearson said they will be sending text-based messages or phone calls to give the position of the flight, as if they were the plane itself.

"Since Fossett asked K-State to have a direct involvement by leading the ground efforts, the leadership and planning has definitely been a fun and interesting aspect," Rinearson said.

Rinearson will work closely with Nancy Milleret, also a senior, and has been working with her since the first flight. There also will be three new professional pilot students helping out on the same job, Rinearson said.

K-State-Salina also will be hosting the Web site for the flight and will have eight students working as "bloggers," adding updates.

"This is a huge opportunity for K-State," Kristin Magette, coordinator of public and alumni relations, said. "The dean, Dennis Kuhlman, was approached by Steve Fossett, who said he wanted K-State critically involved.

"We've been involved in past efforts, but not in this leadership capacity."

Magette said they are trying to give students the chance to be leaders and to work close up with an international project.

"K-State-Salina was chosen not only by its past involvement, but because of our technology and aviation expertise and of Fossett's good experience with the staff and students," he said.

Magette said she believes that this is a confirmation of K-State's confidence and ability to get the job done and to do it well.

"It's fantastic, and we're thrilled to offer it," Magette said. "We thought it would be a once in a lifetime opportunity. It's not very often you get to experience that twice in a lifetime."

Manhattan man arrested on robbery counts

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Qshwane Argeme Pryor was arrested by the Riley County Police Department Tuesday on three felony counts of aggravated robbery, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the RCPD said.

The arrest resulted from warrants issued for three robberies, which occurred on Jan. 18.

The first charge is related to an aggravated robbery in which Pryor allegedly used a handgun to take property from a victim.

The second charge also involves the alleged use of a handgun to take property, and the third charge involves an alleged overt act toward the victim.

Pryor allegedly forced the victim to the floor and told her to empty her pockets while threatening her with a handgun, Quintanar said.

He was unable to complete the robbery, Quintanar said.

Pryor's bond is set at $30,000, and his preliminary status hearing will be at 1 p.m. March 21.

Pat Hook, instructor in the Division of Biology, is surrounded by plants in her office in Ackert Hall. Hook graduated from K-State with an undergraduate degree in biology, then earned a master's degree in plant physiology.

Botany instructor brings humor, personality to classes

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Botany teacher Pat Hook's office spills over with potted plants and sunshine.

As an instructor in the Division of Biology, Hook began teaching at K-State in 1970. While at the university, Hook has taught General Botany, Economic Botany and a few sections of Principles of Biology.

Hook said her interest in nature and botany came from her family history.

"The family was interested in those kind of things, 'cause Granddaddy had a peony farm, and he was always doing horticulture, grafting fruit trees and trying new stuff," Hook said. "We were always into that kind of stuff."

Growing up, Hook said she liked to press wildflowers, make insect collections and participate in Girl Scouts.

In Girl Scouts, Hook said she raised a flock of chickens just to get a badge.

"I had to get my poultry badge because no one else had one, so I had to do the chickens," she said.

Did she like it?

"Well, I got the badge," Hook said.

When Hook started college, she said she wanted to major in English, but when her parents found out, they told her she had to major in biology so she could get a job later in life.

"I didn't have any choice on that, so here I am," she said.

Hook received a biology degree from K-State with a minor in English and an option in education. Hook earned a master's degree in plant physiology from K-State, and later went to Oregon State to get a doctorate in plant pathology.

After being away at school, Hook heard news from her father that her mother had become disabled, and the family needed her to move back to help.

"My dad said he did want to retire early, and someone needed to be here," Hook said. "My dad proceeded to die a year later, and my mom lived on and on and on. She lived another 17 years."

Hook recalled details about her mother when she was staying with her, including the little black dog Hook got from the kennel to keep her mother company.

"It was a wonderful dog, but the trouble is, the dog got fat," Hook said. "Mom would eat cheese curls. She'd eat one, and give one to the dog. That dog got so fat, I had to build him steps up to the bed."

As for the future, Hook said she plans to retire next spring, which she said she is excited about.

"I just want to live a normal life, for crying out loud," Hook said. "I get here at seven. I go home at five or six, and it's just one stupid thing after another."

Jeanne Squires, senior in horticultural therapy, took Economic Botany after taking General Botany with Hook.

Squires said Hook infuses humor in the classroom.

"She brings a lot of little funny stories from her past," Squires said.

Hook also offers expertise and brings confidence to the course, Squires said, but she does little things to help her students learn more easily.

"In General Botany, she would write on the chalkboards," Squires said. "It just makes it easier to take notes."

Joann Cook, senior in political science, said she has enjoyed Hook's style of teaching in her Economic Botany class.

"Sometimes you never quite know what's going to come out of her mouth," Cook said. "She's very personal about it. She brings stuff from her cabinet or her garden. She makes it fun."

Aggieville ready for annual Road Races

By Ashleigh Williams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 28th annual St. Patrick's Day Road Races will take place Saturday in Aggieville.

The road races include a two-mile fun run at 12:30 p.m., and a 10K run at 1:15 p.m.

Both races will begin in Aggieville. The fun run will consist of one-and-a-half loops around City Park, and the 10K race will be run through campus, north of the fire station and will end in Aggieville.

Pat Melgares, race director, said he encourages people to sign up for the races for exercise and fun.

"Running is a lifetime fitness activity, but it is also a heck of a lot of fun," Melgares said. "I really feel this is a treasured Manhattan and Aggieville tradition."

For more information

Brochures are available in Aggieville businesses, Peters Recreation Complex and Ahearn Field House with information on how to sign up for the races.

Melgares said there are 923 runners and an estimated 6,000 spectators for this year's races, which are open to people of all ages. He said the race brings in people from outside towns, and this benefits the Manhattan community.

"There is certainly a lot of community spirit involved with so many spectators, but it also helps economically with so many people out spending money and having a good time," Melgares said.

Sheridan Larson, junior in modern language education, said she will participate in the 10K race this year.

"I have family coming from southeast Kansas for the race," she said. "My aunt and uncle are coming from southeast Kansas to race with me, and my parents and sister are coming up to watch."

Larson said she enjoys being involved in the 10K, since many races in Manhattan are 5K, and Larson enjoys running the longer races.

"I love this race because it offers a 10K course. Many races around Manhattan are only a 5K and leave much to be desired," Larson said. "I like feeling that I actually pushed myself, instead of as though I was just warming up."

Walk Kansas attracts residents of all ages

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Walk Kansas, an eight-week program that encourages teams of six to collectively walk 423 miles, (the distance it would take to walk across Kansas), begins March 12.

This is the fifth year the program has been statewide, but the program has been in Riley County since 1991, Walk Kansas Coordinator Sharolyn Jackson said.

"A local group of us got together and decided this is something people really needed," said Jackson, Riley County Extension Agent for Kansas Nutrition Council. "It has been changed and expanded to a multi-county effort, and I feel it's bigger and better now than in those early years."

Expansions include the addition of local celebrity walkers. Kansas legislators, educators, physicians and K-State athletes will make appearances at Walk Kansas events.

"It is good to involve people in the community who folks look up to," Jackson said. "And seeing them do things that support a healthy lifestyle is motivational for people."

The program also helps people manage and prevent chronic illnesses, Jackson said.

"There are a lot of positive things that come from just a little physical activity each day," she said.

Manhattan resident William Carson said the Walk Kansas program helped him manage his diabetes.

"It really makes me aware of how many fruits and vegetables I eat, which is very important," Carson said. "And the program has helped me keep my blood sugar levels under control."

Geraldine Ince, retired Manhattan resident, has been with the program since it started in 1991 and said she joined to create a healthier lifestyle.

"The program made me aware that I still need to do exercising, and sometimes you have the tendency to forget, but with this program you want to get your mileage in to help your team," Ince said. "And getting out and being with people helped me get a better attitude about myself."

Susan Peterson, assistant director of the Riley County Seniors' Service Center, said the center has collaborated with the Walk Kansas program for three years and has 17 older adults participating.

"I think walking is one of the best forms of exercise that older adults can do, so it's a very easy way for them to participate in the program," Peterson said.

Walk Kansas attracts not only older adults, but younger Kansas residents as well. Tanner Shepard, a seventh-grader at Susan B. Anthony Middle School, said he joined Walk Kansas to help his mother complete her team of six walkers.

"I thought it was fun," Shepard said. "I really liked the activities, like basketball and walking with my mom."

Union takes precautions to ensure food safety

Internal, external auditors monitor food preparation

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stepping into the K-State Student Union during the lunchtime rush reveals a chaotic scene: the rising hum of voices, packed tables, backpacks strewn about and the constant smell of food.

"I eat at the Union about once a week, and I think it's a pretty clean place to eat," Andrea Pardo, sophomore in architecture, said. "We don't see what goes on inside; we're all just hungry and want food. From what I see, though, it stays pretty clean."

Students depend daily on the Union to provide them with quick food in a clean, friendly setting.

Many procedures are in place to ensure that standard is upheld.

Tina Griffin, Union food service director, said the Union takes the appropriate steps to ensure food safety.

"The food provided at the Union is actually a contracted food service, known as Chartwells, and they run the service for the Union, but we function as one," Griffin said. "We have combined safety standards and programs that take place monthly."

One of the programs is known as CHAT, which stands for "Communication, Help and Training," Griffin said.

This monthly program has Union employees gather to talk about issues concerning both employees and food safety.

Some of these issues have included preventing injuries, sanitation, appropriately using knives, using food safety tools like thermometers and having a passion for quality, she said.

Griffin said the Union also has a safety committee and a program called "I Got Spotted," which is a safety awareness program among associates.

Each year, Chartwells hires an auditing company called Steritech, a quality assurance program for food safety.

This company looks at things like purchasing and receiving, preparation and production and cleaning and sanitizing, she said.

Other precautions include the campus food service, which inspects monthly, and the city of Manhattan, which inspects once a year.

"No major problems have occurred in the Union that I know of," Griffin said.

"If there were, it would be brought to my attention and we would, of course, comply and fix the problem. This is why we look at food safety, to prevent and to be on top."

However, Chartwells is not affiliated with all Union food programs, some are run independently like the Cat's Den and Subway.

Panda Express is partnered with Chartwells but has its own manager and separate contract.

"We are very particular and have many procedural barriers in place to protect food," Adam Setter, Panda Express manager, said.

"We have to be very particular on rice cooling, which has to be cooked quickly, cooled down, then reheated in a short period of time. It's delicate, and we watch very closely and are always coming up with new procedures."

The Campus Health Inspector also visits Panda Express, which has it's own internal auditor, Setter said.

"It can actually be done over the phone – it's that easy now – because we have had very few problems," he said.

One procedure involves marinating meat in different places and times than vegetables to prevent contamination, Setter said.

"All of our audits have been good; only small things have been wrong," he said.

Emily Pruett, junior in special education and Subway manager, adds condiments to a sandwich. Subway's sanitation guidelines included washing their hands before applying plastic gloves that should be changed at least every six sandwiches, as well as keeping the food covered so it doesn't spoil.

Controversy over cartoon stirs discussion in classes

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Following worldwide controversy regarding the satirical cartoons depicting the Prophet Muhammad that appeared in a Danish newspaper, some political science professors at K-State have discussed the issue in their classes.

"I try and use every chance I can to take things out of the news," said Craig Stapley, visiting assistant professor of political science.

"I actually require that my students read something out of the New York Times every day – I actually use news, and my students used that event in class discussions."

Stapley said the class used the event as an opportunity to discuss Islamic beliefs, as well as issues regarding freedom of speech.

Stephen Long, assistant professor of political science, said he didn't discuss the issue specifically, but it was addressed by a guest lecturer last week.

"John Hofmeister, president of Shell Oil, talked about how he thought that one of the most important things that people misunderstand about the Middle East is that it's this monolithic, one-culture region of the world," Long said. "His point about that is relevant because people are reacting to these protests as if the entire Middle East feels that way. Even within the Muslim communities in the Middle East, there's a huge variety of how they feel about this issue."

Michael Suleiman, distinguished professor of political science and instructor of the topics of Islam and the West class, said he took the opportunity in his class to try to address the issue in a more in-depth manner.

"We covered many different angles – it's a complex issue," Suleiman said. "There are several dimensions to it."

Suleiman said the issue is much more complex than it has been presented by the superficial coverage of media around the world, and negative stereotypes have been used both by media in the west and in Muslim countries.

He also said he tried to use the discussion of the issue to give his students a better understanding of what he said is something that requires a lot of time to discuss fully.

"I always try to present what I think are different sides of the issue, and that every student gets it is my hope," Suleiman said.

Women sue U.S. Marine Corps over alleged recruiter rapes

By Kim Curtis
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO – Two women who claim two former U.S. Marine Corps sergeants raped them in a recruiting office sued the military Wednesday.

The lawsuit names the Navy and the Marine Corps, which is under Navy jurisdiction, and the two recruiters as defendants. It seeks unspecified damages and an injunction requiring the military to train and supervise recruiters, among other things.

The women were in high school when the alleged rapes occurred, according to the lawsuit. The recruiters, Joseph Dunzweiler and Brian Fukushima, were fined and demoted last year after court-martial proceedings but were acquitted of the most serious charges.

The plaintiffs sued under the names Jane Doe and Mary Roe to protect their privacy.

Doe believed Dunzweiler would prevent her from joining the Marines if she didn't have sex with him, according to the lawsuit. She said she contracted a sexually transmitted disease during their encounter in the Ukiah recruiting office.

Roe said Fukushima raped her during a sleepover at the office, according to court documents. She said she was drunk and could not resist his advances.

Dunzweiler was acquitted of charges he coerced Doe into having sex with him. He was convicted of five lesser charges, including having sex with another potential recruit, providing alcohol to recruits, lying to Marine investigators and asking others to lie for him. His rank was reduced from staff sergeant to corporal and he was fined $1,300.

Fukushima was convicted of sexual misconduct, adultery and asking a recruit to lie to investigators. He was demoted from sergeant to corporal and received a $1,000 fine.

K-State, Afghanistan's Kabul University to develop partnership

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A delegation of K-State faculty members is working to establish an ongoing partnership with Kabul University in Afghanistan.

K-State's partnership with Kabul University would include scholarships and fellowships for student and faculty exchange programs, curriculum development and supplies like textbooks and lab equipment.

Chris Ross, professor of anatomy and physiology for the College of Veterinary Medicine, is a member of the delegation. He said Kabul University needs assistance, both with academics and materials.

One goal of the partnership is to establish long-distance education courses between the schools, a goal Ross said would be complicated by frequent electricity loss in Afghanistan.

"Afghanistan has been at war for the last 25 years," he said. "The college is lacking a lot of basic things that we take for granted."

Ross said the College of Veterinary Medicine began its relationship with Kabul University several years ago, when it donated a variety of medical journals and textbooks to the war-torn university.

He said K-State's current effort aimed at improving the education and expertise of the Kabul professors.

"The state of the faculty is not capable of graduating a veterinarian or anything else," he said. "The university here feels that it can establish a very strong cooperative and upgrade the quality of Kabul's graduates."

Yar Ebadi, dean of the College of Business Administration, first presented the idea to form a partnership with Kabul University.

Ebadi, a native of Afghanistan and a graduate and former faculty member of Kabul University, said he traveled to Afghanistan last year for the first time in 24 years and saw the destruction of his formerly prestigious alma mater.

"The university's needs are great in every area," he said. "Buildings have been destroyed. Books have been burned. Lab equipment is gone. Perhaps most significant, women have been denied the opportunity to learn."

Upon his return, Ebadi said he talked to Vice Provost Elizabeth Unger and President Jon Wefald about the state of Kabul University, and the delegation was formed soon after.

The 11-member team recently returned from a trip to Washington, D.C., during which members met with agencies – including the World Bank and the Department of State – to build support for the project.

"We discussed how (Kabul) university couldn't do all of this without some aid," he said. "Our delegation went to Washington, D.C., to seek out the potential for financial support for this partnership."

The delegation will next travel to Afghanistan in April, a trip encouraged by U.S. and Afghani ambassadors to further evaluate the needs of Kabul University and its faculty.

Amber Johnson, sophomore in pre-professional secondary education, said she supports the developing partnership between K-State and Kabul.

"I'm a person who values education in any way, shape or form," she said.

Johnson said she thinks an exchange program of students and faculty members would benefit to K-State students.

"It would expand our world view," she said. "We have international professors here already, but the faculty there is in the midst of a war. Even if a professor is just teaching a math class, we could still get to know both our differences and similarities."

Campus squirrel population expected to increase

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the first mating season coming to an end, the squirrel population will increase in six or seven weeks. This means, if students haven't protected their houses from small animals already, now is a good time to start, James Carpenter, professor of clinical sciences, said.

"Squirrels are a rodent, so, as such, they can be pretty elusive and get into small openings," Carpenter said. "I don't think there is any secret, but people have to squirrel-proof their house if they the pest control official in areas were squirrels can get in."

The easiest way to keep them out is to place a mesh screen over any openings that a squirrel might use to get in the home, Carpenter said. This also is important in keeping other wildlife out, he said.

Once inside the house, squirrels can damage insulation and wiring, said Charlie Lee, wildlife specialist with K-State Research and Extension.

It is easier to keep the squirrels out of a house than to remove them once they are inside, he said. If squirrels already in the house, the best way to get them out is to leave a door or window open.

For people who rent or are unable to get the squirrels out of their house on their own, having someone take care of it for them might pose a problem.

"We called our landlord, and they sent somebody up there," Josh Debes, senior in mechanical engineering, said. "They couldn't find the access to the attic."

Debes said he thinks the pest control official had problems finding the squirrels because he only hears them when it gets cold outside.

"We just deal with them, because we don't notice unless they're making noise," Debes said.

If nothing else works, Lee said students should be careful about trying to exterminate squirrels. Hunting or trapping fox or gray squirrels only is allowed between June 1 and Dec. 31, in accordance with local ordinances. However, a situation in which the squirrel causes damage might be an exception, he said.

"They must make reasonable attempts to control the animal before they try to kill," Lee said.

Although this mating season is nearly over, the second one is approaching between July and August, Carpenter said.

This will offer students another chance to observe the animals.

The squirrels will chase one another year-round over territory, but mating season offers a different interaction, said Jack Cully, adjunct associate professor in biology.

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

The spring mating season is nearly over for squirrels, but with the second approaching at the end of the summer, local officials are encouraging homeowners to take proper precautions.

"It's not very much different, but if you watch, you can sort of tell what's going on," he said.

Even though the squirrels have the potential to do damage, Cully said he thinks it's nice being able to see them around.

"Sometimes when you watch them you feel like you're watching people," he said. "They have a lot of character. They're a lot fun to pay attention to."

Scholarship houses focus on academics, sense of community

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Scholarship houses offer students a living environment different than what is available on or off campus.

Three scholarship houses at K-State are registered with the Office of Student Activities and Services: Alpha of Clovia, Smith Scholarship House and Smurthwaite Scholarship Leadership House.

Scholarship houses emphasize academics and look at community involvement and leadership skills when choosing new members and reviewing current members.

Alecia Stuchlik, sophomore in anthropology and resident of Smurthwaite, said a 2.8 GPA is required to live in the house, but other factors are considered.

"We look at how involved women have been, and we also look at their leadership skills," she said.

All three houses feature a cooperative living arrangement in which students share duties of meal preparation, cleaning and yard maintenance.

At Alpha of Clovia, responsibilities are divided by class standing.

Freshmen do four hours of chores per week, while seniors only do one hour, because of their busier schedules.

Heather Gartrell, sophomore in family and consumer science education and president of Alpha of Clovia, said she enjoys fulfilling her responsibilities around the house.

"I like the sense of ownership that comes with being active in the upkeep of the house," she said. "You're not just living here. You're making it run."

At Smith Scholarship House, residents divide chores based on personal preference and availability between classes.

Residents of Smurthwaite are required to do three hours of chores and one hour of phone duty per week.

Scholarship houses also are an economically-friendly alternative to residence halls and greek organizations, Stuchlik said.

She said living at Smurthwaite this year was $800 cheaper than living in a residence hall and will likely be $1,000 cheaper next school year.

Gartrell said Alpha of Clovia was established by a group of women who had all participated in 4-H, and wanted to maintain the friendship they shared. She said this sense of community still exists today.

"Your friends are all right here," she said. "We really are a sisterhood."

Ryan Marshall, sophomore in industrial engineering, said the wide variety of residents' majors and backgrounds in the Smith community offered great connections.

"You can network through so many people," he said. "Our members are from all around Kansas, and a few are from out of state. Everybody brings something to the table."

Students interested in the scholarship houses can visit www.consider.k-state.edu/housing/otherhousing.htm.

50-year-old freshman organizes Medicare meeting

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

George Hodges, freshman in social sciences, has been in many positions before coming to K-State.

After serving in the Air Force, Hodges worked a sideline job in construction, as an aircraft mechanic for the McDonnell Douglas Corp. and as a chef and kitchen manager in Jacksonville Beach, Fla.

Now he attends K-State as a 50-year-old freshman, and has organized a town hall meeting on the new Medicare prescription drug plan for his debate and advocacy class.

The Medicare prescription plan that drew his attention is Medicare Plan D, also known as the prescription drug bill.

Hodges said he watches the news extensively and noticed problems with people in the Medicare Plan D program understanding what the plan involves.

"Folks were not understanding what their requirements were," Hodges said.

He talked to Justin Green, instructor in the Department of Speech, Communication, Theater and Dance, and got permission for the assignment on public debate to hold a town hall seminar.

Green also is the instructor for the Debate and Advocacy class.

Hodges said he then contacted Jami Ramsey, director of the Riley County Senior Services Center, and persuaded her to co-sponsor the event.

"Everybody I've talked to is really into this," Hodges said.

The meeting, scheduled for 6 p.m. March 16, is highly anticipated at the senior center, Hodges said.

Ramsey said the anticipation for the meeting at the senior center is because they are frustrated with Plan D.

"They are looking forward to venting," she said.

The people Ramsey has spoken to want to share their concerns, and speak with their representatives who are in a position to do something about their problems, she said.

Local businesses donated funds to provide refreshments at the meeting.

"We helped underwrite it," said Jeff Chapman, director of marketing and public relations for Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community, 2121 Meadowlark Road.

Copy Kats, 210 N. Fourth St,. Ste. B., donated 500 flyers about the meeting, which Hodges handed out around Manhattan.

Representatives from the offices of Gov. Kathleen Sebelius, U.S. Sens. Pat Roberts and Sam Brownback, and U.S. Rep. Jim Ryun are expected to attend, Hodges said.

There will also be representatives from the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs – Eastern Kansas Region, the American Association of Retired Persons of Kansas, the American Legion, and the state commander for the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Hodges said.

This event has been in the planning stages for nearly two months, and the K-State Debate Team, which Hodges is a member of, as well as students from the Debate and Advocacy class will be in attendance, Hodges said.

WOMEN | K-State coach optimistic Wildcats will play in postseason

dominated the basketball game in the paint. I thought tonight she was tremendous and was the difference-maker in this basketball game."

No. 7-seed K-State (19-10) stayed close throughout the game, trailing by just three points, 39-36, at the end of the first half and eventually tied the game at 66-66 with 15 seconds left, sending it into overtime.

Sophomore Kimberly Dietz, who tied the game at 66-66 with a desperation three-point shot, had a chance to win the game for the Wildcats as time expired, but her 12-foot shot hit the rim and bounced out.

"It was just kind of hard to think of what to do when time was running down," said Dietz, who led the team in scoring with 19 points. "I just tried to think fast and get the best shot I could. I think it was a good look, but it just rolled out, and that's the way it went."

In overtime, Young and Chameka Scott scored the first 11 points for the Bears and finished off the Wildcats to advance the Bears to the semifinals.

"I compliment Kansas State because I thought they played as hard as they could play," Baylor Coach Kim Mulkey-Robertson said.

Senior Jessica McFarland, who finished with 15 points, said the Wildcats did everything they could to stop Young and pull off the upset.

"The game was definitely very physical," McFarland said. "Sophia had 35 points, but they weren't easy points. We were banging as hard as we could, and we put everything out there, and it was just a great game. They just ended with four more points."

The Wildcats now will look to the NCAA Tournament or the Women's National Invitational Tournament with hopes of continuing their 2005-06 season.

Patterson said she is optimistic the Wildcats will play beyond the Big 12 Tournament.

"If they (the NCAA selection committee) watched that game, I think they put us in without the blink of an eye," Patterson said. "If we are not admitted to the NCAA Tournament, we will be ecstatic about the opportunity to be in the WNIT. I think this is a basketball team that wants to continue to play."

MADDY | President-elect planning to declare dual major

"Fightin' For" by Cross Canadian Ragweed sounded throughout Longhorn's.

"Katie and I knew what we were fighting for," Lucas said. "We're excited about how many people decided to follow us in that direction."

Lucas said he will declare a dual major so he can stay at K-State for another semester after graduating this spring. He said agricultural economics probably will be his other major.

Katie, junior in animal science and industry, watched her brother dance to the music while she smiled and hugged supporters.

"It's not here yet," Katie said about the realization of the win. "It's kind of a collaboration of all the emotions we've been through this whole time."

Before the results were announced, she sat at a table doing homework. She said she would go to her 6 p.m. class as soon as interviews and congratulations were over.

Both said the week since the primary elections was exhausting, but the preparation was worth it.

"I'm completely frayed," Lucas said about the past few days. "I'm very ready for this experience to be over. It's a great experience, but (I'm) very ready for it to end."

He said winning the election was overwhelming.

"It hasn't sunk in yet," he said. "Not even close, and I'm happy for my sister."

The duo said their parents and other family members couldn't make the three-and-a-half-hour trip from Norton, Kan., to attend the watch party.

Lucas said the elections helped him and Katie learn about each other's drive and passion for K-State.

"If anything, it's made us learn more about each other," he said. "We've learned a lot about each other's work ethic, and I think we've both been happy to know that."

student body president and vice president with 3,019 votes over King and Besler's 2,585 votes.

A once-quiet Longhorns was transformed into dancing and cheers.

"I'm shocked, and I can't believe the amount of support we got," Lucas Maddy said.

The Maddys were only 10 votes behind King and Besler in last week's primary election, with 1,034 votes.

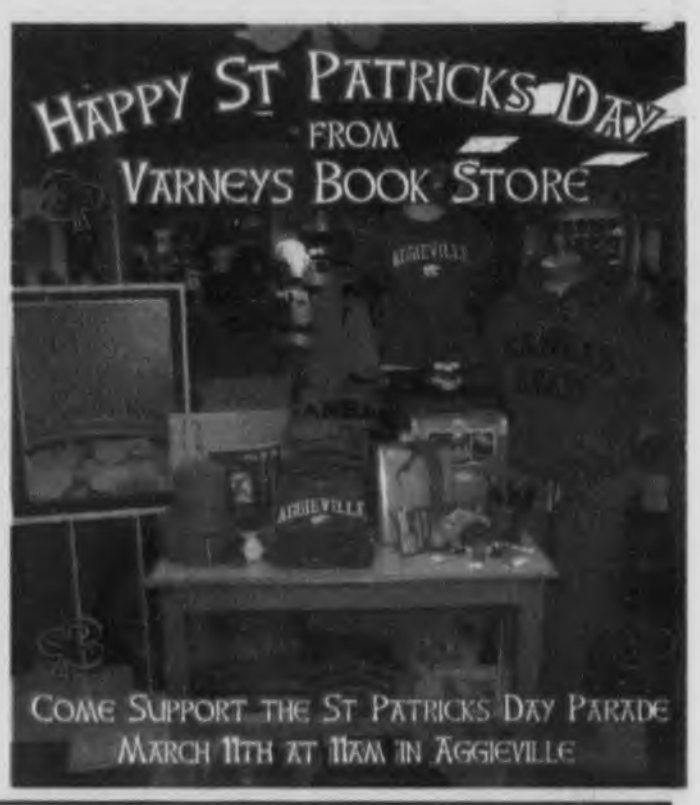
The last time a candidate pair lost the primary election but won the general election was in 2001. Former student body president and vice president Kyle Barker and Brandon Kauffman lost the general election with 906 votes but won the re-election with 1,481 votes.

In 2002, former student body president and vice president Zac Cook and Todd Kohman lost both the primary election and general election but won the re-election with 1,837 votes after the results were contested.

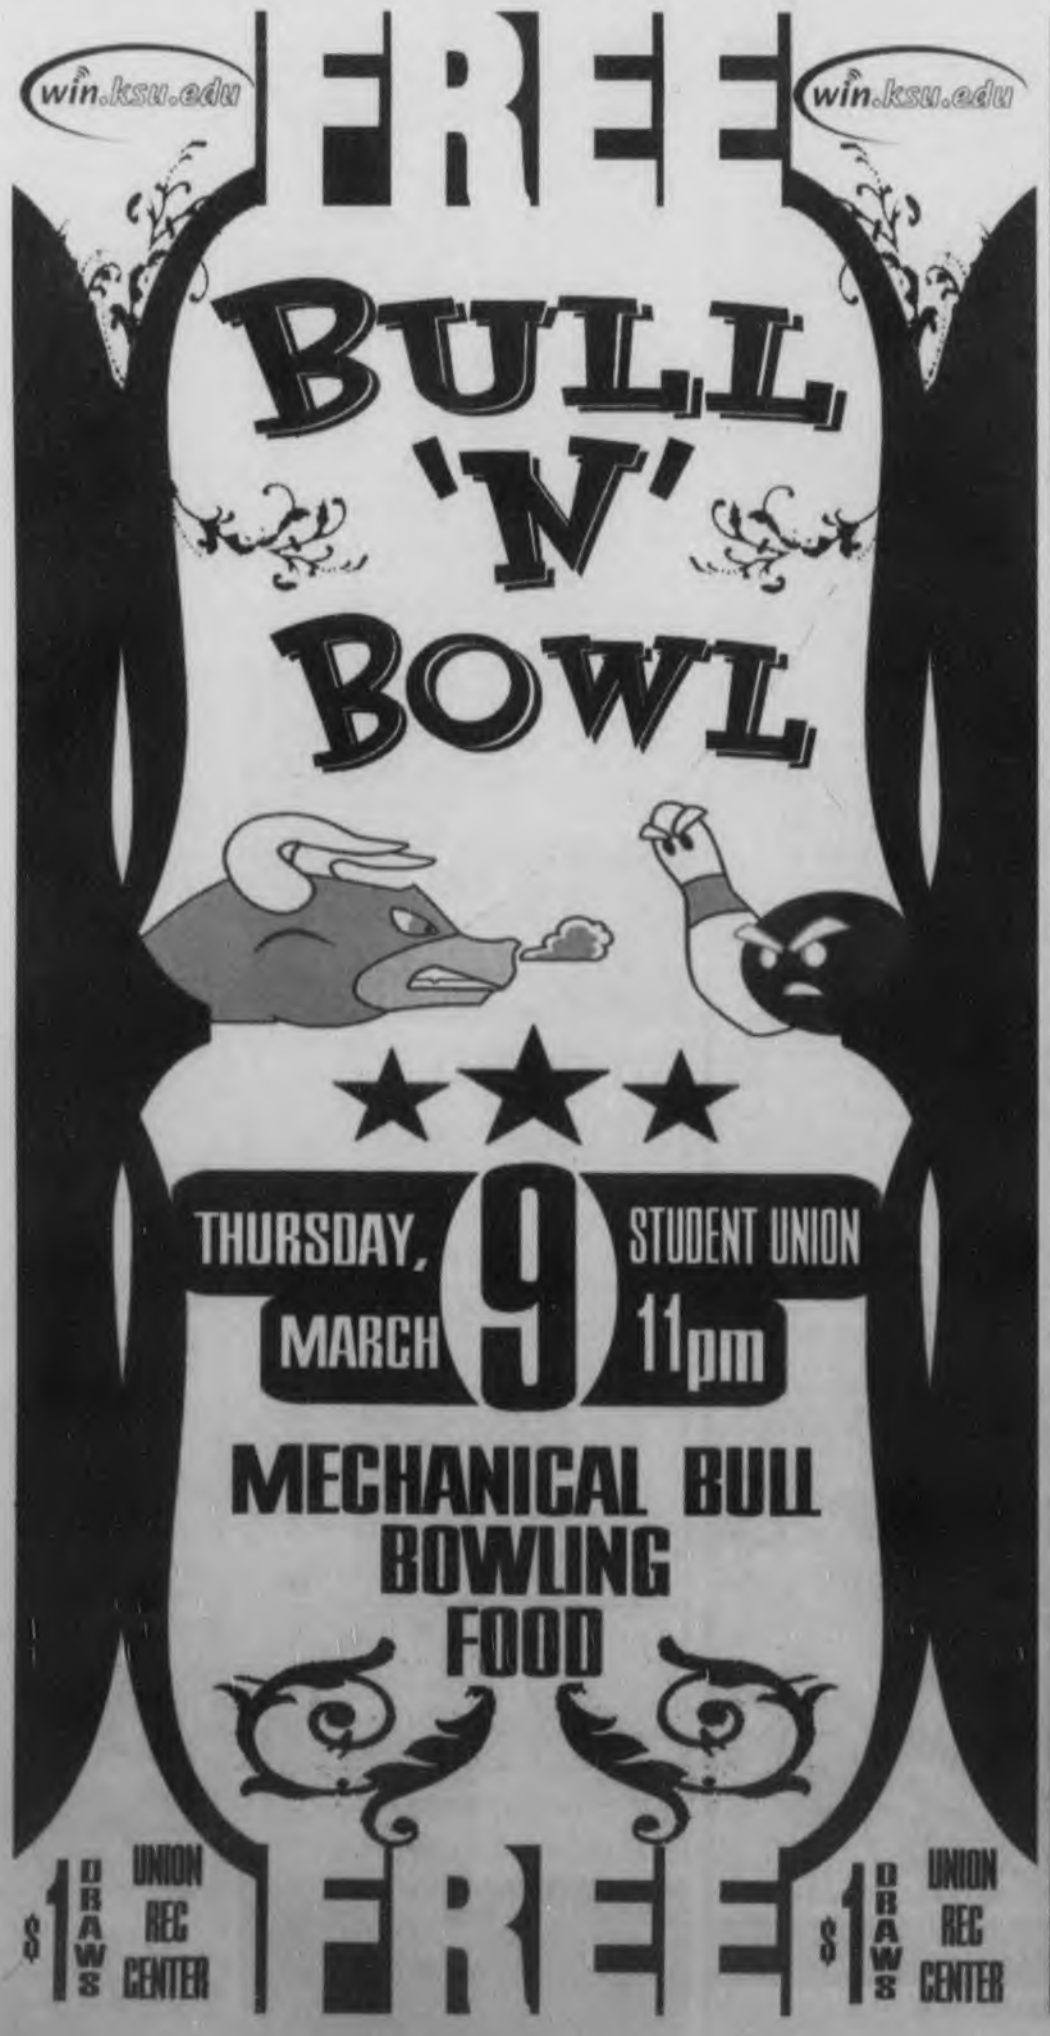
There were 5,604 votes cast in general elections this year, compared to 5,201 last year.

Candidates also were elected to Student Senate, college councils, Union Governing Board and Board of Directors for Student Publications Inc.

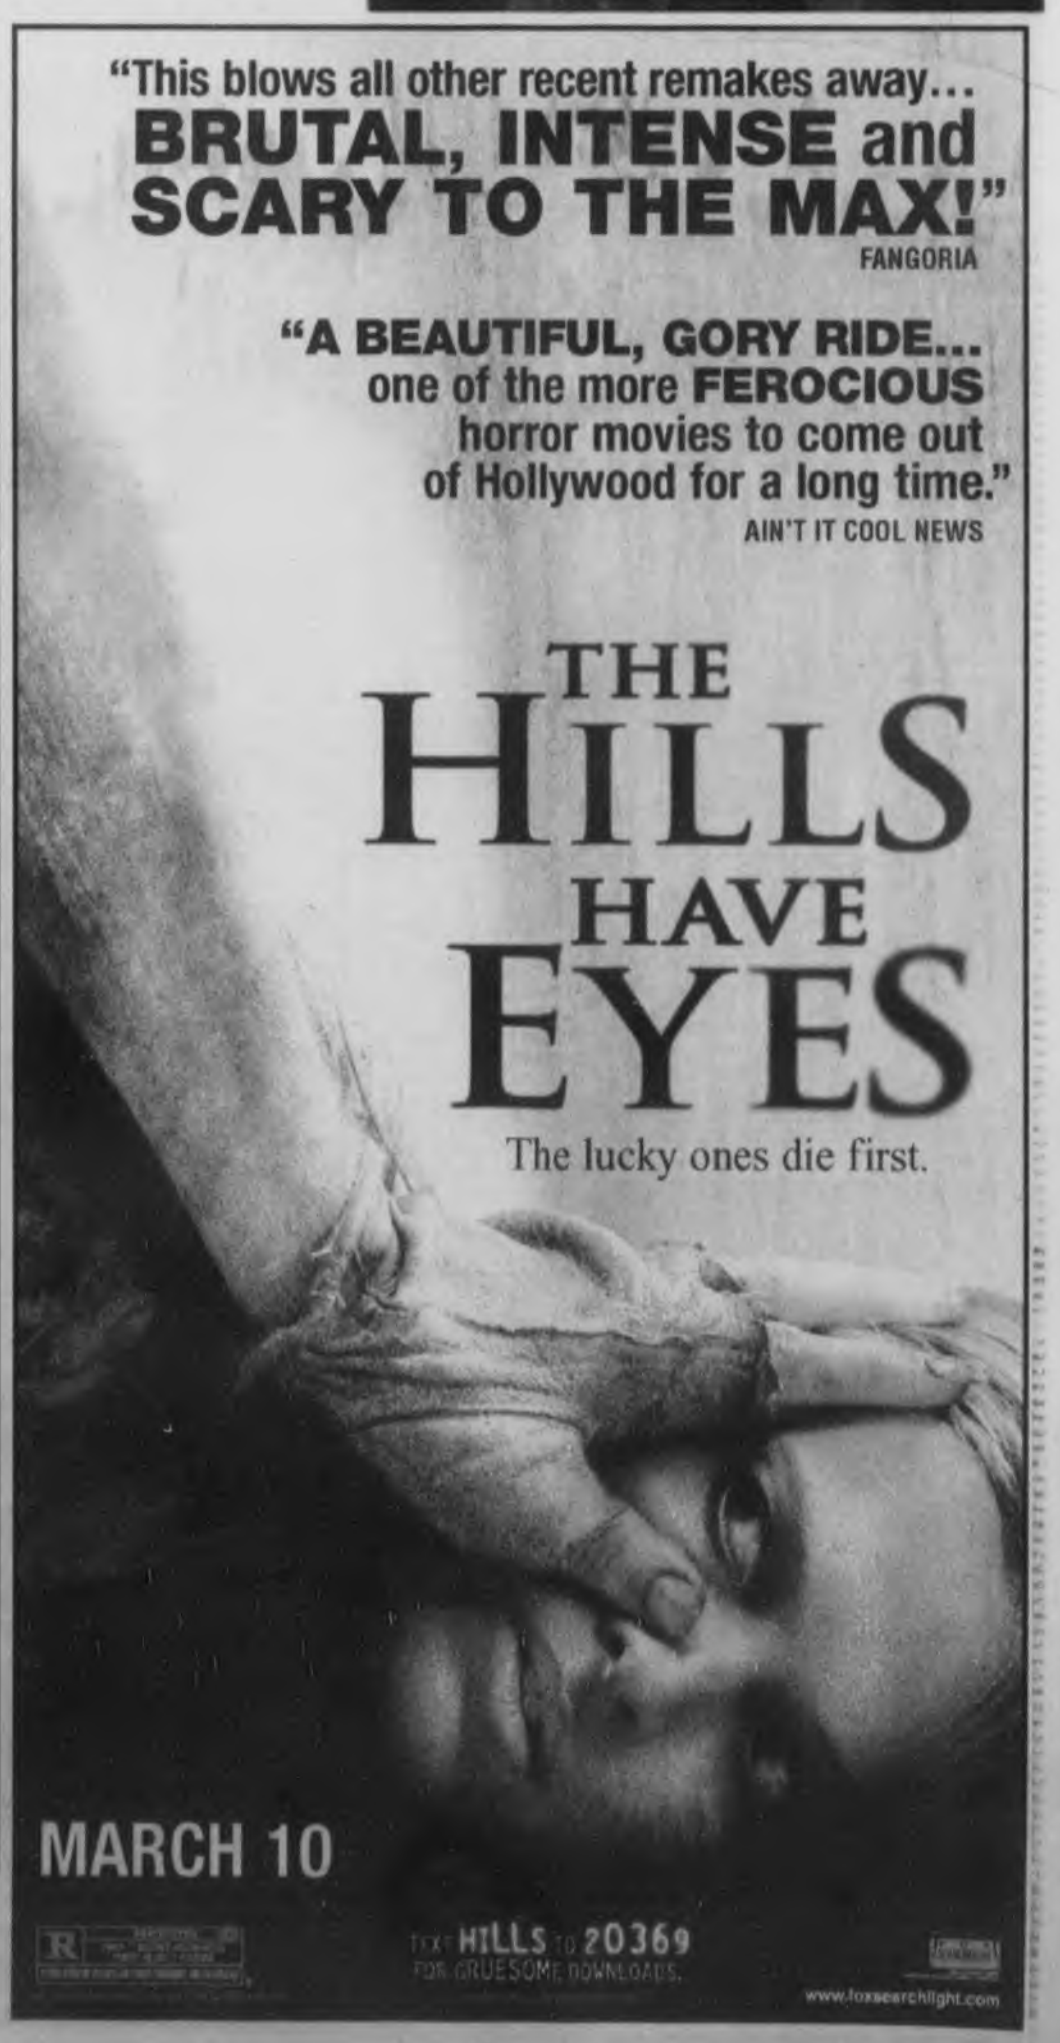
The College of Veterinary Medicine filled two Senate positions by write-in votes. The college has not been represented in Student Senate in six years.



Neither Lucas or Katie Maddy have prior experience with Student Governing Association at K-State. The last K-State student body president elected with no prior SGA experience was Ed Skoog in 1993.



"We want to emphasize that putting a fresh voice into the student government is not a bad thing," Lucas Maddy said at the presidential debate Tuesday.



Though King and Besler lost the student body president and vice president race, both won Senate positions in the College of Arts and Sciences.

"We have a lot of thinking and praying to do over the next several weeks," he said. "It's the last thing on our minds right now, and we challenge our opponents to see if they can come through with their promises."

The results are unofficial until Senate approval on March 16. The newly elected candidates will take office in May.

Weiser terminates Wooldridge after Cats fail to win Big 12 tournament

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

DALLAS–

Jim Wooldridge is no longer the K-State men's basketball coach.

Director of Athletics Tim Weiser announced Wooldridge was relieved of his job at a 6 p.m. press conference Thursday in Dallas, about four hours after K-State suffered a 73-65 loss to Texas Tech in the first round of the Big 12 Conference Tournament.

"We certainly have a group of young men who I think are capable of doing great things, but as most of you know, the bottom line is, this is a profession," Weiser said. "We have high expectations for all of our programs, especially those we rely on for revenue."

Wooldridge's official contract with the K-State Intercollegiate Athletic Department stipulates that Wooldridge could be terminated under "good cause," which is defined as "failure or refusal to perform assigned duties." It states that he could not be fired for a "win-loss" record.

Because Wooldridge was unable to guide K-State to the postseason, particularly the NCAA Tournament, he was dismissed, Weiser said.

"The expectations were pretty clear," Weiser said. "We wanted to be in the NCAA Tournament."

If K-State would have won the Big 12 Tournament, or earned an NCAA Tournament bid this season, Weiser said Wooldridge would have retained his job.

In fact, Weiser said he waited to make the announcement until K-State was officially eliminated from a chance at the NCAA Tournament.

But in the end, the Wildcats could not save their coach's job, and Weiser has begun a national search for a

RCPD charges Pizza Hut suspect

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Diana McGee, Fort Riley, Kan., was arrested by the Riley County Police Department on DUI charges related to a motor vehicle accident that occurred at the Aggieville Pizza Hut, 1121 Moro St., Wednesday night.

She also was charged with leaving the scene of an accident.

McGee allegedly was involved in a wreck in which her blue Dodge Durango struck the business, causing structural damage and breaking the windows.

"A witness who saw the accident said it appeared she hit the gas instead of the brake," Lt. Michael Quintanar of the RCPD said.

An RCPD officer was working in the police substation at 1113 Moro St. when he heard the crash, Quintanar said.

The officer went outside to see what had happened and saw the vehicle leaving the scene. He attempted to stop it, and chased it on foot down Moro Street, when it entered a parking lot. The officer attempted to stop the vehicle again, when it left the parking lot and drove south down 11th Street, Quintanar said.

Another officer was in his patrol car, and stopped McGee on 11th Street, Quintanar said.

"He noticed there was damage to the vehicle and glass on the bumper," Quintanar said.

The officer then noticed McGee smelled of alcohol, and administered a sobriety test, Quintanar said.

McGee tested over the legal limit of .08, but Quintanar could not elaborate on the actual level of alcohol in her body.

McGee was arrested and taken to the Riley County Law Enforcement Center, 1001 S. Seth Childs Road, where she was held on $750 bond for the charges of DUI and leaving the scene of an accident.

Travis Arnold, manager of the Aggieville Pizza Hut, said the damage to the business is more extensive than previously thought.

"It's more structural damage than we thought," Arnold said.

The business is open for delivery and the party room is open for guests who wish to eat in the restaurant itself, Arnold said.

The Aggieville Pizza Hut hopes to be open for regular business as soon as possible, but Arnold said he is not sure when that will be.

The employees of the restaurant are all working, but since a major part is closed, they are being given other tasks, Arnold said.

"They'll just find other stuff to do," Arnold said.

Quintanar said the accident apparently happened when McGee was attempting to back into a parking place in front of Pizza Hut.

"It appears the young drunk lady was trying to parallel park," Quintanar said.

World-famous photographer, artist dies

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lucy Jefferson rests on a wall in the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

In the portrait, she sits up straight in her wooden chair, looking straight ahead through eyes that had seen many days. Jefferson's dignified expression and poise were captured in 1949, when acclaimed African American photographer Gordon Parks captured her image in his hometown of Fort Scott, Kan.

Parks died Tuesday at his home in New York at the age of 93. For more than six decades, he was a photographer, an author, a film director and, in the later years of his life, a painter.

The renowned artist never finished high school, but he did earn several honorary degrees. K-State gave him an honorary Doctor of Letters during its commencement in May 1970.

"This is a man whose depth of understanding, intensity of feeling and integrity of action have made him one whom the world of art now claims," John Chalmers, vice president for Academic Affairs, said while presenting the honor to Parks.

Parks was born Nov. 30, 1912, in Fort Scott, Kan., the youngest of Sarah and Andrew Jackson Parks' 15 children. He lived there until his mother died, while he was a teenager, and moved to St. Paul, Minn., to live with family, an arrangement that did not work out.

Spending many years on his own, Parks worked several jobs, including one as a waiter on a train line between Chicago and Seattle. In the late 1930s, he purchased his first camera, a Voigtlander Brilliant, from a Seattle Pawnshop for an amount worth about $100 today after inflation.

Soon, Parks excelled at photography and worked for

2 K-State students head to KC for Truman Scholarship interview

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The mission of the Truman Scholarship Foundation is to find and recognize students with exceptional leadership potential who are committed to careers in government, the nonprofit or advocacy sectors, education or elsewhere in the public service arena.

Three K-State students have been recognized as possessing these qualities. Kourtney Bettinger, senior in modern languages, and Matt King, senior in political science, will travel to Kansas City, Mo. today for the interview stage of the competition. Sarah Coover, senior in agricultural business, will travel to Washington, D.C., for her interview process.

Coover

King

Coover was passed over in the first interview selection, and was finally nominated after going through the appeals process, resulting in her different interview location.

Nominees chosen through this process will interview in Washington, D.C.

"The competition is done regionally, with the students interviewing in Kansas City, traveling from Kansas, Iowa, Missouri, and Nebraska," said James Hohenbary, scholarship adviser in the College of Arts and Sciences.

"They choose 75-80 scholars a year. Ideally, they want to chose one per state with 25-30 at large, but there is no guarantee of this happening."

The winners of the interview process are chosen by a panel of distinguished individuals in public service careers and government higher education workers, Hohenbary said. The final decision will be made in several weeks.

The history of the Truman Scholarship began with former President Harry S Truman's death in 1972, according to the Truman Scholarship Foundation Web site.

His family and friends thought it would be a fitting memorial and awarded the first scholarship in the 1977-78 academic year.

The scholarship prize is $30,000 and provides financial aid for graduate study and leadership training.

"I knew they would announce the winners on the Web site, so I was contemplating how often to check it, then I got an e-mail," Bettinger said.

"I feel so excited, but I'm getting really nervous. I've been doing mock interviews to prepare. I focus on my classes during the week, but on the weekend, I plan and figure out what I need to do, and work on my focus, which is public health."

Bettinger said she feels her two summers spent on the International Summer Team as a student coordinator helped her to qualify.

"It was a big part of my undergraduate career, and it shows my commitment to service, which I intend to continue," she said.

King shared in his peer's surprise and excitement.

"I was sent the e-mail on a Sunday night, but the results weren't official until Tuesday, so I only told my family and close friends at first," King said. "It was completely unexpected, but I feel prepared."

King said he has done mock interviews and is brushing up on current events.

"I'm really not nervous," King said. "I love interviewing and meeting new people. I want to let the panel know why I am applying and why I would appreciate the help in graduate school. I just wish it was sooner.

"I am also excited Kourtney is nominated so I won't have to travel to Kansas City alone. It would be great to have two Truman Scholarship winners at K-State."

Coover said she was disappointed when not originally chosen for an interview, but was never angry and is not excited.

"I'm not nervous yet, but I'm sure it will hit when I get on the plane," Coover said. "I know past students from K-State that won the scholarship went through the appeals process, so I'm hoping the luck holds out."

"I love interviewing and meeting new people. I want to let the panel know why I am applying and why I would appreciate the help in graduate school. I just wish it was sooner."

Matt King
SENIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

To prepare, Coover said she is studying current events, reviewing the application, and talking to professionals in the area.

Coover said she believes her interest in international affairs helped her to be chosen, along with her 18-week community service project she did in Guatemala.

"It's the work I want to go into, and I think the fact that I have real life experience in that field helped me greatly," Coover said.

Senate combines standing committees

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate voted 52-0-0 Thursday night to combine two of its standing committees into a new University Relations Standing Committee.

The Student Affairs and Social Services Standing Committee and the Academic Affairs and University Relations Standing Committee will be combined as one and will handle matters of student life, academics and relations between K-State and Student Governing Association, according to the bill.

Senate Operations Committee Chair Brandon Sager said the Senate Operations Committee met for an hour-and-a-half Tuesday to discuss the bill. It was sent back to committee after Student Senate voted 32-17-1 to reconsider the bill at its March 2 meeting.

The committee decided to make a separate chair position for the new University Relations Standing Committee and to make the Faculty Senate Representative a voting, ex-officio member of the committee, Sager said.

"The committee's feel was that the majority of this body felt like the main contention was the dual role of chair of this new committee and the faculty senate representative," Sager said. "So therefore, the committee pulled that out and made the faculty senate representative a member of this committee but not the chair.

"After discussing and debating, the committee felt like they came up with a solution. Hopefully, this is a lot better off than it is currently."

The constitutional amendment that would make the Student Senate representative to Faculty Senate the chair of the new Student Academic Affairs Standing Committee passed with a vote of 49-0-1 at the March 2 Student Senate meeting.

Student Body President Michael Burns said the bill did not state how the Faculty Senate representative would serve on the committee, but it did set up the bylaws to determine how the Faculty Senate Representative is selected or elected. The new bill keeps the Faculty Senate as an elected member of the body, he said.

A bill also was introduced at Thursday's meeting to review the process of the new University Relations Standing Committee. The proposed bill states that the committee will be reviewed by the Senate Executive Committee and three Student Senators selected by Senate in September.

Student Senate will take final action on the bill at next Thursday's meeting.

Burns said the bill was introduced to allow for a review of the committee in one year.

"It will determine how well it is working and also allow for the review committee to determine whether the University Relations Chair should be compensated in the form of a salary or scholarship or both," Burns said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Candidates can still be involved in organizations

Even though some student candidates were not elected or re-elected to Student Governing Association offices Wednesday, they can still make a difference through service in other campus organizations.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Although Student Senate and our college councils do many great things each week, these former candidates must not neglect the importance of other organizations and groups. Habitat for Humanity, the T. Russell Reitz Animal Shelter, the Flint Hills Breadbasket and the Crisis Center Inc. make a difference in the lives of others every day, and are in need of volunteers. Closer to home, there are plenty of chances to become involved in campus organizations.

It would be counterproductive to run for an office with the desire of bettering life for students and then, after losing that campaign, neglect the other myriad chances to touch the lives of others. To walk away from all other chances to make a difference after losing out on one opportunity does not show a commitment to improving the quality of life on campus. It reflects someone who only has the desire to pad their resume.

We encourage those who were not elected to their desired offices to not turn their backs on the people of K-State and Manhattan. Although they might not serve in the capacity they intended, they are still have the chance to enrich the lives of those around them. And that should be its own reward.

Bad is good

Perspective gained when judgement is delayed

CODY HOLUB

Since tax time has arrived, I recently had to go to Papa John's here in Manhattan, to inquire about my W-2 form that never showed up in the mail. I had worked there during the spring 2005 semester.

When I walked in, I was greeted by a manager I used to work with, so we started chatting. She asked me why I never came back to work after the summer was over. I gave her some made-up excuse, instead of telling the truth. Frankly, the truth was too embarrassing to admit. But, I imagine you are a sympathetic person, so I'll confide in you about the real reason I never returned – just don't tell anyone.

It was a routine evening, and I was on a routine delivery. I stopped in the driveway of my destination address. I reached for the clipboard on my passenger seat, which kept information like the delivery number, time taken, etc. After completing this log sheet, I grabbed the pizzas and got out of my car to walk up to the door.

I rang the doorbell and waited for the occupants. I was looking around, just to kill a few seconds, but when I glanced at my car something strange was happening; it was moving.

At first, I was dumbfounded. I just stood there for probably a second, trying to figure out why the hell my car was moving without me in it. After I realized that knowing why it was moving wouldn't actually stop it from doing so, I threw the pizzas and started running.

I darted back in front of my car and flung open the door and slammed my foot on the brake. Unfortunately, I was about half a second too late, because my bumper was making out with the garage door. I scolded it for being promiscuous.

What happened was I got so distracted by filling out my log sheet that I had forgotten to put my car in park. Normally, that would be something a person would notice immediately, but I was on an inclined driveway. The angle was just perfect so my car wasn't moving when I first got out of it and walked by it. But, after a few seconds, the idle finally gained momentum and the car started moving.

Let's just leave the whole interaction between the customers and I out of the story, but, needless to say, they thought I was an idiot.

In the end, my insurance dropped me because of a dented garage door – and this being the kid who had never even gotten a speeding ticket.

If I ever wanted to return to Papa John's, I would have had to tell my new insurance company I intended to use my vehicle to "transport company goods." If I wanted to do that I would have to pay a lot more money, which wouldn't have been worth it, so I just got a different job.

Initially, I berated myself for being so careless. I also got mad for not thinking at the time to throw the pizzas under the wheel, instead of in a random direction. But eventually, I surrendered to the circumstances and accepted them as reality.

This was hard to do at first, but I finally listened to one of my personal life principles, that something bad could, in the end, be good.

All it takes is a little insight and time to put seemingly bad situations into the correct light to gain some perspective.

To illustrate my theorem, I imagined an alternative to what might have happened if I had never drove into a garage, and had kept my job. It will be conveyed in present tense.

It is a routine evening, and I am on a routine delivery. I am driving toward my destination. As I approach an intersection, I look down to change the song on my CD player because it is the third time I have heard the song for the night. My attention is brought back by a car horn and I look left and see headlights 10 feet away. I think, "Oh shi..."

Kindness quickly becoming a thing of the past

MEGAN MOLITOR

I worked as a country club waitress in high school, and throughout my time there, I learned a lot.

Not only did I learn the correct way to lay silverware and how to steal whole pieces of chicken off the buffet without being caught, but a lot about people.

In most cases, people were always very respectful and treated me like I actually had a heartbeat, but there was that handful of people who led me to a disheartening conclusion.

People today are forgetting how to be nice.

I remember being about seven years old, at the wedding of a family friend. I was so taken with how beautiful the bride looked that I went up to her, a complete stranger, and told her I thought she was the prettiest lady I had ever seen. Childhood innocence, combined with the sincere desire to make this woman feel good, was all it took to compel me to do a small good deed.

I'm definitely not saying I think that would be an appropriate measure to take while walking to class. It would probably freak out some random girl, and I've had enough "idiot experiences" in my life. I think the art of complimenting others is becoming lost.

We're so caught up in making sure we look good or our lives are going well, we forget how much a simple comment or gesture can mean. Everyone, no matter what type of person, is guilty of it. The girl who hands you your change when you buy a pack of cigarettes, for instance. Instead of mumbling a quick "thanks" as you dash off, would it send you straight to a murky grave if you made eye contact, smiled and wished her a nice day?

Easier said than done, I realize. We're all busy people, and we get caught up in taking care of ourselves. A necessary thing to do but I really don't believe that despite all the places to go and people to see in our lives, there is absolutely no room to (pardon the cheesiness) spread a little happiness in the lives of others.

It doesn't take much, and in generations past, it wasn't an option, it was a way of life. Politeness, kindness and generosity were simply expected of you, and today it isn't so.

The other day I walked through Wal-Mart and a stranger stopped, tipped his hat to me and said, "Good day, miss." It not only floored me, it melted me.

A complete stranger cared enough to wish a random girl a good day, and it's really sad that it caught me off guard. I want to live in a world where people are nice to each other. A world where we walk by each other, smile, say hi, without requiring a two-year history with that person.

All I know is, when a simple act of kindness is brought my way, it makes my day, no matter how trivial. Clean up a mess you didn't make, stop stealing clothes out of the laundry room (you know who you are), and remember, what goes around, comes around. Make somebody smile.

Forum discusses media issues

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Media literacy is one of the most important factors for building public trust in the news media, members of a panel concluded Thursday.

The panel members addressed the topic "News Media and Society: How to Restore Public Trust" at the National Issues Forum on Thursday in the Flint Hills Room of the K-State Student Union.

The National Issues Forum is a nationwide, nonpartisan network of locally sponsored public forums for the consideration of public policy issues.

The moderator for the session, Sue Tate, said the forum addressed the importance of free press in a democratic society.

"The drop in the ratings and decline in subscriptions is evidence to show that the public are losing trust in the media," said Ned Seaton, general manager of the Manhattan Mercury.

A video seen by the audience suggested three approaches to repairing the relationship between the news media and the American people.

The first approach put the blame on journalists and the need to strengthen their conduct. The discussion surrounded the need for licensing journalists and holding them accountable to certain high standards of reporting.

"Just like how other professions like medicine and law have certified practitioners, there should be some way of designating a person as a journalist," said Larry Erickson, professor of chemical engineering.

Lori Bergen, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, said accrediting journalism programs played an important role in churning out responsible journalists.

"But who's going to do the regulation?" asked Jeff Zakarakis, assistant professor of educational leadership. "The current political nature of the government may cause more problems."

Charlie Griffin, professor of family studies and human services, said licenses set minimum standards and prevent aiming for higher ideals.

"The First Amendment says that Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press," said David Eisenhower, director of the Institute for Public Service at the Annenberg School of Communication at the University of Pennsylvania and the grandson of President Dwight Eisenhower. "So the news media has to restore trust in their own profession."

The discussion moved on to the second policy, which suggested the opening up of the marketplace.

"Eighty percent of the major market is controlled by two companies," Zakarakis said.

Erickson said the media conglomerates had facilitated the availability and diversity of information.

Eisenhower suggested that government ownership of media like the American equivalent of BBC would help provide more credibility and build public trust.

"There should be limitations on multiple layers of ownerships," said Joe McLean, from Kansas Campus Contact. "Independent media can provide good journalism."

The final approach revolved around the concept of breaking the wall separating news media from the public by increasing interactivity.

"With internet newspapers, internet radio, podcasts and blogs, there is a media revolution going on," Zakarakis said. "New technologies like public access broadband and public access television are the future of journalism."

UGB wraps up 50th anniversary

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Celebrations for the 50th Anniversary of the K-State Student Union are coming to a close.

Tonight will be the Harry Potter Extravaganza. Magicians Spike and Hammer will perform at 7 p.m. in Forum Hall before the 9:30 p.m. screening of "Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire."

There will be trivia games and a costume contest at the event. Harry Potter-themed candy also will be available.

The UGB and the Union Program Council are preparing for the 50th anniversary reception and banquet Saturday.

"The reception starts at 5 (p.m.), and the dinner starts at 6," said Nacole Boan, president of UPC and vice president of UGB. "The decorations look amazing, thanks to Ben Hopper."

The art exhibit in the Union will be open through Saturday.

At its meeting Thursday, UGB discussed its ambassador program and trying it for another year. Allison Carmichael, junior in life sciences, is the only ambassador for the Union.

"We want to put a student face on the Union for other organizations," said Craig Johnson, assistant director of the K-State Student Union.

It was announced that UPC has a new executive board.

"I'm really excited about it," Boan said. "They're going to get to do a lot of cool things."

A request for a $1 million Bond Surplus for funding of an Automated Fire Suppression system has been sent to the Student Governing Association for final approval.

During March, the Union will work on the 2006-07 budget.

Open house will be Saturday, April 8, on all three floors of the Union.

It was announced that Subway's stay in the Union will be extended for one more year.

"Other than the ATMs, they were our first venture into any kind of a contract situation back in the '80s," said Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union.

Eisenhower gives year's last Lou Douglas lecture

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

David Eisenhower, grandson of former U.S. President Dwight David Eisenhower, spoke on a range of topics, extending from the Peloponnesian War to World War II Thursday night in Forum Hall of the K-State Union.

Eisenhower, a Public Policy Fellow at the Annenberg School for Communication at the University of Pennsylvania and Fellow of the American Society of Historians, gave the speech "A Call To Serve" to an audience of about 80 people.

Eisenhower was introduced by former Kansas Governor and visiting political science professor John Carlin.

In 1952, when Dwight Eisenhower was running for president, Carlin's sister named four cats for the presidential contenders, Carlin said.

By the end of the year, there was only one cat left, and that was the one she named for Eisenhower, Carlin said.

David Eisenhower has lectured at town hall meetings in 45 states and in a reference to the 2008 Presidential election, U.S. Sen. John McCain should watch out, Carlin said.

"You've sort of laid the groundwork, I would say," Carlin said.

Speaking at length about his grandfather, who left Abilene, Kan., in 1911 for West Point, Eisenhower said the former president first wanted an education and second, a military education.

Eisenhower revealed that his grandfather's name wasn't Dwight David, but in fact was David Dwight. It was changed to Dwight David at West Point because Eisenhower thought it sounded better.

"America is a place where it does not matter who you are. It matters what you become," Eisenhower said.

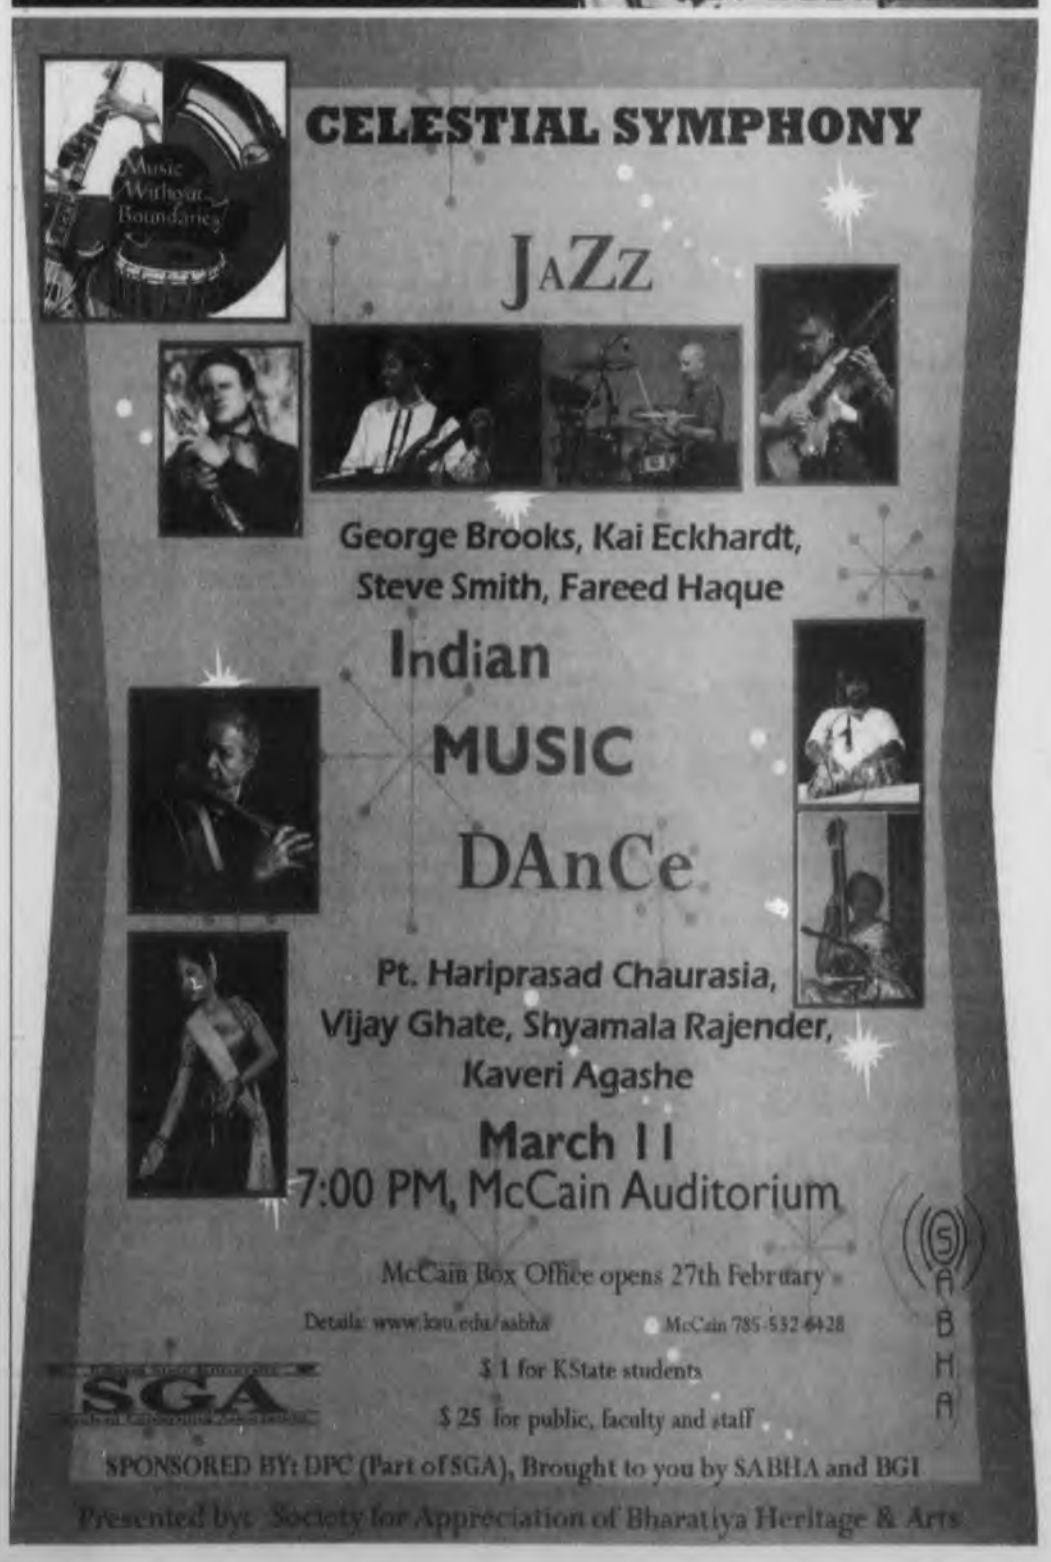
Speaking about the importance of cooperation, Eisenhower mentioned events during World War II and the alliance between America, Britain, France and Poland.

Dwight Eisenhower met the King and Queen of England when he was a general, Eisenhower said. Once, while taking a tour of Windsor Castle, the colonel giving the tour forgot that the king and queen were on the grounds, and heard the voices of the tour guide and Gen. Eisenhower.

"Not wanting to intrude, the King and Queen knelt down behind a hedge," Eisenhower said.

While president, Dwight Eisenhower stressed that public service entails sacrifice, and that Americans are fortunate and they know it.

"Would Americans answer to a call of service? I believe so," he said.



Several students attended the lecture for classes, and thought Eisenhower covered a wide range of topics.

"It was interesting," Jamie Oborg, sophomore in social work. "I thought it would be more related to specific things."

Coach's time here was bittersweet

ANGIE HANSON

Coach Jim Wooldridge's dismissal on Thursday evening in Dallas after K-State's disappointing first-round loss Texas Tech was about as bittersweet as it comes.

The bitter being that Wooldridge probably will be remembered by most as the coach who, for the last two seasons, couldn't quite get us there. Couldn't quite get the big wins the Cats needed to get to the postseason – the factor that was arguably the template for Wooldridge getting asked back next season.

The bitter also being the realization that surfaced after K-State lost to Baylor – the worst team in the Big 12 Conference – and Oklahoma State, at home in front of a sell-out crowd - that Wooldridge was not fit to coach this talented, passionate bunch of players.

These were inexcusable losses.

The realization was cemented after the consecutive losses to Oklahoma and Texas and the loss to Kansas March 4, that Wooldridge no longer belonged.

These were games the Wildcats weren't expected to, but should have won.

It's losses like the five above that contribute to the sweet accompanying Wooldridge's firing.

The sweet is simple – Wooldridge's coaching performance this season didn't give Athletics Director Tim Weiser any reason to renew his contract, like he did in 2004.

Wooldridge didn't give fans any reason to believe his contract should be extended again.

Second chances aren't often given in life, and Weiser offered Wooldridge a second opportunity to prove himself as a coach – a decision many were opposed to.

Unfortunately, Wooly couldn't capitalize on his second chance.

The monumental win against Kansas on Jan. 14 – the only instance where I saw Wooldridge outcoach another coach – proved to be a tease to K-State basketball and Wooldridge followers.

The remainder of the season, despite spotty moments of excitement, was exhausting. Wooldridge's coaching was downright confusing. When the Wildcats desperately needed victories, they couldn't get them. They lost eight games by four points or less. They couldn't finish close games in the final minutes, whether they were winning or losing. They won only two out of 10 road games.

What that boils down to: poor decision making – the coaches' responsibility.

Still, for me, Wooldridge's firing is more bitter than sweet.

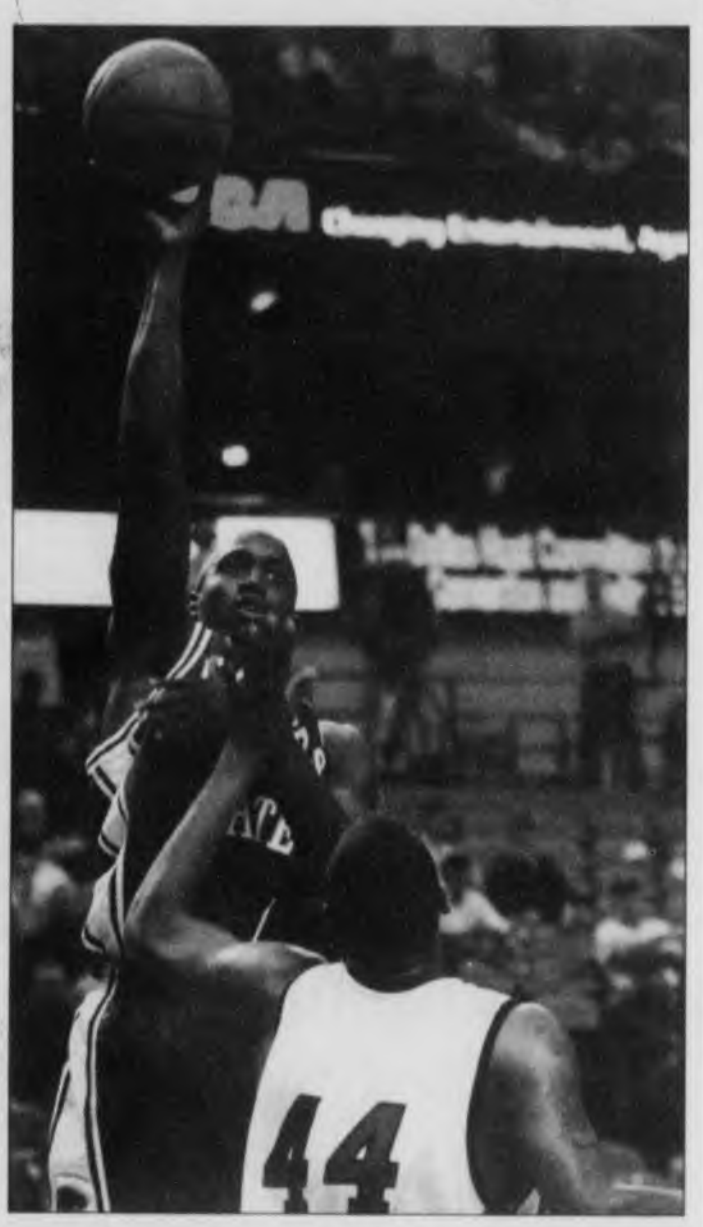
Despite a career at K-State plagued by mostly frustrating, unfulfilled seasons, Wooldridge quietly put some excitement back in the K-State basketball program, and at the same time, helped K-State emerge as a basketball school again, similar to its reputation in the 1980s.

While the numbers and statistics don't show it, Wooly built a solid and classy foundation for the basketball program. He made December through March entertaining for K-State fans again.

Wooly truly cared about his players and K-State.

His father-figure, average-joe, friendly-neighbor demeanor is rare in college sports and is one of his most attractive qualities. It's magnetizing, and his genuine charisma is why it's so hard to see him go.

I don't think Wooldridge is a bad coach. He did as much as he could with this program, but it's obvious he simply can't build on his two-consecutive 6-10 Big 12 finishes.



Wooldridge will likely go elsewhere – I don't think his coaching career is over. But his time in Manhattan is over. K-State needed Wooldridge six years ago, but now, we need him to go.

Thanks, Wooldridge for devoting six years of your life to K-State. You will be missed, and it is for that reason, your exit is more bitter than sweet.

K-State ousted from Big 12 Tourney after 1st-round loss

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

DALLAS – K-State knew the situation entering Thursday's game against Texas Tech in Dallas – win or go home.

Texas Tech sent the Wildcats packing.

The Red Raiders (15-16) defeated the Cats 73-65 in the first round of the Big 12 Conference Tournament, ending K-State's tournament and, most likely, its season.

K-State's performance proved to be a fitting end to the season – one in which the Wildcats (15-13) have lost more than their share of close games, including nine games by five points or fewer.

As expected, the Wildcats were soft-spoken and disappointed after the game.

"Right now, this is very disappointing," junior forward Cartier Martin said. "We all love the game (of basketball) so much. We wanted to keep playing.

"It's a big, big disappointment," said senior forward Dramane Diarra, who probably played his last game in a Wildcat uniform Thursday. "We expected big things this season, and we came up short."

K-State took a four-point advantage into halftime and led by as many as five in the second half.

But Texas Tech junior guard LucQuente White drained a 3-pointer with 10:35 remaining to give the Red Raiders a 49-46 lead. In the final 10 minutes of play, K-State came within one point on two separate occasions, but the Red Raiders never gave up the lead.

Texas Tech junior guard Jarrius Jackson, a first-team All-Big 12 player, iced the game by making 10-of-10 free throws in the final 1:10.

Jackson finished with 21 points on 4-of-17 shooting from the field, and led four Red Raiders in double figures.

Sophomore guard David Hoskins tied his career high with 25 points in a losing effort. Diarra earned his first double-double with 12 points and 12 rebounds, while Martin finished with 10 points on 3-of-9 shooting.

Hoskins said he has become far too familiar with close losses.

"We came close a lot of games, but just couldn't finish them out," Hoskins said. "It was pretty much the same thing that happened today. We just couldn't finish out the game."

Coach Jim Wooldridge, who was formally released from his job at 6 p.m. Thursday, said "close" is the right word to sum up his squad's play this season.

"If you've heard me talk about our team and our program, I've used the word 'disappointed' a time or two, but I must say I hate to use that word right now," Wooldridge said. "You can't use 'close' as a barometer of who you are, but it was really that kind of a season. It was really a close season. I would use that word, (close) instead of disappointed."

Wooldridge said K-State did some positive things Thursday, but once again, failed to make enough plays necessary to win.

"I know the game today is not the hot topic right now, but we had 19 offensive rebounds," Wooldridge said. "We had 17 assists and 13 turnovers. Those are healthy numbers."

Despite K-State's mediocre record, Wooldridge said he hopes the Wildcats will remain positive entering the off season.

"Hopefully, they will have a positive frame of mind and take something from what they accomplished this year," he said.

Wooldridge's K-State career at a glance

2000

2000-01

Wildcats take home an 11-18, 6-10 Big 12 record in Wooldridge's first year as head coach, with wins against No. 19 Iowa and No. 20 Missouri.

2001-02

Wildcats go 13-16, 6-10 in the Big 12.

7th-place finish in the Big 12, which was K-State's best of the Big 12 era.

Win against No. 9 Oklahoma State marks the Wildcats' first victory against a top-10 team since 1994's win against Kansas.

2002-03

The Wildcats did not improve their win total for the first time under Wooldridge finishing the season 13-17 and 4-12 in the Big 12.

The Wildcats beat NCAA participant Colorado and then-No. 23 Texas Tech.

2003-04

Wildcats post its first .500 mark in four seasons, with a 14-14 overall record, including a 6-10 mark in Big 12 play

K-State tallies its first non-losing season with Wooldridge as head coach.

Upset against No. 10 Texas.

2004

After the improvement seen in the 2003-04 season, Wooldridge receives a two-year extension from Athletics Director Tim Weiser.

2004-05

K-State post its first winning season in six years, with a 17-12 overall record and a 6-10 mark in league play.

Advanced to the second round of the Big 12 Tournament, only to lose to Kansas 67-80.

Started the year with eight straight victories, which represented the best start by a squad since the 1979-80 team, which also started 8-0.

First series sweep of Missouri since the 1993-94 season.

K-State becomes the first 10-seed to win a league tournament game since 2001 with its 68-62 victory against Texas A&M.

2005-06

Jan 14. - Wooldridge helps K-State beat KU for the first the 1993-94 season

Jan 21. - K-State concludes three-game winning streak, including a victory against Texas A&M on Jan. 18

Feb. 4 - Marks the end of a three-game losing streak, including a loss 70-72 to Baylor — who finished 12th in the league — in Waco, Texas.

Feb. 8 - K-State beats Iowa State at home, with assistant coach Jimmy Elgas filling in for Wooldridge as interim coach (his first head coaching opportunity), while Wooldridge recovers from neck surgery after his operation that morning.

Feb. 15 - Wooldridge returns after missing the Iowa State victory and Missouri loss on Feb. 12. The Wildcats lose to Texas Tech in Lubbock, Texas, 56-70.

Feb. 25 - K-State coming off a 1-2 record, including a 72-60 win against Colorado Feb. 18, followed by back-to-back one-point losses to then-No. 7 Texas and then-No. 20 Oklahoma.

March 4 - The Wildcats dropped by Kansas 52-66 at home, erasing hopes of the first Jayhawk sweep since 1983.

March 9 - K-State loses to Texas Tech 65-73 in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament in Dallas. At 6 p.m. on Thursday evening, K-State Athletics Director Tim Weiser announced that Wooldridge's contract would not be renewed, ending the coach's six-year career at K-State.

TRK | Smith earns USTFCCCA regional honor

K-State senior Christian Smith was named the United States Track and Field and Cross Country Coaches Association's (USTFCCCA) Midwest NCAA Division I Men's Indoor Athlete of the Year on Thursday. It is the first indoor honor for K-State from the USTFCCCA.

Smith

Smith broke a 20-year old collegiate record in the men's 1,000-meter run on Feb. 4 at the Husker Invitational. The product of Garfield, Kan., zipped to a clocking of 2 minutes, 19.57 seconds, breaking the previous national mark held by Doug Consiglio of Arkansas of 2 minutes, 19.64 seconds in 1986.

EQU | Equestrian playing host to 3 shows

The K-State equestrian team will have a busy weekend ahead of them, as they host the final hunt show of the regular season and two IHSA regional competitions at Fox Creek Stables.

The action kicks off at 8 a.m. Saturday morning with the hunt seat show and following in the afternoon the IHSA Regional Competition which will begin approximately at 2:30 p.m. The weekend wraps up Sunday with the Western Regional show at 10 a.m.

BKC | Syracuse upsets No. 1 in Big East Tourney

Gerry McNamara waited one day to one-up himself.

The senior guard hit a 3-pointer with less than a second to play to give Syracuse an 86-84 win against Cincinnati in the opening round of the Big East tournament.

McNamara

On Thursday, his 3 with 5.5 seconds left in regulation tied the game and the ninth-seeded Orange went on to beat No. 1 Connecticut 86-84 in overtime.

The win should help the Orange (21-11) end any talk about whether they deserve an at-large bid to the NCAA tournament.

GLF | Honda leaders

Thursday's opening round of the Honda Classic in Palm Beach Gardens, Calif., was plagued by gusty winds.

David Toms made five straight birdies to highlight his 5-under round of 67, and he shared the first-round lead with Geoff Ogilvy, Ryuji Imada and Mathias Gronberg -- the seventh alternate who didn't know he was officially in the field until Wednesday morning.

From laptop skins to phone charms, options are available to allow iPods, cells, computers to go from dull to dazzling

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Old-fashioned cell phones, stark white iPods and plain silver laptops can finally play dress-up with custom-made accessories.

Items from a variety of stores can be purchased to make even the most drab technology stylish.

Cheryl Bouray, assistant manager of Claire's, said Claire's offers several charms and accessories for cell phones.

Claire's offers charms that can be placed on cell phone antennae, she said. Charms include anything from animals to dice and balls of sequins.

"Most of them are that kind of 'bling' sort of thing," Bouray said.

The store also has stick-on jewels in different sets, including ready-made designs, including hearts, stripes and geometric shapes.

While these products seemed more popular during the holiday season, Bouray said, the charms are still an available option for those wanting to spice up their phones.

Mike Eutsey, salesperson at Radio Shack, said the store offers an assortment of accessories to spice up iPods and other music players.

"We have about everything they make," Eutsey said.

Radio Shack has socks and slip-over covers in several colors, stripes or polka dots. Covers cost about $14 and up, but Eutsey said iPod socks are a cheaper option.

Armbands also have become a popular item to purchase, making listening to tunes easier when exercising or walking.

Eutsey said Radio Shack has a wall of iPod and music player accessories of which people just can't seem to get enough.

"It's hard to keep accessories in," Eutsey said. "People have been buying them like crazy."

For more iPod and Macintosh-friendly accessories, students can find items to decorate their technology at the K-State Student Union Computer Store.

"We have some for just about everything," said Tom Mahoney, employee at the K-State Student Union Computer Store.

Mahoney said the store offers more than 100 different cases in various styles for iPods.

Hard and soft cases can be purchased in what Mahoney called a "cornucopia of colors."

Prices for cases at the store range from $12.95 up to $40.

For those wanting to add flair to laptops and computers, Mahoney said special skins for iBooks and powerbooks also can be purchased for about $29.95.

"They fit very tightly, like a wet suit around it, so you can put it in your backpack, and it covers it well," he said. "It won't get scratched, but it's very stylized."

As the trend to keep technology looking stylish, Mahoney said people seem to make purchases that reflect themselves. Xbox and Xbox360 has the ability to personalize skins for the cover.

"I think people are trying to adjust technology to their own personality," Mahoney said. "Then they accessorize that to their lifestyle."

Celestial Symphony blends jazz, Indian sounds

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A fusion of jazz and Indian music will be showcased at the "Celestial Symphony – Music Without Boundaries" concert, which will be at 7 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

The Society for Appreciation of Bharatiya Heritage and Arts will be host to the event, Jeet Sengupta, president of SABHA, said.

The society is a student group at K-State that promotes Indian Heritage and culture.

"The primary goal of SABHA is to bring Manhattan glimpses of Indian heritage and culture in the form of dance and music," Sengupta said. "Fusion between Indian, classical and jazz is an extremely difficult art form," she said.

The admission price is $1 for students, to promote students to attend, he said.

"I think $1 is an extremely good price, and it's a once-of-a-lifetime event of hearing all these people together," said Disha Rupayana, graduate student in psychology and public relations representative for SABHA.

Sengupta said college students will enjoy this because it is a very different and vibrant type of music.

The concert is being funded in part by the Student Governing Association and other local businesses, said Emily Besler, senior in political science and Student Senate vice-chair.

"Diversity programming committee meets a few times a year to split $150,000 into different programs and events on campus, and this is one of the unique events that they have planned," Besler said.

One of the reasons they decided to bring this event to K-State is because nothing like this had ever been here, Besler said. They are attempting to bring things to campus that focus on diversity.

SABHA brought the event here because it is a very diverse show with people from all different backgrounds performing an extremely diverse concert, Rupayana said.

"The music is relaxing, and to be combined with jazz is something unusual in its own way," Rupayana said.

The show features many artists including the musical talents of Pt. Hariprasad Chaurasia, George Brooks, Kai Eckhardt, Steve Smith, Fareed Haque, Vijay Ghate, Shyamala Rajender and Kaveri Agashe.

The bamboo flutist, Chaurasia has been proclaimed as the greatest bamboo flutist India has ever seen, Sengupta said.

'Ultraviolet' scores big

"Ultraviolet"

Movie review by Carl Brown

The new futuristic movie called "Ultraviolet" is what happens when science and politics mix.

Scientist have located an old virus that can turn humans into "hemopheds" or vampires when infected. This was after the government and corporate scientists try to use it to make a better soldiers that would be stronger and faster than others.

The story line of the movie is that there is a war against these vampires that also stems with fear. Everyone that contracts the disease is shunned by the general public.

A government agency searches out and kills many of these hemopheds until they are all but extinct. A few fight back for the right to live in society by forming an underground revolutionary group.

The special effects in the movie were very good overall while there some scenes that were more comic book style with a realistic twist.

There were many other special affects that the ladies would like — Violet, Milla Jovovich, was able to change clothes and her hair color with just one thought. I would imagine that it would save a lot of money on clothes and going to the hair salon.

Overall, "Ultraviolet" is an enjoyable film. It deals with motherly instincts — the protecting and nurturing of a young child — and plenty of action and special effects.

SGA election signs come down

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Elections are over, and the deadline to tear down campaign materials was 7 p.m. Thursday.

Elections Commissioner Tanner Banion said candidates who did not remove their materials by the deadline will face penalties. Possible penalties include either forfeit their elected position, or pay the Division of Facilities $30 an hour for removing the materials, Banion said.

The sidewalk chalkings will be washed away by rain, he said.

"Overall, it went about as smooth as it can be," Banion said of elections. "It was a pretty normal year."

Banion said changes from last year's elections helped make the election process go smoother.

Last year's candidates were allowed to post campaign materials the Sunday before mandatory meetings, but the date was changed back to the Tuesday after the meetings, Banion said. The expense report due dates were also changed back from 10 a.m. Monday to 4 p.m. Friday.

"It was good to put the starting dates for when people could post stuff after the mandatory meetings, because then they knew what they could and couldn't do," Banion said.

Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator for the Office of Student Activities and Services, said there was slight confusion with the general election ballot postings for K-State-Salina positions Wednesday night.

K-State-Salina had eight departments vote for Engineering Technology Senator, and one ballot was listed several times, Harlan said.

"The way the students see the ballot is divided by department," he said. "(Office of Student Activities and Services) usually gets the results added up together, but the computer wasn't working, so we just sent them out."

Harlan said there also were some write-in candidates on the ballot that had been disqualified.

"They could not have taken office had they received enough votes," Harlan said.

The election results will not become official until they pass through Student Senate on Thursday.

Student Body President Michael Burns said the college councils with multiple-elected write-in candidates will vote on who is elected to the council.

Burns also said Student Senate will have turnover into the 2006-07 term after its regular meeting April 6.

"Following that meeting, we will have transition (into next year's Senate)," Burns said.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Joe Vossen, junior in political science, removes the remainder of his student senator campaign signs from around campus. Campaign materials had to be removed by 7 p.m. Thursday or candidates would face penalties. Vossen was re-elected to Student Senate on Wednesday.

Conference to teach students about diversity

By Kelsey Noel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The second-annual "Diversity In Action Conference" will be from 10 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. on Thursday in the K-State Student Union ballroom. The theme for the conference is "Enhance it! Don't fear it! It's just diversity!"

This year's conference will feature keynote speakers, a diversity panel, and a performance of a skit, "The Color Orange."

Speakers at the conference will include K-State football Coach Ron Prince and Sondra Thiederman, a national expert on diversity issues.

Mohammed Bilal, from MTV's Real World will participate in the performance of "The Color Orange," a skit about cross-cultural communication.

There also will be a panel of speakers from area businesses, sharing their experiences concerning diversity in the workplace.

Jessica Smith, graduate student in business administration and chairperson for the conference, said she is hoping for 1,000 students to attend.

"We encourage students to attend the whole day, but they're free to leave if they need to," she said. "Last year's conference was fun, and this year's will be even more fun."

Dawne Martin, marketing instructor, said she also expects the conference to be better this year.

"I think that this year we would like to build on what we did last year," Martin said. "People weren't sure what was going on last year, but they ended up having a good time. I hope that they'll bring their friends along this year."

Smith said attending the conference could be helpful to students.

"It will help students enhance their viewpoint on diversity," she said. "It's a great way to build and educate yourself so that when you graduate, you'll be more prepared."

Nathan Mull, senior in accounting and registration chair for the conference, said understanding diversity is essential in everyday life.

"With the society we live in today, it is especially important to be prepared to deal with people of all cultures and beliefs," he said.

Anyone who is interested in attending the Diversity In Action Conference can pick up registration forms from the Office of Student Activities and Services, or in Calvin 107. Students can also register online at www.mbsa.cba.ksu.edu. Registration is due Monday.

The 28th annual St. Patrick's Day celebration will take place starting at 7:30 a.m. Saturday in Aggieville with the Blarney Breakfast at Kite's Bar and Grill, 615 N. 12th St.

The breakfast will feature a buffet, said Shauna Tominey, marketing and program director of the Manhattan Arts Center.

"We will have green eggs and ham, as well as a wide variety of breakfast items," Tominey said.

Tominey said the breakfast is a popular attraction and she expects a large crowd.

"We've had quite a number of tickets purchased already," she said.

The parade will begin at 11 a.m. at City Park and continue through Aggieville.

Prizes will be awarded by the Aggieville Business Association for Best Parade Spirit and Largest Parade Entry.

The prizes are AggieBucks, which can be used in Aggieville businesses, Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said.

There are between 65 and 70 entrees in the parade so far, Sieben said.

Entrants include local elementary schools, Girl Scouts, Classic Cars and the Jaycee's lawnmower group.

The Mounted Color Guard from Fort Riley also will be in the parade.

Added attractions include a moon bounce, which will be set up by Varney's Book Store, 623 N. Manhattan Ave.

"There's a lot of options," Sieben said about the event.

Pianist, retired professor to perform in concert tonight at arts center

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Robert Edwards, renowned pianist, organist and retired professor of music at K-State, will perform a piano recital to benefit the Manhattan Arts Center tonight.

When asked to perform by Penny Senften, director of the arts center, Edwards said he jumped at the chance to support local art and the center.

"I think the MAC is a very important aspect of the cultural life in Manhattan," Edwards said.

Edwards said he chose a group of classical pieces by Mozart, Debussy and Chopin since they complement one another.

"They make a good program together of contrast," he said.

Senften said having Edwards play is a way to have a quality of music performance while benefiting the center.

"We have a beautiful piano, and it doesn't get played much," Senften said.

While the arts center has not had many classic piano recitals, Senften said offering the classical performance exemplifies the center's focus of offering a variety of styles of art and music to the community.

"It adds a little bit of a dimension for the MAC," Senften said. "We usually like to offer different types of music."

Acoustic blues performer to play at MAC

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan Arts Center's BirdHouse Acoustic Music Series will present a performance of blues by musician Guy Davis on Saturday night at Manhattan Arts Center.

Davis, who is a musician, composer, actor, director and writer, will bring acoustic music from blues masters, African American stories, original songs, and performance pieces.

David Kamerer, founder of the arts center's BirdHouse series, said bringing Davis is a way to present a strong blues performance for Manhattan.

"It's a raw, gritty approach, deeply rooted in history," Kamerer said.

Davis comes from a theatric background, son of actors and writers Ossie Davis and Ruby Dee. Kamerer said this heritage helps Davis bring stories and songs to listeners.

"He really knows to tell a story and convey the story of the blues," Kamerer said.

Davis played for the BirdHouse series a few years ago, and Kamerer said people reacted well to the performance.

"The audience just loved him," Kamerer said. "BirdHouse is all about the song. We want to roll the blues into that."

Penny Senften, director of the arts center, said Davis was popular in his first performance, and will draw an audience.

Senften said bringing music like Davis' is what makes the BirdHouse series popular.

"The BirdHouse always is really popular because it has a very broad appeal," she said.

Week of celebratory events marks Asian Heritage Month

By Kelsey Childress
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the week of March 13 through March 17, there will be several events taking place to celebrate Asian heritage in the United States. The K-State Asian American Student Union has organized the events.

"As an organization, we are simply hoping that these events help to shed more light onto what it truly means to be not just an Asian, but an Asian American," said Colleen Loo, Asian American Student Union president and senior in chemical science. "We are proud of our cultures, and we would love for others to share in our experiences."

The theater company Hereandnow will perform at 7 p.m. Monday in Forum Hall. The company is comprised of Asian Americans, and features poetry, drama, dance and comedy written by the performers.

Tou Ger Xiong will perform "Bruce Lee Meets Snoop Dogg" at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the K & S Ballrooms of the K-State Student Union. His performance uses rap poetry, pictures, and humor to promote awareness about diversity and issues concerning race and culture.

"I am looking most forward to Tou Ger Xiong's performance," said Andy Ko, treasurer of the AASU and junior in mechanical engineering. "I hope students get a deeper understanding of Asian Culture."

A "Taste of Asia" exhibit will take place from 5 to 7 p.m. Wednesday at the International Student Center. This event will feature information about Asian culture, along with food and activities.

On Thursday, there will be a booth in the Union that will provide fortune cookies and information about Asian Heritage Month.

Members of the AASU said they have worked hard to bring these events together to raise awareness about the Asian American culture.

"After attending these, hopefully students here will have less stereotypes and more respect for the Asian American students," said Jeffrey Kung, historian and public relations officer for AASU. "(Maybe) they will learn what it's like to be raised in a different culture while being physically different."

Members of the AASU said they want to raise awareness on campus and in the community about Asian Heritage. Through these events, they are offering a glimpse into the culture and lifestyle of Asian Americans.

"AASU has worked hard to plan the events for this coming week," Loo said. "We are really looking forward to the great programs that we having coming to campus. We are hoping for a large turn out from both the students on campus, as well as the Manhattan community."

DONATE AN INSTRUMENT!

Do you have an old trumpet or flute gathering dust in your basement? Your years in band may be over, but for many children they're just beginning. Donate your old instrument to be used by a child in the Manhattan community who can't afford one. Your generosity can bring the gift of music to a needy child!

K-State basketball coach Jim Wooldridge answers questions following the Wildcat's 73-65 loss to Texas Tech.

COACH | Weiser to begin search for Wooldridge's replacement soon

new coach.

"We believe that there is a solid foundation in place," Weiser said. "We have good young talent in this program, and we believe that Kansas State is an attractive coaching opportunity for the right candidate."

Weiser said he wants to hire a new coach "as soon as possible," but his first responsibility is toward the university and the student athletes.

"We'll move as quickly as we can, but unlike the football search, perhaps we do have a little more flexibility," Weiser said. "We are not going to hurry and make a mistake."

Wooldridge, usually quite animated during games, was expressionless for the majority of Thursday's contest.

About five minutes after the loss, Weiser and Wooldridge walked from K-State's locker room across the hall to a different room to discuss Wooldridge's future.

Weiser emerged 12 minutes later and walked away, while Wooldridge remained hidden from the media for 10 more minutes.

After Wooldridge removed his neck brace and came into the hallway, he was surrounded by reporters and walked straight to the post-game press conference to answer questions – most of which centered around his future.

At the press conference, Wooldridge avoided the details of his meeting with Weiser, but it was clear he had just coached his last game at K-State.

"I'm feeling fine, I really am," Wooldridge said after the press conference. "I think a lot of our program. I think a lot of the people who have invested in the program, and the kids.

"I've got a great deal of pride in it – great deal of pride. I wish we would have come down here and won the ballgame today. That would have been a great way to keep moving, but it didn't happen."

In six years as K-State's coach, Wooldridge compiled an overall record of 83-90 (.480), including two winning seasons in 2004-05 and 2005-06. He said he does not have any regrets, but wishes he could have helped K-State win more games.

"Just good enough to get to the threshold but not quite good enough to get over it," Wooldridge said. "That's disappointing – I don't know that I'd say regretful, but disappointing. You get that close, but it would be great if you could get over it."

After answering questions for about 15 minutes, Wooldridge went back to the team hotel and broke the news to his players.

After the game, when sophomore guard David Hoskins was asked if he thought Wooldridge would remain as K-State's coach, he said "of course."

"That is the coach who recruited me, so that is the coach I expect to see next year," Hoskins said.

PARKS | Artist documented life on K-State campus in photographs different government agencies in the early 1940s, and joined Life Magazine toward the end of the decade. It was with this magazine that he would do some of his greatest work.

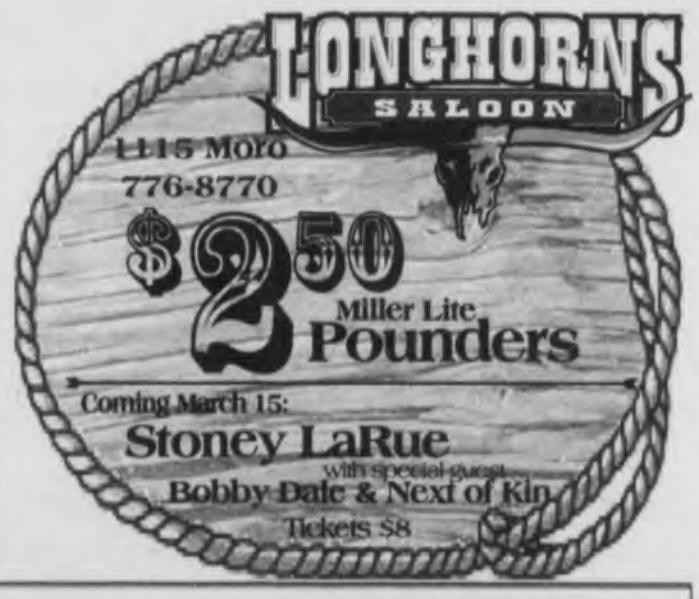
Parks said on multiple occasions that he considered his camera to be a weapon, one he could use to fight racism. Much of his work focused on working-class African Americans; many say his work is said to express the dignity of his subjects, no matter how poor or destitute.

Fort Scott left Parks with many painful memories of racism, but he returned many times to document the city and took trips to other parts of the state to do the same. He also filmed 1969's "The Learning Tree" in Kansas, a film adaptation of his autobiographical novel.

Parks directed more films, including "Shaft," which told the story an African American detective played by Richard Roundtree and paved the way for many for many more films that focused on African Americans.

He composed "Martin," a ballet to honor Martin Luther King Jr. and authored several books during his life both fiction and non-fiction.



"I thought he was a man who overcame extreme circumstances to excel," Parks' great-nephew David Cooksey said from his home in Wichita. "He opened the door for the status quo to be broken."

Cooksey said Parks will be buried in Fort Scott. Where Parks' parents and several relatives also are buried, and he'd expressed a desire in recent years to be buried in Kansas.

Parks visited K-State and Manhattan several times, taking pictures and teaching students and teachers lessons he'd learned in his time here. Pat Patton, research specialist for University Archives, said he captured many images on campus and around the city, including many in the Beecher Bible and Rifle Church.

In 1973, Parks donated a collection of 121 prints of some of his best work to the school, including "Mrs. Jefferson." He also made a donation to what is now the Manhattan Arts Center, both are in the Beach Museum of Art.

The portrait of Lucy Jefferson is the only piece of Parks' work on display in the museum. Katherine Schlageck, supervisor of Education and Public Programs at the museum, said the rest is secured in shipping crates in preparation for a move made necessary by work being done to the museum.

Professor arrested on stalking charges

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State psychology professor was arrested Thursday on charges of stalking a former member of the K-State track and field team and violating a protective order.

John Uhlarik, 63, was arrested at about 11 a.m. Thursday at his home, 2340 Park Drive. He was arrested on reports of continual intentional, malicious and repeated following or harassing of the victim, according to a release by the Riley County Police Department.

RCPD officers also served a search warrant at Uhlarik's home.

The protective order dates back to 2004 when Uhlarik was arrested for stalking the same victim at Ahearn Field House.

After the incident in 2004, Uhlarik was suspended with pay from teaching his classes at K-State for the remainder of spring 2004.

Stephen White, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said the university is aware of the situation.

"We are assessing the situation and monitoring it as well," he said.

White would not comment on whether Uhlarik would be suspended again.

Uhlarik's bond was set at $5,000.

St. Patrick's Day parade draws more than 1,000 to Aggieville

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Green was the color of the day in Aggieville as everyone from children to family pets enjoyed the 28th annual St. Patrick's Day Celebration.

From people with green-dyed hair to pets with green food coloring on their fur, more than 1,000 people lined the streets Saturday to watch the parade and show their St. Patrick's Day spirit.

The parade was sponsored by the Aggieville Business Association.

Dogs were a popular parade feature, whether participating in it with their owners or merely watching events from the sidelines.

One dog, Gypsy, wore a bright green sweater with the words "Sniff me, I'm Irish" on it.

Gypsy's owners, Cristi Cantrell, junior in apparel, marketing and design, and Paul Watts, Manhattan resident, stood outside Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, 1211 Moro St., to watch the parade.

"The kids love her, and she loves kids," Cantrell said of her dog.

The parade began with children lining the streets to get the best position for the candy and other items thrown by some of the parade participants.

KinderCare Learning Centers, Wamego Dutch Mill, the Junction City-Fort Riley Mini-Wheels Shrine Club and St. Joseph Senior Village were some of the participants.

Yard Art Classics, a collection of antique cars, including a 1958 Chevy Impala and a 1960s model Ford Mustang, was a popular parade entry.

Another popular entry was the 1971 Seagrave model fire truck from the Woodstock Fire Department in Woodstock, Va.

Driven by John Stamey, volunteer firefighter for the Riley County Fire Department, and Doug Messer, firefighter for Riley County Fire Department, the fire truck was a fully-functioning vehicle when it was purchased, Stamey said.

"It was operational as a firetruck six months before we bought it," Stamey said.

The truck has required regular repairs, but no major work, he said.

The truck isn't used to fight fires, Messer said, except when on other vehicles are available.

"Only when there's nothing else," Messer said.

When the parade ended and participants were back in City Park, a 1-year-old Saint Bernard puppy became the center of attention for some.

Josh Livingston, left, and Tyler Marty, both residents of Columbia, Mo., rest on the sidewalk along Moro Street after watching the St. Patrick's Day parade on Saturday. (Collegian note: Photo altered to delete obscenity.)

Weighing 125 pounds, Chewbacca, or "Chewie" as its owner called it, drew children and adults alike.

Chewie's owner is K-State graduate Nathan Jacobs, who attended the parade.

"She's got it down to where she knows to sit down and lay down, and she'll get her belly rubbed," Jacobs said.

While Chewie had up to six people petting her at one time, one boy couldn't stay away.

Miguel Martinez, the 2-year-old son of Robert and Jennifer Martinez, tried to follow Chewie when Jacobs started to leave.

"He wants to go home with that dog," his mother said.

Halls have drinking codes

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Housing and Dining Services has a firm policy on drinking in the residence halls, as well as large consequences if students are caught.

Derek Jackson, assistant director of Housing and Dining, said no students under the age of 21 can drink in the residence halls.

"If you are caught with alcohol you might go through ABC, which is an alcohol behavioral program," he said. "The judicial process taken all depends on the circumstances, and then consequences will be determined."

Jackson said students rarely repeat the offense after they have gone through the Hall Governing Board.

"I think since there are rare repeats of the offenses, that really shows that we have a good judicial system and it works," he said.

Jackson said there are long-term consequences, like being asked to leave and the financial burden. If students are asked to leave the hall, they still must pay the residence fees.

Jackson said there are about 3,800 students who live in the residence halls and fewer than 100 go through the judicial system for Tradition. Education. Global. Imaginative.

These are the Community Cornerstones of the Jardine Apartment Complex.

The Jardine staff asked its present and former residents and staff what Jardine meant to them, and the cornerstones are the common characteristics.

Jardine is on schedule with its 10-year redevelopment that will cost more than $100 million and will give its residents more housing options and a sense of community.

Architects, designers and activity planners will be using the cornerstones as a guide.

"As students live with us, we're going to design everything based on those cornerstones," said Deborah Kohl, coordinator for community development for Housing and Dining Services.

Funding for this project came from bonds issued by the Kansas Development Finance Authority and private contributions. K-State Housing and Dining Services does not receive funding from state, city or local governments or the university. The residents' current rent will not be affected by the renovation.

Jardine was built in 1957, and its renovation began in spring 2005 with the residents' relocation from buildings A, B and C, which were demolished in fall 2005. The

7 things you didn't know 7 days ago

Wooldridge relieved of coaching duties

DALLAS – Director of Athletics Tim Weiser announced men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge will not return as K-State's coach next season following the Wildcats' 73-65 loss to Texas Tech in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament.

Weiser said Wooldridge needed to get the team into the NCAA Tournament in order to keep his job. By finishing 15-13, that wasn't going to happen.

"The expectations were pretty clear," Weiser said. "We wanted to be in the NCAA Tournament."

ABU GHRAIB PRISON TO CLOSE

BAGHDAD, Iraq – The U.S. military will close Abu Ghraib prison, probably within three months, and transfer some 4,500 prisoners to other jails in Iraq, a military spokesman in Iraq said Thursday.

However, a Department of Defense official in Washington disputed that claim, according to NBC News, and said the spokesman's remarks had been misinterpreted.

ARMY TO INVESTIGATE TILLMAN DEATH

WASHINGTON – The Army said Saturday it will launch a criminal investigation into the April 2004 death of Pat Tillman, the former professional football player who was shot to death by fellow soldiers in Afghanistan in what previous Army reviews had concluded was an accidental shooting.

Col. Joseph Curtin, an Army spokesman, said the Defense Department office of inspector general had reviewed the matter at the Army's request and concluded that a criminal probe was warranted.

AT&T BUYS BELLSOUTH

AT&T announced an agreement to buy BellSouth for $67 billion. AT&T currently owns 60 percent of Cingular, the No. 1 wireless carrier, while BellSouth owns the remaining 40 percent. As part of the deal, AT&T would assume full control of Cingular.

The merger will streamline the ownership and operations of Cingular Wireless. The new company will be more innovative, nimble and efficient, providing benefits to customers by combining the Cingular, BellSouth and AT&T networks into a single fully integrated wireless and wireline Internet Protocol network offering a full range of advanced solutions.

WASHBURN SCULPTURE TO STAY

TOPEKA – A legal battle ended over Washburn University's display of a sculpture that offended some Roman Catholics, who said it had a phallic appearance.

The U.S. Supreme Court refused March 6 to consider a legal challenge filed by a faculty member and student at the university.

The decision let stand a 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling that said Washburn did not violate the challengers' rights.

PHOTOGRAPHER, FILMMAKER PARKS DIES

NEW YORK – Gordon Parks, who captured the struggles and triumphs of black America as a photographer for Life magazine and then became Hollywood's first major black director with "The Learning Tree" and the hit "Shaft," died Tuesday, a family member said. He was 93.

Parks, who also wrote fiction and was an accomplished composer, died in New York, his nephew, Charles Parks, said in a telephone interview from Lawrence.

Parks covered everything from fashion to politics to sports during his 20 years at Life, from 1948 to 1968.

HEART ATTACK BLAMED FOR MILOSEVIC DEATH

THE HAGUE, Netherlands – Preliminary autopsy results indicate that former Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic died of a heart attack, a spokeswoman for the U.N. war crimes tribunal said Sunday.

Two pathologists from Belgrade attended the procedure and gave the tribunal a summary, said spokeswoman Alexandra Milenov.

Still, she stressed, the cause of death was preliminary, and a toxicology report would still be carried out.

Milosevic was found dead Saturday in his cell. The remains will be released to his family Monday, she said.

Storms rip through Kansas

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE – A storm system swept through northeast Kansas and northwest Missouri Sunday, carrying winds that knocked over airplanes at the downtown Kansas City airport and ripped roofs off homes, businesses, the University of Kansas buildings and the Great Wolf Lodge Indoor Water Park.

The storm came on the heels of a powerful system that ripped through southern Missouri and southern Illinois overnight, killing a married couple whose car was blown off the road and destroying homes along a path of more than 20 miles, officials said.

Emergency management officials reported no deaths or injuries from the storms later Sunday.

The National Weather Service had not confirmed whether the thunderstorm was a tornado, but several weather spotters reported tornadoes to area television stations.

The storm knocked out the warning sirens in Douglas County, prompting police to take to the streets to warn residents to prepare for the next expected storm system.

The third storm system popped up Sunday afternoon, with hail – some up to baseball size – reported in several northwest Missouri counties including Clay, Ray, Cass, Bates and Linn counties. Preliminary reports indicated more trees down, roofs damaged and power outages, but no injuries or severe damage.

A spokeswoman for the Kansas Adjutant General's office said emergency management officials declared Douglas County a local disaster after the storm hit Lawrence and the surrounding area at about 8 a.m. Sunday.

The University of Kansas campus was littered with trees, roof tiles and window glass after several buildings, including Anschutz Library and the chancellor's residence were damaged, said Joy Moser, a spokeswoman for the Kansas Adjutant General's Department.

The roof of the nondenominational Danforth Chapel was nearly completely torn off.

The university canceled Monday's classes to clean up the damage. Sixty percent of campus buildings were damaged, the university said in a news release. Only emergency personnel were asked to report for work Monday. Classes and normal operations would resume on Tuesday.

The storm also left damage across Lawrence, with awnings and roofs destroyed all along Massachusetts Street, the main street through downtown. A building that houses a T-shirt company east of downtown Lawrence collapsed, and spires were blown off the top of Plymouth Congregational Church, one of the oldest churches in the city.

James Patterson, 23, was asleep in his upstairs apartment when a sudden drop in pressure woke him about 8 a.m.

"It felt like I was in the tornado, if that's what it was," he said.

In a small trailer court in north Lawrence, Rhonda Burns was trying to figure out how to recover after two trees fell through her trailer early Sunday. She said her cousin was walking from one end of the trailer when the trees came through, missing her bedroom by inches.

"If the wind had shifted that tree just a few inches, I wouldn't be talking to you," said Burns, who said she and her cousin had been homeless before moving into the trailer.

"We get a free week in a hotel; then I guess we're homeless again," she said.

Severe damage also was reported Sunday morning in Wyandotte County, where winds sucked off part of the roof at the Great Wolf Lodge water resort, tore roofs off numerous homes and blew windows out of the Indian Springs Shopping Mall in Kansas City, Kansas.

Russell Archuleta, general manager of the lodge, said half of the skylight was gone, but no guests or employees were injured.

At Kansas City International Airport, the storm lifted a cargo container off the airfield and blew it into several vehicles, said spokesman Joe McBride. But only one Southwest Airlines flight was delayed during the hail storm, and the power went off briefly in Terminal A.

At the Charles B. Wheeler Downtown Airport, McBride said several private airplanes parked inside a hangar were damaged when gusts blew off the structure's door.

"There was damage of aircraft out on the airfield, too. They were tied down and some of them spun around," said McBride.

K-State fans must show patience... again

By the end of the academic year, Athletics Director Tim Weiser will have earned his pay.

In November and into early December, Weiser was charged with finding a replacement for K-State football coach Bill Snyder, who retired after 17 incredible seasons at the helm of the Wildcat football program.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Weiser hired Virginia offensive coordinator Ron Prince as the man to replace Snyder, who is a lock for the college football hall of fame.

From all indications, the hiring of Prince has been as good as any K-State fan could have hoped.

Weiser is now charged with hiring a new men's basketball coach after the dismissal of Jim Wooldridge following Thursday's 73-65 loss to Texas Tech in the Big 12 Tournament.

Replacing Wooldridge doesn't hold quite the same weight as replacing Snyder, but it is still a huge decision, as there is a rich basketball tradition at K-State despite a recent slump.

Of course, there will be speculation as to who will be the next leader of the basketball Wildcats, but just like the football coaching search, K-State fans must have patience and let Weiser do his job.

Weiser has said it will be at least two weeks before a new coach is announced. Until then, K-State fans should be hopeful Weiser hires a coach of the quality that Prince has proven to be thus far.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

To be good or to stray

The reason being good never seemed so bad

ANNETTE LAWLESS

I am a good girl.

From being a Girl Scout and a Girls State delegate to being active in my church and everything else in-between, I have learned one solid lesson in life – honesty is always the best policy. Through my experiences, however, being a good girl is not as easy as it seems.

Ever since we were little, life has thrown us thousands of temptations, whether it be to steal, to cheat on our homework or even to tell a simple lie.

For those who have been bad, they are fully aware of the consequences. When you steal, you go to jail. When you cheat on your homework, you get an "F." And when you lie, well, you're bound to lose someone's trust.

Despite these consequences, people continue to steal, cheat and lie. But why?

In regards to Daniel Kirksey's column, I think we all understand his message. Evil does exist in our society. But to be quite honest, it is not necessary to sacrifice our morals.

We all should be good boys and girls at heart.

When I worked in Washington, D.C., last year, I realized how many people lack true morals.

I worked with 14 interns from around the world, but most of them were from the East Coast. Most fell under one category – they were a bunch of liars.

They cheated on their significant others, their work and their money reports. But as these 14 people were cheating on just about anything around them, I think the people they ended up cheating the most were themselves.

This cheating, this form of evil, had extreme consequences for them. Their bad-to-the-bone attitude was contagious. Once they started cheating, they really couldn't stop.

I was stereotyped as that nice girl from Kansas – strong in my morals and religious at heart.

One night, a handful of interns broke the rules – they partied, and I mean partied, at an event with several high school students. My roommate and I were chaperones that night. We had never been more disgusted in our lives.

Here we were, working for a national civic-leadership organization, and my co-workers were partying like they were on a tacky Jerry Springer episode. Dancing provocatively and drinking was one thing, but to be doing that in front of minors was a bit much.

After that my roommate and I confronted our employers and co-workers. We demanded that we stop sacrificing our morals and start playing by the rules. Evil, in this case being ridiculously drunken fools, was not necessary.

At that point, the party interns should have been fired. But they weren't, and our employers gave them a second chance.

It was here that our core of interns was divided. I considered the response to be much like a reality TV episode – a little too overdramatic for my taste. We had the evil team and the good team. My roommate and I became intern outcasts, as others saw us as the tattle-tales of the bunch.

While the last few weeks of my job were unbearable, I became a much stronger person – I realized the value of honesty.

Does stealing, cheating and lying really get people where they need to be in our world? If people didn't steal, maybe the price for things at the department store wouldn't be so high. If they didn't cheat, maybe our teachers wouldn't be so hesitant to offer extra credit. And if they didn't lie, just maybe we all could trust the rest of the world.

Through an idealistic society – and yes, I do believe it is achievable – we wouldn't have to worry about trust. Trust would be a part of our everyday lives, and evil would become a tale we'd tell our children on Halloween night.

In Washington, at first, honesty seemed to have no benefits. People stereotyped me, and eventually shunned my roommate and me. Those people knew I was a strong and reliable woman. I chose not to sacrifice my morals just to fit in. Evil was not a necessity, and it never should be.

Through that hard experience, I learned how to be honest with others and, more importantly, to be honest with myself.

Being good never seemed so bad. But more than the recommendations I received or the relationships I built through this experience, that was the most important thing I achieved in one of the most competitive cities in the nation.

Honesty may not seem like the best policy, but it undoubtedly is the better policy.

Evil necessary to give humanity salvation

DANIEL KIRKSEY

The Bible is a multifaceted maze of complexities and seeming paradoxes that one must endlessly contemplate to distill the profundities contained therein.

It is the book of misunderstanding for humankind.

What has interested me most lately is the story of Judas Iscariot: The betrayer of Christ with his diabolic kiss. I cannot help but think his actions give us more insight into the way our world works than we often realize.

Christ had to be crucified as a sacrifice for the ills of humankind; this is the cornerstone of Christianity and its only offered road to perfection. This means explicitly then that, at some point in time, someone had to betray Christ.

In a larger context this says evil was, beyond a shadow of a doubt, absolutely necessary for the good of humankind.

An important question raised, then, is one of free will. If Christ had to be betrayed to save humanity, did we have a choice in whether or not to do it?

Few would argue Judas was forced to betray Christ – he proposed the offer himself. But what about the next person? Would he or she have had a choice in the matter?

Picture God conversing with every human a few days before the betrayal. If He wanted to save humankind, it does not seem out of place for Him to have said someone must betray Christ.

I can only half admit each person would have had a choice in the matter in this situation. What God would have, essentially, been saying is, "Either all of you suffer eternal absence from my presence when you die or just one of you – but someone will.

In a world of a finite number of people, someone (presumably the last person asked) did not have a choice in offering that diabolic kiss to save humanity; Christ could not crucify himself.

This implies a world that cannot function for the good of "everyone" and "each one" simultaneously.

Judas Iscariot at least partially explains war, pain, suffering and a million other negative subjects. I'll admit it doesn't tell us why we need these things, but it at least tells us we do indeed have them, which is a start.

The problem that comes with a realization like this is the human tendency to try to rationalize its own evil behavior.

Judas might have easily said, "If it has to be done, what's wrong with doing it? I might as well make a shekel or two in the process."

C.S. Lewis would point out that what Judas fails to realize is, "If you do the devil's work, be prepared for his wages."

I do not want to think that my limited understanding approaches God. We might never understand why the universe unfolds the way it does, but no relief from pain comes in having a god whose mind we can understand.

Musician plays folk, jazz, blues on 4 instruments

By Owen Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Guy Davis filled the Manhattan Arts Center, 1520 Poyntz Ave., with the melodies of folk music, jazz and blues Saturday night, joking and telling stories with the audience along the way.

Davis was in Manhattan as part of the art center's Birdhouse Productions acoustic series. Saturday was Davis' second performance in Manhattan; his first Birdhouse concert was in January 2002.

Davis used four instruments in his performance Saturday: two guitars, a banjo and a harmonica. He played songs written by himself and by other blues musicians like Robert Johnson, Muddy Waters and Charles Brown.

David Kamerer, founder and director of the Birdhouse series, said Davis' music pays tribute to genres that are the bedrock of modern music.

"He worked beautifully with a very innovative approach," Kamerer said of Davis' performance, "but he brings a lot of new stuff to it, shuffling the deck and reinventing classic blues and folk music."

Kamerer said about 160 people attended, and he said Davis kept the audience involved in the performance.

"It's one thing to have an audience that enjoys your show, but it's even better when you enjoy the audience your playing for."

Guy Davis
MUSICIAN

"(Davis) captured the audience and showed a wide range of approach to blues, and people really respond to that," he said.

Davis said he believes he played a good show because of the enthusiasm and enjoyment of the audience.

"It's one thing to have an audience that enjoys your show, but it's even better when you enjoy the audience your playing for," Davis said of Saturday's crowd.

Alex Vickers, junior in computer science, said he enjoyed Davis' conversations and stories he shared with the audience between songs.

"I liked how he brought you into each song," Vickers said, "the way he told a story in every song and how he really showed his emotions."

Vickers said he has seen at least six other Birdhouse performances, but Davis' was one of the best. Vickers said he used to play guitar, which was one reason he enjoyed the show so much.

After Davis finished his performance, the audience cheered twice for encores. Davis said many of his selections will be on his new album "Skunk Mellow," which he said will be released in April.

Professor gives classical piano concert Friday

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Robert Edwards, professor emeritus in the Department of Music, performed classical piano pieces Friday night at the Manhattan Arts Center, 1520 Poyntz Ave.

An audience of about 50 people watched and listened as Edwards played pieces in three movements by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, Claude Debussy and Fryderyk Chopin. Edwards also performed pieces by Heitor Villa-Lobos and Enrique Granados.

Before opening his performance with the Mozart selection, Edwards said the 250th anniversary of the composer's birth is approaching this year.

"The A-minor sonata was composed in the summer of 1778 when the composer was in Paris," Edwards said of the selection. "It isn't about entertaining ... It's about tragic events. It ranks among the towering achievements of solo piano."

Edwards talked about the Debussy pieces as well, translating the meanings of the titles of the movements, which were in French, and explaining the presence of another person on the stage for those pieces.

"After I turned 60, I decided it would be perfectly fine for me to use the score," he joked about having someone turn pages for him.

Edwards' performance was well-received by the crowd, which applauded enthusiastically after each piece and gave him a standing ovation at the end of the concert.

"I thought it was wonderful," Stephanie Gorges, junior in print journalism, said. "I had Dr. Edwards as a teacher my freshman year, and I heard him play once at the All Faiths Chapel, and he was amazing."

Dick Hayter, associate dean and professor of engineering, also said he enjoyed the performance.

"Bob Edwards is just a treasure to have in Manhattan, so any chance you get to hear a talent like that is just a pleasure," Hayter said.

K-State's fate lies in Weiser's hands

MICHAEL ASHFORD

K-State Athletics Director Tim Weiser holds the fate of K-State athletics, and quite possibly the entire university, in his hands.

He has already overseen the biggest hiring at this school in 16 years by choosing former Virginia offensive coordinator Ron Prince to take over for the legendary Bill Snyder.

Weiser might have hit a grand slam by hiring Prince. Prince is taking the K-State football program into uncharted territory, from open practices to an improved Web site to a new dedication to recruiting.

But the proof is in the pudding, my friends. In other words, Prince has yet to prove he can coach. I've got my money on Prince to succeed.

Now, Weiser has to hire a men's basketball coach following the decision to fire coach Jim Wooldridge after K-State's 73-65 loss to Texas Tech in the Big 12 Tournament.

In one academic year, Weiser will have replaced the head coaches of this school's two most prominent athletic teams, and make no mistake about it, Prince's success and the new men's basketball coach's success could make or break K-State.

When Snyder was hired in 1989, he brought with him a winning attitude and a will to succeed, which, in turn, brought more than 136 wins in 16 seasons.

It also brought incredible fan support, more revenue, increased enrollment and made K-State a nationally and internationally recognized university.

On the basketball side, K-State used to be a powerhouse. Until the late 1990s, the Wildcats were a force on the national stage, appearing in 22 NCAA Tournaments, 16 Sweet Sixteens, eight Elite Eights, and four Final Fours.

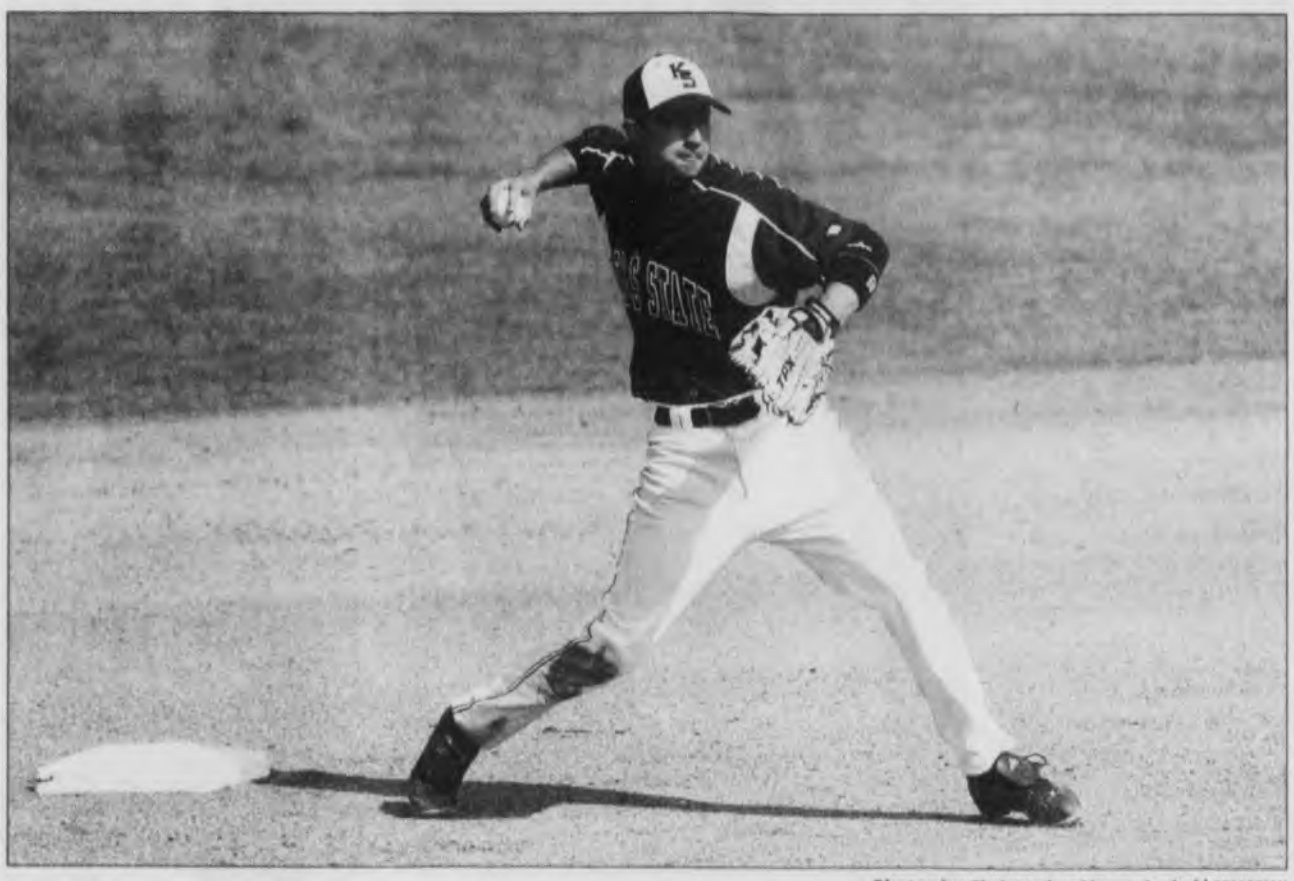
Then came Tom Asbury, who nearly drove the K-State basketball program into nonexistence.

When you know the depths to which Asbury sank the K-State basketball program to – he was fired after a pathetic 9-19 overall and 2-9 Big 12 Conference record in 1999 – you have to have a profound sense of gratitude for what Wooldridge accomplished at K-State.

Wooldridge made the K-State basketball program better, but after six seasons and numerous close losses, it was clear he wasn't the coach to get the Wildcats over the hump.

So now, K-State begins the search for another coach for a high-profile sport.

Whoever Weiser chooses as the new basketball coach must win. So must Prince. It really is that simple.



K-State's livelihood, at least on the athletic stage, depends on the success Prince and the new basketball coach have, from revenue to recognition to sponsorships.

K-State cannot afford to see the football program slip and let the basketball program continue to tread water. Not in the age of bigger, better, faster, stronger and, mostly importantly, richer college athletics.

Weiser's choices could affect the university for the next generation. I believe that Weiser and his staff know this. In fact, I know they know this. It's what they're paid to know and do.

After seeing how Weiser handled the hiring of Prince, I trust his judgment to bring another quality coach to K-State, for the sake of the fans, K-State athletics and the entire university.

Sweet sweep

3 weekend wins help Cats achieve longest win streak in two years

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The weekend was a successful one for the K-State baseball team as it swept Xavier in a three-game homestand starting Friday against the Musketeers.

Freshman Ben Hornbeck, senior Adam Cowart and sophomore Chase Bayuk each picked up wins in the weekend games as K-State (12-1) extended its current win streak to 11 games.

The streak is the longest since K-State won 11 in a row in 2004 during Brad Hill's first season as head coach. The last time the Wildcats won more than 11 games in a row was a 14-game streak between the 1911 and 1912 seasons.

Bayuk (3-0) kept Xavier scoreless for seven innings, and K-State broke open a close game with five runs in the sixth inning Sunday afternoon at Tointon Stadium.

Bayuk also scattered just two hits through seven innings to earn his third-straight win and struck out five batters with no walks in his victory.

Nine Wildcats recorded hits on the afternoon, led by freshman Tyler Link and seniors Joe Roundy and Barrett Rice's two apiece. Link and Rice both recorded home runs on the afternoon as K-State improved to 9-0 at home this season.

The Wildcats won 9-1 Saturday as Cowart (3-0) threw eight strong innings, and Roundy led a 12-hit Wildcat attack.

Cowart picked up the win after limiting Xavier to just one run on three hits over eight innings. He struck out nine and, at one point in the middle innings, retired 15 of 16 batters. Sophomore Daniel Edwards pitched a perfect ninth inning to close out the win.

Xavier's Michael Lewis (0-3) took the loss after surrendering four runs on eight hits in 7.0 innings.

The game was close until the Wildcats put it out of reach in the eighth with a two-run double from Rice and run-scoring singles from freshman Byron Wiley and junior Eli Rumler upped the lead to 8-1. Senior Brandon Farr's sacrifice fly to left field plated the game's final run as the Cats took the ending 9-1 lead.

Roundy had three hits on the day, which upped his current hitting streak to 10 games. His 2-for-4 day Sunday has his hitting streak sitting at 11 games now.

Sophomore Derek Bunker finished 1-for-4 Saturday and has recorded a hit in each of the past six games since he began leading off.

Friday was the closest game of the series, with K-State coming out on top 6-4. The Wildcats rallied for three runs in the bottom of the seventh and closer senior Bryan Peterson halted Xavier rallies in both the eighth and ninth innings.

Down 4-3 in the seventh, K-State rallied for three runs to take a 6-4 lead as pinch hitter junior Eddie Vasquez led things off with a double to left center and moved to third on a Bunker single to left.

Junior Jared Goedert just missed a grand slam to straight-away center and settled for a sacrifice fly to tie the game at four. Then an RBI-groundout by Roundy and a run-scoring single to left from Rice gave the Cats the lead at 6-4.

After Xavier put runners on second and third with one out in the eighth, Peterson relieved Hornbeck (2-0) and struck out the final two batters on seven pitches to end the inning. Hornbeck then struck out two more Musketeers in the ninth to earn his second save of the season.

Goedert finished the day 0-for-1 officially, thus snapping his career-long and current Big 12 Conference-best 15-game hitting streak.

K-State's Jared Goedert rounds third base during the fifth inning Sunday at Tointon Family Stadium. Goedert went one for three to help the Wildcats to a 9-0 win.

Smith claims national title in mile

By Chris Carpenter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior Christian Smith is just one of three Wildcats to win four All-American nods in the 101-year history of the K-State track program.

He is a national record-holder in the men's 1,000-meter run. He's the USTFCCCA Midwest Indoor Male Athlete of the Year.

And now he's a national champion. K-State's first since 1993.

"I have been thinking about this race for quite a while now," Smith said in a release. "I was just so excited when I crossed the line. All of this (the 2006 indoor season) is just beginning to sink in for me now."

The mile began with a jogging pace; none of the runners wanted to break away from the pack. During the final three laps of the eight-lap race, Smith started to lead from the pack.

Arkansas' Said Ahmed tried to stay with the Garfield, Kan., native, but Smith held on to win in 4 minutes, 12.75 seconds.

"I knew someone was going to break out from our pack. I had been blocking for the entire race, and felt I was in a good position," Smith said. "I saw the opening and went for it."

The national title is the first for K-State since Percell Gaskins won the men's high jump in 1993.

"There's very few opportunities to win championships," coach Cliff Rovelto said. "To get it done is very special. The race basically played perfectly into his hands, and he took advantage of it."

Though none of the other seven athletes the Wildcats took to nationals won their events, four of them joined Smith with All-American honors.

Senior Kyle Lancaster tied for second in the high jump with a clearance of 7 feet, 5 inches. It was Lancaster's third-straight All-American honor, making him just the eighth Wildcat in school history to earn at least three indoor All-American nods and only the fourth to do it in consecutive years.

"He [Lancaster] jumped well," Rovelto said. "That was at or near his indoor best, so he jumped well. He was calm and relaxed and stayed in control up until the end."

Senior Breanna Eveland finished in third place in the women's pole vault with a jump of 14 feet, 1 1/4 inches, making her the first female at K-State to earn two All-American honors in the pole vault.

Freshman Scott Sellers finished ninth in his nationals debut in the high jump with a height of 7 feet, 2 1/2 inches.

"Scott, I think, is our first male freshman to be an All-American," Rovelto said. "Since I started here anyway."

Senior Shunte Thomas finished ninth in the women's 400-meter dash with a time of 54.62 seconds.

With Lancaster and Smith finishing second and first, respectively, the K-State men finished in 11th place with 17 points, the highest finish for the Wildcats since 1993, when the men scored 16 points to finish in eighth place.

The women's team finished in 35th with six points, all from Eveland's third-place finish.

The outdoor track and field season will begin March 18 in Emporia, Kan., with the ESU Spring Twilight meet.

NFL | James' Arizona deal totals $11.5M in bonuses

Less than a week after coach Dennis Green declared that his team would not do any shopping in the higher-priced aisles of the free agent market, the Arizona Cardinals landed one of the highest-profile players in the entire pool on Sunday, signing former Indianapolis Colts star tailback Edgerrin James.

James

In terms of productivity and star quality, they don't get much bigger than James, a four-time Pro Bowl performer, in free agency.

In terms of compensation, contracts for tailbacks don't get much bigger than the one James signed in culminating his weekend visit with Arizona officials and coaches.

ESPN.com confirmed that the four-year contract is worth $30 million. James received an initial signing bonus of $7 million and will pocket a $4.5 million roster bonus on the seventh day of the 2006 league year, essentially the end of this week.

The base salaries in the contract are $3.25 million (for 2006), $5.25 million (2007), $5 million (2008) and $5 million (2009).

Mourning

Alonzo Mourning helped the Miami Heat earn their latest come-from-behind victory Sunday by beating the Cleveland Cavaliers, 98-92, while O'Neal was on the bench.

James scored 47 points and Wade had 35, but it was Mourning who took charge during the decisive stretch. The backup center finished with 16 points, eight rebounds and several shot-changing defensive plays in 23 minutes.

Evening with the stars

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was a feast for the senses when the stars descended and kept the audience spell-bound with more than three hours of heart-warming music.

The Society for Appreciation of Bharatiya Heritage and Art (SABHA) organized "Celestial Symphony – Music Without Boundaries," which took place Saturday evening at McCain Auditorium and involved the convergence of artists blending musical genres.

The evening began with a performance by world-renowned bamboo flutist Pt. Hariprasad Chaurasia.

"It was fantastic," said Tiruvoor Nagaraja, professor of diagnostic medicine and pathobiology. "The ambiance and the music made me forget everything and had a relaxing effect on me."

Another performer was Pt. Vijay Ghate, who won the audience's admiration with his skill on the tabla, a North Indian percussion instrument with a bass and treble drum, Nagaraja said.

"The music we played addressed all moods but had an underlying spiritual significance," Ghate said. "It takes a lot of effort to transmit the energy onto the audience. It's like magic."

The second half of the program witnessed a blitzkrieg performance, which combined jazz, Indian music and Kathak – an Indian classical dance. The artists included George Brooks, Steve Smith, Pt. Ghate, Kai Eckhardt, Fareed Haque and Kaveri Agashe.

"I have studied north Indian khayal music for years," Brooks said. "I also spent a year in India learning and experimenting with music forms."

Brooks said he started improvising with Indian music in the early 1980s and has recorded several Indian/jazz fusion albums since.

While performing with artists of diverse styles, it is important to listen and feel what's going on in your head and heart, he said.

"The music gave me a very peaceful feeling," said Tilman Schober, a post-doctoral researcher at the United States Department of Agriculture Research Service. "I was eager to learn how jazz and Indian music could be combined."

While most audience members attended the concert out of curiosity, others watched for technique.

"I play the bass, and I've listened to Kai Eckhardt," said Agul Kaul, a University of Kansas student. "I want to see how he improvises to blend into Indian classical music."

Eckhardt, who has served as a bassist for several albums and groups, said such a performance required concentration and good collective energy.

"What I hoped the music would evoke today was a connection to the universal spirit," Eckhardt said. "Something that breaks down prejudices and differences and lets people forget and get past worldly things for just a little while."

Agashe, a Fulbright Scholar who studied the fusion of jazz and Kathak at the University of California at Berkeley, said he has worked with Ghate before.

"It was a dream come true to be on stage with Pt. Chaurasia," Agashe said.

For SABHA committee members, the evening brought happiness and relief.

Faculty adviser Wayne Goins, associate professor of music, said the event was the highest quality musicianship in the world.

"The interaction between the audience and the artists was electric," he said.

Commending the president of SABHA, Goins said Jeet Sengupta's enthusiasm and motivation for the music was contagious, and his involvement assured the audience a musical extravaganza.

"We've been planning this for a year now," Sengupta said. "The past year, SABHA has been my life."

THIS WEEK... A look at events that occurred during this week in history, other bizarre holidays, happenings

TODAY National Ear Muff Day

Ear Muff Day celebrates a warm invention — the ear muff! People in cold climates can really appreciate this day. And they are ever so thankful to the person who created the ear muff. If you live in Florida, you might not even know what an ear muff is.

Ear muffs keep your ears warm and protect you from ear infections and earaches resulting from icy cold wind and weather.

It is easy to celebrate today — just wear your ear muffs.

TUESDAY 1879: Scientist Albert Einstein born

On March 14, 1879, Albert Einstein was born, the son of a Jewish electrical engineer in Ulm, Germany. Einstein's theories of special and general relativity drastically altered humanity's view of the universe, and his work in particle and energy theory helped make possible quantum mechanics and, ultimately, the atomic bomb. Einstein, one of the most creative minds in human history, died in Princeton in 1955.

WEDNESDAY 44 B.C.: The Ides of March

Gaius Julius Caesar, dictator of Rome, is stabbed to death in the Roman Senate house by 60 conspirators led by Marcus Junius Brutus and Gaius Cassius Longinus. The group of conspirators believed Caesar's death would lead to the restoration of the Roman Republic. However, Rome plunged into a fresh round of civil wars.

THURSDAY You Do Right Day

Everything You Do is Right Day just might be a perfect day. Life is filled with ups and downs.

Some days are good days.

Some days are bad days.

Most often, there's, both good and bad in any given day. You take life's ups and downs with a grain of salt.

Every once in a while, a day comes along where everything you do goes well — the perfect day!

Today is just the opposite of yesterday — Everything You Think is Wrong Day. Sure, there are more than subtle differences in interpretation and meaning of the two days. But you get the picture. Today is going to be your day — a good, errr make that great, day!

FRIDAY 1901: Paintings shown

On March 17, 1901, paintings by the late Dutch painter Vincent van Gogh were shown at the Bernheim-Jeune gallery in Paris. The 71 paintings caused a sensation across the art world. Eleven years before, while living in Auvers-sur-Oise outside Paris, van Gogh committed suicide without any notion that his work was destined to win acclaim beyond his wildest dreams. One of his paintings — the Yasuda Sunflowers — sold for just under $40 million at a Christie's auction in 1987.

K-State employee bowls 835 to beat 22-year bowling record

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kelly Umscheid, 60, bowled an 835 on March 1, breaking a bowling record set in 1984 at the K-State Student Union recreation center.

Umscheid, a Manhattan resident, has bowled for 48 years and has bowled 16 perfect games in his career. He said he owns 11 bowling balls, his favorite being the Brunswick Swamp Monster – the ball he used when he broke the record.

"This is my fourth 800 series," Umscheid said.

"This is probably the highlight of my bowling career, but the 300 I shot in Tulsa, Okla., five years ago in a tournament was pretty exciting."

From 1956 to 1957, he manually set up pins after people bowled.

"I started out working in a bowling center," Umscheid said. "I started out before they introduced automatic pin-setters."

Umscheid bowls three games a week for the Wednesday Night Sanction League in the Union recreation center. His average score in the league is 220.

"I practice probably 12 games a week on top of that," Umscheid said. "I bowl with my daughter and two of my employees who work here."

Terri Eddy, recreation manager of the Union, set the record at 812 in 1984. She said she is not bitter about her broken record.

"I am happy for him," Eddy said. "It's been a long run. When you have high scores, people get excited."

Eddy said one of the things people overlook about bowling, the No. 1 participation sport in the United States, is the skill it involves.

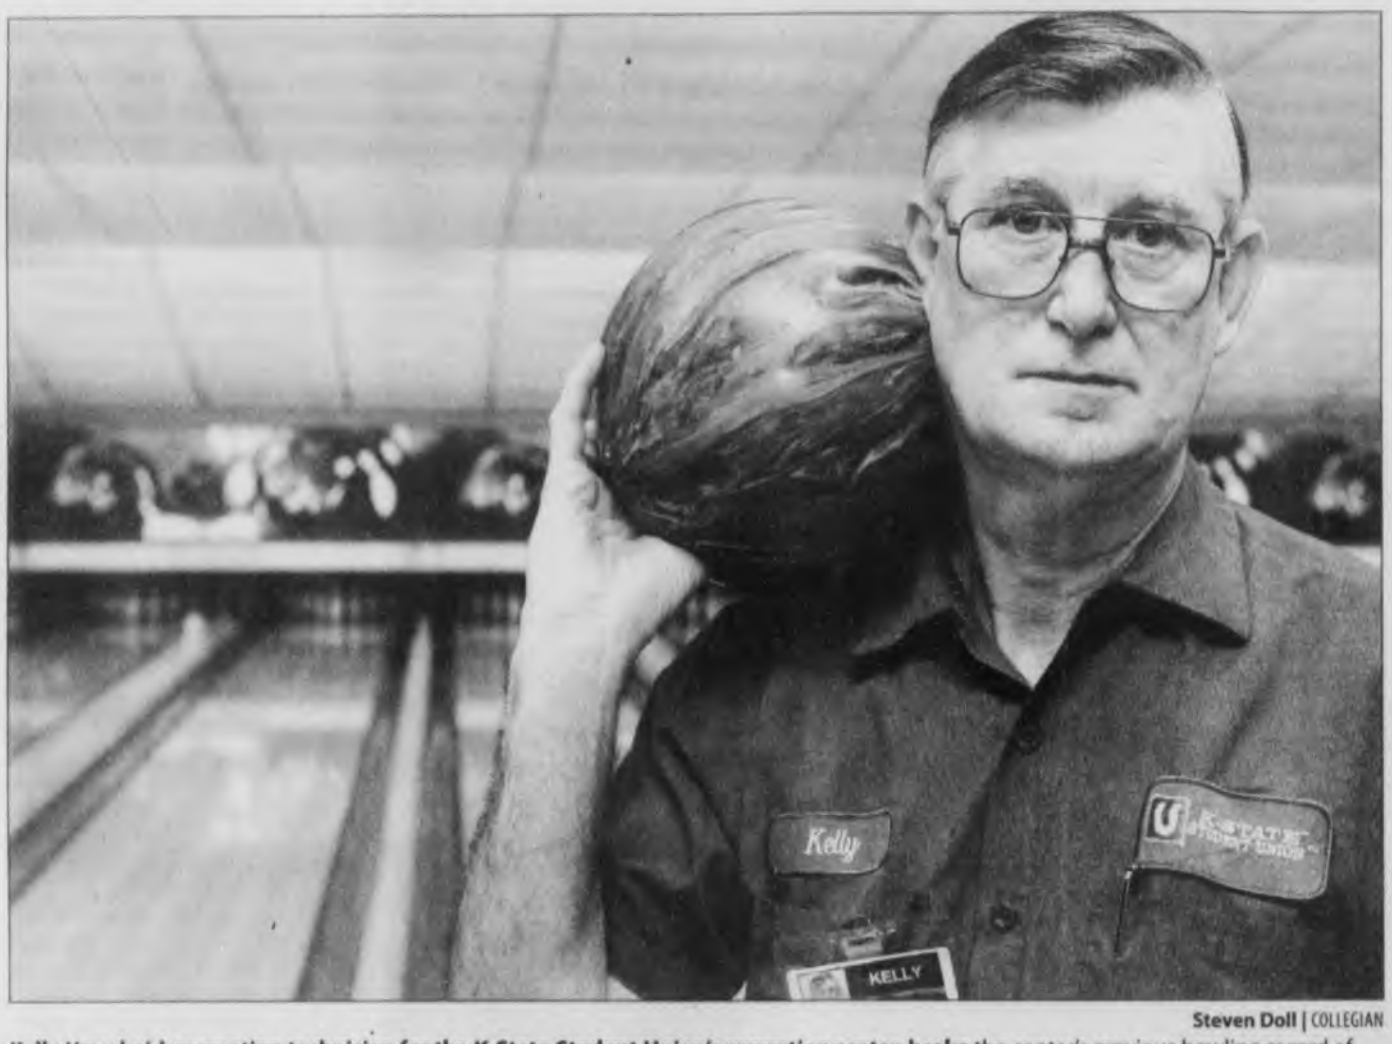
"A lot of people think anyone can be good," Eddy said. "It takes a lot of time and practice. You don't just get good overnight."

Eddy also said good bowlers have to be able to adjust to lane conditions like humidity and the number of bowlers who previously bowled on the lane.

Eddy was a member of the Tuesday Mix League in 1976-2000. She said she can no longer bowl because of arthritis in her knees.

"I still show up every Tuesday night to root my team on, even though I can't get out and do it," Eddy said.

The Union recreation center's slogan is "Where friends play together."



Eddy said she thought this was a great way to explain the joy of bowling.

"For me, it's the social point of it," Eddy said. "Especially the league, you get together once a week. You hope you bowl well, but you're spending time with your friends. To me, that's pretty important."

Lance Heller, freshman in business administration and employee at the Union recreation center, has been bowling for two and a half years. He works with Umscheid and said he was proud of Umscheid's record score.

"I don't think people realize how big of an accomplishment this really is," Heller said.

"I think it's amazing. I've heard of 800s, and those are amazing anyway. The most I've heard of was like 815, so 835 is pretty amazing."

Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN

Kelly Umscheid, recreation technician for the K-State Student Union's recreation center, broke the center's previous bowling record of 812 with a score of 835. He broke the record, set in 1984, on March 1.

Spring break getaway checklist

ANNETTE LAWLESS

One of the most important celebrations of the year has finally arrived for students – spring break.

Spring break, for many, means party time as thousands of college students head out of Kansas to a much warmer destination. Whether in Cancun, Mexico or Daytona Beach, Fla., there are several things students should consider while preparing for their week-long vacation.

Here are several spring break must-haves every student should include on their checklist.

A GOOD TAN

Although I am not an advocate of fake-baking, I do believe that getting anything resembling a tan is pretty rare for us Kansans during this time of year.

For those wanting to bust onto the beach scene and not look pasty white, I suggest getting a mist tan at a local salon. The prices average about $30 per mist, but when you hop onto the party scene, you will look like you belong.

Besides, the appearance of a good tan is an international sign of good health, according to Children, a Youth and Women's Health Service organization based in Australia.

PROTECTION

From your skin to your other unmentionables, it's important to protect your body during your spring break vacation.

More cases of rape occur during spring break than any other time in the year, according to a recent survey by the American Medical Association. Students should always carry a cell phone with them, just in case they get lost or need to contact the police.

Students also should remember their sunblock, especially those who do not want to scorch themselves while outside.

Condoms and other contraceptives also are important must-haves for this vacation. What happens during spring break stays at spring break.

A DISPOSABLE CAMERA, NOT DIGITAL

While several students might have a digital camera, I suggest bringing a disposable one instead. A digital camera is too high-dollar, and if you're on the beach or at the bar, your alcohol level might not help you remember your valuables.

Plus, a disposable camera is more spontaneous and fun. If you lose it, maybe someone else will have fun with your scandalous photos.

ITINERARY

An unplanned vacation is never a good one.

Although you might be hitting up some spring break hot-spots, research your destination and plan a little in advance. You just might find a cool restaurant or club you've heard about, or you might even stumble upon something better.

Popular travel Web sites like Travelocity.com and Expedia.com offer hotel rates, local activities and rental car fees for nearly anywhere in the United States.

Some other Internet sites, however, feature more intimate details about practically any destination imaginable. I encourage student travelers to search the Internet for more details.

CRUISING MUSIC

On the road, many students may be bored to tears as they edge closer to their spring break destination. To break the boredom, bring some fun activities along for the ride.

My family usually brings travel games, portable DVD players and other activities to keep us occupied.

Bust out an old CD and sing those tunes as you cruise out of Manhattan. Don't be ashamed of your Britney Spears or Spice Girls CD. Once you pop the CD into the player, I bet someone riding along with you also will burst into song.

For those who don't want to jump into their music past, check out Amazon.com for new releases of CDs to take with you on vacation. Recent CD releases I would bring include "In My Words" by Ne-Yo, "Live Trucker" by Kid Rock and "Chicago XXX" by Chicago. Ne-Yo and Kid Rock's CDs are already released. "Chicago XXX" will be released on March 20.

ALCOHOL

I'm sure Student Financial Assistance wouldn't like to know that some students are using their student loans to fund their annual spring break trip, but it happens.

To help budget your vacation a little better, I suggest bringing a little alcohol along for the ride. Vacation hot-spots are likely to raise their prices since they know this is the time you will pay – sometimes with no limitations – to have a good time.

Protect your savings and bring at least some of your favorite base liquors – vodka or rum – and maybe you can purchase other mixers when you get to your destination.

A DECENT AMOUNT OF CASH, A SPARE ID AND OTHER THINGS, TOO

Yes, it's a no-brainer, but every student should bring a fair amount of cash on vacation.

Be sure to bring something in which to store your sacred cash, just in case someone breaks into your room, or worse, you lose your wallet.

It's also a good idea to have a check card with you, since some stores do not accept out-of-state checks.

This way, you can get cash when you go to bars.

I also would double-check your pin number and make sure you have a way of remembering it.

Another important thing to remember is some form of identification.

A license would be most handy, but a student ID or passport are other good things to keep around.

Be sure to make a copy of your ID in case you lose it.

FLIP FLOPS

From footwear to clothing, investing in something cheap but comfortable is imperative for your spring break.

If you happen to lose your flip flops or that cute tank top, you won't have to worry because it didn't cost you a fortune.

This also will allow you to leave things behind, just in case you try to stuff your backpack with souvenirs like that hunk from the beach.

Hotel: $200. Drinks and food: $200. Having a good time on spring break and not having to stress out about money: priceless.

Spring break is an expensive event, and most students want to have a good time and not worry about money.

Katie Haller, senior in finance and president of the Student Finance Association, said students should think about how they are going to spend money in advance.

"You should lay out what you are going to spend on drinks, food, hotel, clubs and things like that," she said.

Students should have a budget ahead of time so they can save up and not run out of money while they are at their destination, she said. A good idea is to bring traveler's checks, give them to the front desk and take out a certain amount each day.

Haller said considering an all-inclusive spring break package also is an option.

Students can pay before arriving, and things already will be arranged before their trip begins.

She said American Express offers a debit card that acts like traveler's checks.

Haller said students should make sure to have a parent or a trusted friend check their bank account to confirm that all the charges are correct in case any cards are lost or stolen.

"You should plan out everything you can to the best of your ability," she said. "Having a plan is always good."

Haller said she is bringing breakfast and lunch items with her to Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and she is thinking about what kind of eating she will do and where.

Katie Dillon, sophomore in psychology, said she will be going to Panama City, Fla.

She said she will bring her debit card and maybe a little cash.

"You should try to spend your money as wisely as possible and not spend it on stupid things that you know you don't need," she said.

Dillon said such things are eating out, going to movies or shopping.

Students also should consider budgeting as early as possible in order to save a larger amount of money.

Lauren Moore, senior in horticulture, also will travel to Panama City.

She said bringing food and alcohol is a good idea because items can be more expensive in other places. Moore used Hotels.com to find a good hotel for a cheap rate, and she said her friends probably saved a couple hundred dollars.

Moore plans to put a $100 bill in an envelope and use it only for emergencies. She said students should bring both cash and a credit card for emergencies.

Moore said traveling with a large group is a good idea because students can split the cost between everyone. Moore's group decided to eat only one nice meal out during the week.

Moore said she doubts she will go to clubs because a lot of them have high cover charges.

"You just have to try and regulate as much as possible and try not to spend while you are there," she said. "My problem is shopping, but I shopped before so hopefully that will help."

Rocking out in Kansas

Shows available for students staying behind

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For those students looking for a cure to the mundane week spent in Manhattan due to lack of funding for the South Padre Island vacation, there is hope.

There are plenty of events happening in Manhattan, Topeka, Lawrence and the Kansas City area that students can attend without putting a dent in their debit cards.

"I'm staying here to get some schoolwork done and to work," Chaz Clark, junior in sociology, said.

Since a lot of students do plan to go out of town for spring break, local establishments do not plan many events.

"We don't have too much planned because a lot of people will be gone, but we will have our daily drink specials," Matt Bargabus, employee at Auntie Mae's Parlor, said.

On the other hand, some local establishments use spring break to their advantage by having events that students who stay in Manhattan can attend.

Many clubs and bars, starting Friday, are having St. Patrick's Day celebrations after the parade in Topeka.

The Boobie Trap Club in Topeka has an event scheduled every night except on Saturday during spring break, according to its Web site Boobietrapbar.com. For a listing of the spring break line-up at the Boobie Trap Club, visit www.boobietrapbar.com.

FANATIC PROMOTION, INC.

Page France recently released its sophomore album, "Hello, Dear Wind," and will perform at the Dusty Bookshelf in Aggieville on March 21.

Clark said she usually has a good time watching bands and hanging out with friends.

The band Page France will perform at 8 p.m. March 21 at the Dusty Bookshelf as a stop on its spring tour. It is promoting its latest album "Hello, Dear Wind."

This group has an eclectic blend of rock, folk and alternative styles with lyrics by Whitney McGraw, guitar and percussion from Clinton Jones and lead vocals by Michael Nau.

"Our style can be considered folk/pop, a lot of early late 60s pop and folk mixture," Nau said.

For hip hop fans, a rap concerts is scheduled in Kansas City, Mo. The group P.O.S. will perform at 9 p.m. March 20 at the Record Bar.

After students spring clean and finish watching fellow college students party on MTV's Spring Break, they can check out these local and statewide venues to kick back and hear local artists perform.

"I think people at our concerts always have a good time. We always have a fun show, and there is a lot of crowd participation," Nau said.

Spring breakers should know potential effects of UV rays

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students often tan to look their best on the beach during spring break. However, the pursuit is achieved at the cost of the skin's health and safety.

"It is important to protect the skin from sunlight because the sun causes premature aging of the skin faster than any other factor," said Tasha Staab, beauty consultant at Merle Norman Cosmetics and junior in elementary education. "The sun also dries out the skin, and skin cancer can result from overexposure."

It is important to remember that exposure to the sun doesn't occur just when tanning, Staab said. It also occurs during simple daily tasks like walking a dog or driving a car.

The sun's rays contain many components that cause skin damage.

The most dangerous of the sun's rays are ultraviolet aging (UVA) rays and ultraviolet burning (UVB) rays, she said.

"UVB rays are shorter rays that cause the short-term effects associated with sun exposure, such as increasing melanin, which causes an increase in the amount of brown pigment within the skin," she said. "UVA rays are longer rays that penetrate the skin more deeply and are largely responsible for skin aging."

UVA rays cause skin to lose elasticity and are a major cause of wrinkles. A large amount of exposure to UVA rays can result in skin cancer, Staab said.

In order to protect the skin from UV rays, Staab said it is important to use sunscreen. All sunscreens contain a certain sun protection factor that gives varying degrees of protection from the sun. The type of SPF to use depends on whether your skin type burns easily, Staab said.

"For someone with more pale skin, we would suggest a sunscreen with an SPF of 25-45," Staab said. "If your skin is darker or you don't burn as easily, you can get by with a sunscreen with a lower SPF."

When in the sun, it is important to apply a sunscreen of at least SPF 15 to the face, because the face is the most sensitive to the sun's rays, Staab said. One should reapply sunscreen every hour to hour-and-a-half of sun exposure.

After sun exposure, Staab suggested using a moisturizer to counteract the dryness caused by sun exposure.

"It is important to keep putting moisturizer on the skin when it is burned because a sunburn doesn't allow the skin to absorb moisture as well overall," Staab said. "Peeling is caused by excessive dryness.

"If the burn is severe enough or causes extreme discomfort it is important that you get treatment from a doctor."

Ashley Sanders, senior in secondary education, said she does not tan regularly, but she does enjoy soaking up rays and enjoying the weather on nice days.

"I recently participated in a five for $5 tanning special at X-Treme Tanning with a friend," Sanders said. "I don't usually go to tanning salons, but I participated recently because of the special."

An indoor tanning procedure begins with an eight- to 10-minute session and, as the tanner returns, an increased amount of time is spent in the tanning bed, Sanders said.

Most tanning salons don't allow regular lotions to be used in their studios because of the possibility of damaging the tanning beds. Instead, salons have their own lotions with special ingredients.

Sanders said she did not use those lotions in her sessions, but she said she always uses sunscreen when outside.

"I usually use a lotion with an SPF 30, but if I do, I usually get (no tan)," Sanders said. "On really nice days I like to tan outside and use a lotion with an SPF 10 so I can get a little bit of a tan on my skin."

As far as the best way to tan, Staab suggests to neither lounge outside nor use tanning beds with artificial sunlight.

"If one of our customers wants a tanned skin, we suggest lotions and tinted self-tanners that artificially darken the skin with no exposure to sunlight," Staab said. "These methods are simply much safer for the skin."

Nautical, safari styles key to this season's fashion

With beyond-gorgeous weather and spring break approaching, now is the ideal time to put some spring in your step.

I am speaking of spring fashions, of course. But before you rush to the nearest boutique, I'll let you in on some of the key trends to look for this season.

COURTNEY LAIR

GIRLS

1. Designer Diane von Furstenberg once said, "Feel like a woman; wear a dress!" As one of this spring's essentials, choose a style that can be dressed up or down. Top picks from the runway include wrap dresses, shirt dresses and 1960s babydolls.

2. Handbags this season are one of two extremes: oversized for the day or itsy-bitsy for the evening.

3. Wedges, espadrilles and platform – this spring let your footwear mantra be, "The chunkier, the better."

4. Shorts have made their big comeback – from Bermudas and linen with cargo pockets to super-short and cuffed, there are so many options you simply can't go wrong. Even denim shorts by your favorite premium denim labels – Rock and Republic, Seven for all Mankind and True Religion – are hot.

5. White is the reigning color of the season. Clad yourself from head to toe, adding splashes of color as needed. Or invest in some fabulous white accessories like an enormous handbag or a pair of chic gladiator sandals.

6. Sweet, feminine details like lace, eyelets, ruffles and embroidery are making a noticeable appearance on clothing and accessories alike.

7. One of the season's most prevalent trends is anything safari-inspired and natural. With a neutral color palette of white, ivory and tan, it is no wonder some of the hottest handbag and shoe styles come in straw, leather, wicker, raffia and wood.

8. Right now there is a huge emphasis on the waist. Show off yours with a high-waisted skirt, empire waist dress or one of the season's must-have accessories – a wide belt.

9. Solids are overrated. To spice things up a bit, choose from the abundance of bold prints ranging from tribal to tropical flowers and Pucci-esque to palm trees.

10. A fresh nautical theme is in the air, and one can never go wrong with sailor-inspired pieces featuring blue and white, horizontal stripes, rope detailing, brass buttons and gold anchor jewelry.

GUYS

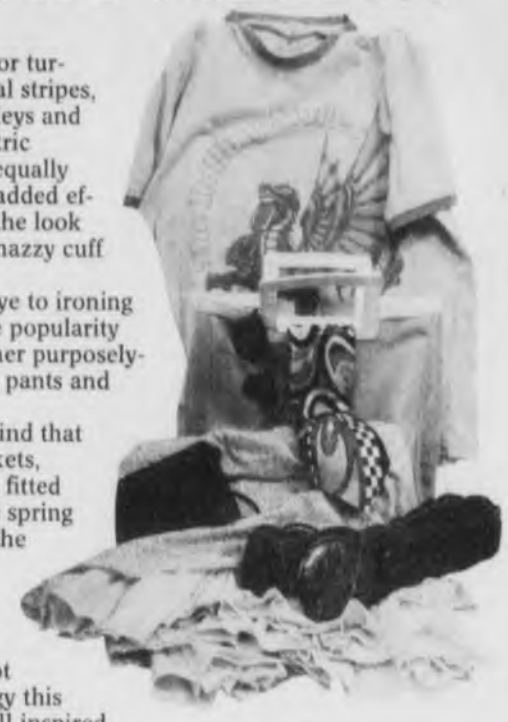
1. Aviators are the eyewear of choice this season and are available in a plethora of styles: rimless, shield, plastic frames and – who could ever forget – the original.

2. Guys, white is back and bigger than ever. From jeans, blazers and belts to flip-flops and driving moccasins, don't let this trend intimidate you! Trust me, would I ever steer you wrong?

3. Some seriously cool footwear choices include suede and leather loafers (no socks, please!), old school sneakers and leather sandals.

4. The predominantly desert-inspired color palette of white, khaki and olive is the perfect foundation for this season's popular safari-style shirts, jackets, cargo pants and shorts.

5. Gothic-inspired skulls, crossbones and crests as well as hardcore rock-'n'-roll images are making an appearance on everything from T-shirts to belt buckles. Go ahead, indulge your dark side.



6. Add a stylish sense of humor to your work wardrobe by sporting a patterned tie in a vibrant color like purple, orange or turquoise. Diagonal stripes, diamonds, paisleys and abstract geometric designs are all equally appealing. For added effect, polish off the look with a pair of snazzy cuff links.

7. Say goodbye to ironing and hello to the popularity of linen and other purposely-wrinkled shirts, pants and blazers.

8. Keep in mind that blazers and jackets, which are more fitted and shorter this spring are still two of the most versatile pieces in your wardrobe.

9. The nautical look got a little more edgy this spring, but is still inspired by classic staples – horizontal stripes, white shorts and brown leather belts and sandals.

10. Lightweight cotton sweaters make a great alternative to sweatshirts or jackets for the cooler days of spring.

Indictment sought in New York murder

By Adam Goldman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK – Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly said Sunday authorities would seek an indictment against a bouncer with a long rap sheet, the prime suspect in last month's gruesome slaying of a graduate student.

Blood found on the plastic ties used to bind Imette St. Guillen has been matched to a bouncer at the bar where she was last seen alive, the New York Police Department commissioner said.

Kelly said authorities would take that match and other evidence to a grand jury to get an indictment against Darryl Littlejohn.

He didn't give a date for when the grand jury would get the case.

Littlejohn, in custody at a Rikers Island jail on a parole violation, had not been arrested in connection with St. Guillen's death as of Sunday afternoon.

The 41-year-old maintains his innocence. His attorney, Kevin O'Donnell, has said the parolee "feels like a scapegoat" and is "upset" because his picture has been published in newspapers across the country.

Littlejohn was a bouncer at The Falls bar, where the manager has told police he ordered him to escort the woman out when she stayed sipping a drink past the 4 a.m. closing time; he recalled hearing the pair arguing before they disappeared through a side door.

Sometime during the next 17 hours, the student at John Jay College of Criminal Justice in Manhattan was raped, strangled and suffocated.

Her naked and bound body was found in a remote section of Brooklyn on Feb. 25 with a sock stuffed in her mouth and her head wrapped with packaging tape.

Kelly said the plastic ties were used to bind the 24-year-old's hands behind her back. He wouldn't comment on how blood got onto the restraints but said, "It is a very important piece of evidence for us."

Kelly said witnesses also reported seeing Littlejohn and St. Guillen leaving the bar together and records put his cell phone near where her body was found.

A St. Guillen family spokesman did not have a comment about the case on Sunday.

Records show Littlejohn's first brush with the law came at age 17, when he robbed someone with a shotgun.

Over the years, he was convicted on drug and gun charges using names like Darryl Banks, John Handsome and Jonathan Blaze – the name of a comic book character.

His aunt Addie Harris has defended him publicly in the St. Guillen case, arguing, "Many people have a record, but that doesn't mean he committed that type of crime."

Littlejohn shouldn't have been working at the bar St. Guillen visited because the job kept him out past his 9 p.m. parole curfew.

New Venezuelan flag revealed

By Ian James
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CARACAS, Venezuela – Venezuela's president raised a new national flag Sunday with changes that he said pay tribute to the independence hero Simon Bolivar, drawing criticism from opponents who called it an egotistical political stunt.

The flag proposed by President Hugo Chavez features a white horse galloping left instead of right, an additional star, a bow and arrow representing Venezuela's indigenous people and a machete to represent the labor of workers, among other changes.

Chavez raised the new flag in a ceremony that was followed by a parade of thousands of soldiers and supporters, while his opponents held a smaller march to protest the new flag and coat of arms.

"The white horse is now liberated, free, vigorous, trotting toward the left, representing the return of Bolivar and his dream," Chavez said.

The Venezuelan president, who is leading what he calls a "Bolivarian Revolution" to install socialism and help the poor, hoisted the flag, applauded and smiled as soldiers stood at attention during an outdoor ceremony on the 200th anniversary of Venezuela's tricolor flag.

Critics call the changes a waste of money. The new flag and coat of arms will eventually be adopted in the currency, passports and government documents.

"It's a whim of the president," said Lilian Luces, 54, who marched among nearly 2,000 government opponents. Alicia Castillo, a 50-year-old fellow protester, said Chavez had succeeded in adopting "his own flag."

When several Chavez supporters hung the new flag from light posts along the protest route, some opposition marchers pulled it down. The two groups struggled over the flag, shouting, until police separated them.

Opposition protesters held the old seven-starred flag, saying it will remain their national symbol.

Many Chavez supporters arrived at the parade in government buses and formed a sea of red T-shirts and miniature flags. No official crowd estimates were available, but reporters estimated more than 20,000 people attended, including participants and observers.

Some said the opposition appears to be grasping at straws in opposing the flag changes.

"What they're trying to do is sabotage everything the president does, but they don't have any support," said Nelson Rodriguez, 43, who receives a state stipend to help administer neighborhood health programs.

Venezuela's solidly pro-Chavez National Assembly approved the new flag and coat of arms last week.

The horse in the coat of arms, which appears in the official flag's upper left corner, previously galloped right with its neck craning back the other way.

Chavez said the horse looked unnatural gazing backward, and historical drawings showed it was supposed to be running "freely to the left."

Many have suggested the horse's turnabout is simply a metaphor for Chavez's politics. He has acknowledged the political symbolism only vaguely, calling the old image an "imperial horse" drawn up by mistaken past leaders.

The government apparently did not have time to update Chavez's presidential sash, which bore the old coat of arms with the horse galloping to the right.

Chavez has displayed a penchant for changing Venezuela's national symbols since he was first elected in 1998, overseeing the drafting of a new constitution, renaming Congress the National Assembly and renaming the country itself, now the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela.

The new flag design adds an eighth star to Venezuela's yellow, blue and red flag, which since 1863 has had seven stars representing the original seven provinces that rose up against colonial Spain.

Chavez suggested the additional star to represent the early 19th-century eastern province of Guayana, which was initially loyal to Spain but then joined an independent Venezuela.

Bolivar once proposed a flag with eight stars in 1817, and it was used for several years. Chavez has called it the "Bolivarian star."

DRINKING | Residence hall staffs enforce codes drinking annually, so he doesn't see it as a problem.

If the student is more than 21 years of age, then they can drink only beer or wine coolers with less than 3.2 percent alcohol.

"If you buy it in a liquor store then you probably can't drink it in the dorms," he said. "It is usually something you can buy in a convenience store."

He said if a student sees another student with alcohol in a room, they can take a complaint to the judicial board. He said the residence staff and residential coordinators enforce the rules in the residence halls.

Stephen Pile, sophomore in mechanical engineering and a community assistant for Moore Hall, said the majority of students are caught when they try to walk in with alcohol.

"The majority of what I have seen is students who walk in and might be drunk, and we hear the bottles clank," he said.

Pile said the staff then checks the backpack or bag. If the carrier has no identification, the alcohol is confiscated.

He said if a resident assistant sees it, it is written up and passed on to the Hall Governing Board.

The maximum amount of alcohol allowed in the room of a 21-year-old is a 30-pack of "gas-station beer." The student may not drink it anywhere outside of his or her room.

Pile said consequences are determined by many factors, so every instance is different.

Carmen Richardson, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine and resident in West Hall, said she thinks the rules are fair but restrictive.

"The reason most of these rules are in place is for the safety of the student," she said. "I understand why they do it, but I think the rules for people over 21 are a little limiting."

She said if students are 21, they should be able to drink whatever they want.

Richardson said the student shouldn't get caught in their room because it should be caught at the front desk.

"It can be a hazard to the students," she said. "A low percentage of the hazard reduces risks."

JARDINE | Renovation aims to foster community

construction bid of Phase 1 is on March 21.

The complex is in Phase 1 of the two for the project. New units will be online for availability in August 2007.

"The opportunities are just endless," Kohl said.

About 1,000 students representing 55 countries line in Jardine. About 200 children, undergraduate, graduate and non-traditional students, post-doctoral researchers and staff make up the residents.

In fall 2004, the complex had a bed count of 1,288. The future plans say fall 2007 will have 1,576 and fall 2015 will have 2,144, according to a Jardine fact sheet.

"We'll get to accommodate them at a higher level," said Stephanie Bannister, assistant director of Housing and Dining apartment living.

Jardine will not occupy more than its 54 acres. Throughout the project, buildings will be demolished, replaced or renovated.

Features of the new complex will include a Town Center Plaza area around the current community center with retail and academic space.

A lake will be built on the east side of the complex and a stream will run throughout the complex into the lake. This will help solve drainage problems on Denison Avenue, according to the staff.

"The new complex will offer various styles of living," said Jim Hodges, project manager of Jardine and the further construction project. "There are neighborhoods throughout the complex with apartments and townhouses, and there will be urban spaces above the retail stores in the plaza."

Bannister said the staff would like the students to have a multitude of options.

"When we build new buildings, we want to have uniqueness in them," said Chuck Werring, assistant vice president of Housing and Dining. "When you come in the entrance way, you don't feel like it's a cookie-cutter kind of off-campus living."

Werring said a goal of the renovation is to internalize the residents and increase the opportunity to interact with each other.

For example, the current walkway goes around the complex; after the renovation, it will go through it.

"We want an ambience that serves as many cultures, students, etc. that we can accommodate," Werring said. "Everything is designed to pull people in."

Stephanie Somers, graduate student in fine arts, moved into Jardine in August 2005 and said she has noticed the importance of community at the complex.

"They seem to have a lot of things going on," Somers said. "I'm really busy personally, but they do have a lot events for people if they have time. There is a lot of diversity. It's a neat system."

Progress of the renovation along with a video of the changes and pictures of the landscape can be found at www.housing.k-state.edu/redev/jardine.

Anyone who would like to live in or help with Jardine can visit the welcome center next to the T.J. Frith Community Center in the complex.

Trial pending in stalker case

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Following his arrest on Thursday, K-State psychology professor John Uhlarik continues to be under investigation by local police.

Uhlarik was arrested on charges of stalking and violating a protective order. Uhlarik also was arrested for stalking in May of 2004, following complaints from a 1995 K-State graduate.

Following his first arrest, Uhlarik was suspended from K-State with pay during the investigation. According to an official statement from the university regarding Uhlarik's second arrest, K-State will continue to monitor the legal proceedings, and will make future determinations as they are warranted.

Capt. Gary Grubbs with the Riley County Police Department said the department received a complaint regarding Uhlarik, and following police investigation, the police department forwarded the case for prosecution review, where it was determined fit to issue a warrant for Uhlarik's arrest, based upon the evidence.

"Trial is pending," Grubbs said. "There is an ongoing investigation, and additional charges are anticipated. There are some loose ends that we're investigating, and we're anticipating that we'll be sending those complaints to the county

Renewable energy sources like ethanol are researched, developed at K-State

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ask most people what the big problems of the next few decades are going to be and you will likely hear oil, oil and oil.

The problem has increasingly come to the attention of high-level figures, and a recent U.S. Army strategic report stated, "The days of inexpensive, convenient, abundant energy sources are quickly drawing to close."

But that's where the Wildcats and Kansas farmers come in.

K-State engineers are working on ways to create chemicals similar to petroleum from natural and renewable resources – corn, soy and sorghum.

The most common derivative is known as ethanol or, alternatively, gasohol.

Ethanol can be obtained from sugars and starches in agricultural products, and can even pop up unexpectedly from fruit that's been left sitting out for too long.

Ethanol fuel is already widely marketed in a mixture known as E-10, which is 10 percent alcohol fuel blended with 90 percent gasoline, and will run in a regular gasoline engine.

One of the more recent innovations, E-85, is mixture of 85 percent ethanol with only 15 percent gasoline, but requires a flex-fuel engine.

At present, K-State is engaging in research that would not only provide a renewable source of fuel, but would also supplant other petroleum-based products such as plastics, fertilizers, construction material and a slew of other common goods, said Mary Rezac, professor and department head for the College of Chemical Engineering.

As crude oil is refined it produces a host of other goods such as lubricants, and part of the goals for K-State is to maintain the production of these products with new organic fuels.

Most of the work being done focuses on soybean oil, but is designed to be non-exclusive.

"The technology we're developing can be used in lots of different feed stocks," Rezac said.

In addition to replacement of petrochemicals, some of the research being done could help in another pioneering field of fuel-research.

"The other thing we're doing now is we continue to explore the production of hydrogen from biological feed stocks that relate to using hydrogen as a fuel for fuel cells," Rezac said.

Though adamant about her research, Rezac said the future of petro-chemical research is dependent upon more than fuels.

"In order to maintain their vitality, they're going to have incorporate other products."

On a more fundamental level, Keith Hohn, associate professor of chemical engineering, is working on total conversion from plant and animal oils and fats to hydrocarbons, which are, essentially, petroleum.

The end result would be, more or less, oil, and would eliminate the need to develop new technologies.

"We know how to handle hydrocarbons," Hohn said.

Although Hohn's research is largely fundamental at this stage, he said has high hopes for its end result.

"Our large goal is to have a biorefinery," he said.

At a biorefinery, fats and oils from plant and animal waste could be processed on a mass scale, but at the moment the chemical complexity of different compounds creates a hinderance to wide scale processing.

The number of chemical bonds, the connections between atoms and ions in a molecule, can greatly alter the processes required, Hohn said.

Offenses increase on holidays

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thirty-two people were cited for alcohol offenses over the weekend, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said.

The large number of citations were due in large part to the St. Patrick's Day celebrations on Saturday, Quintanar said.

More alcohol offenses occur on holidays such as St. Patrick's Day, resulting in people being cited for minor in possession charges, transporting of open containers, and unlawful use of a drivers license, Quintanar said.

More offenses also occur during finals week, and when the weather grows warmer, Quintanar said.

The large number of citations over the weekend was also due in part to the RCPD minors in possession team noticing loud parties and people walking while carrying alcohol, as they patrolled, Quintanar said.

"It just so happened that our MIP patrol fell on those days," Quintanar said. "Coincidence? I think not."

Licenses used to find non-paying parents

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hunters and Fishermen now must give their social security numbers when applying for licenses so the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks can locate parents who aren't paying child support.

Since the Kansas Outdoor Automated Licensing System was implemented by the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks in August 2005, the department has been working with the Department of Social and Rehabilitative Services to use SSNs collected with license applications to find parents in arrears on child support, said Chris Tymeson, chief attorney for Wildlife and Parks.

"Prior to having an automated system, there was no practical way to stop somebody who has child support arrearages," he said.

A legislative proposal suggests that submitted SSNs be matched against a list provided by SRS of people who owe child support, Mike Deines, SRS communications director, said.

Applicants are denied a license if it is discovered they have not paid child support, Tymeson said. To obtain a license, applicants in arrears must pay the money owed immediately or set up a payment plan with SRS, Deines said.

"Otherwise, your tax dollars are used to support children whose parents are out spending money to have fun when they should be paying child support," Tymeson said.

Deines said he expects the system to be effective, because other states have had success with it.

Title 42 of the United States Code, Section 666, Subsection a, Subsection 13, requires the state to collect SSNs with recreational, occupational, professional and driver's licenses, Tymeson said.

Another SRS legislative proposal suggests that the state revoke the driver's licenses of people who have not paid child support, Deines said.

To the point, Page 04
See what the editorial board has to say about the issue.

If Wildlife and Parks does not collect SSNs with license applications, it could face loss of about $32 million in federal SRS funds, Tymeson said.

Ryne Witt, junior in English, said he does not mind giving his SSN to obtain a hunting license because, in his home state of Texas, a SSN links the license to an ID number and a hunting history.

He said the system of using SSNs to track parents in child support arrears is acceptable.

"As long as case by case the person needs to pay child support, it's fine, but (only) as long as they (Wildlife and Parks) don't misuse it," Witt said.

Applicants' SSNs are not printed on their licenses, but are kept in a secure database, according to the Wildlife and Parks Web site.

Elected pair focus on platform issues, relationships

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Less than a week after being elected student body president and vice president, Lucas and Katie Maddy already have started working.

The Maddys were elected the 2006-07 student body president and vice president Wednesday night. While they have started meeting with university administrators about their three Cs platform issues of campus, career and community, Lucas said the pair is not releasing details on what platform issue they are focusing on first.

"We want to make sure we talk to everyone involved before we go in one direction or another," Lucas said.

Lucas, senior in agriculture technology management, and Katie, junior in animal science and business, had several meetings with university officials Monday, including Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco.

"We wanted to educate (Bosco) about our platform issues and also where current university administration are heading in regards to his role with the university," Lucas said.

Lucas said he and Katie will take the oath of office during Student Senate's turnover meeting April 6.

While Lucas graduates in May, he said he plans on declaring a second major in agricultural economics.

The Maddys are the second consecutive presidential pair from the College of Agriculture. Current student body president and vice president Michael Burns and Grant Groene are also agriculture majors. However, Lucas said at least 2,300 votes came from outside the College of Agriculture in Wednesday's general election.

"The fact that we've had two in a row is a testament to the College of Ag, but without differentiating where the college is.

"To be honest, it doesn't have anything to do with the College of Agriculture," Lucas said. "I think our university does a great job of voting on issues as opposed to voting on people."

Lucas said about 710 votes were cast from students in the College of Agriculture.

"The College of Agriculture is only about 2,000 people strong, so even they had all voted, it wouldn't be enough to push an election," he said.

The Maddys are the first presidential pair since 1993 to have no previous experience in Student Governing Association. When Bosco was K-State student body president in 1970-71, Lucas said he also did not have previous experience in SGA.

Bedbug problems increase with travel

GAINESVILLE, Fla. – When University of Florida students return to Gainesville, Fla., after spring break, they might bring back bedbugs and cause an infestation. Spring break tends to be the time of year when bedbug infestations are most common. They normally are transferred from place to place through luggage and other belongings, said Jeff Hertz, graduate research assistant for urban entomology.

Hertz and Philip Koehler, professor for urban entomology at UF, wrote an article on the habits of bedbugs and blood-sucking conenose, a similar insect.

Bedbugs mainly feed on human blood when people are asleep. Scratching causes sores that can become infected, but bedbugs are not known to transmit any diseases, the article states.

Hertz said the increase of infestations in the last decade might be the result of increased travel and the decrease of residual pesticide use.

Hertz recommends removing the bed linens and looking around the seam for bedbugs or their fecal droppings.

Bedbugs are about a quarter-of-an-inch long, oval, flat and have no wings. They are generally brown, but after feeding they turn dark red.

Through their research, Hertz and Koehler found that bedbugs hide in cracks and outlets; behind baseboards, wallpaper and pictures; between bed joints and slats; around the tufts of mattresses; and in bed linens during the day.

Because bedbugs often are carried by infested belongings, Hertz advises students to be particularly aware of their surroundings while on vacation, and to check their luggage when returning home.

STUDY SUPPORTS SNAP DECISIONS

BOSTON – While common knowledge has long dictated that taking extra time to make big decisions leads to the best conclusions, a new study shows people tend to make the best decisions about complex matters when they do not devote a lot of time to thinking about them.

According to the analysis, published in the February issue of Science magazine, those who make judgments without conscious deliberation yield the most satisfying results, because the mind can only process so much information at a time, and the best decisions are often instinctual.

According to four studies conducted in both laboratories and in the field by a team of Dutch researchers, people are most pleased with their complex decisions, such as what car to buy, if they are distracted and not forced to consciously consider all their options. With simple decisions, such as what towels to buy, participants were most pleased when they did devote conscious thought to the decision.

"The take-home message is that when you have to make a decision, the first step should be to get all the information necessary for the decision." Ap Dijksterhuis, the leader of the team, told BBC News.

Variety show sheds light on Asian cultures

By Kelsey Noel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students and community members attended a variety show Monday, "hearandnow," that highlighted Asian culture.

With four male and four female actors, the performance consisted of music, dance, improvisation, and storytelling.

The performance took place at K-State in recognition of Asian Heritage Month, said Colleen Loo, senior in chemical science. Loo is the president of the Asian American Student Union, one of the groups that sponsored the event.

"We were all looking forward to tonight's performance because it incorporates such a variety of things instead of one long show," Loo said. "We also think it will challenge the audience to think more deeply about diversity and minorities today, especially the Asian minority."

The show began with each actor presenting an account of their family history. They spoke about the lives of their ancestors, and told the audience of how their families came to America.

For the next hour, the actors performed several skits, including monologues, tales of childhood, and interpretive dances.

During the question-and-answer session after the show, the actors said every event they acted out was based on actual experiences of the cast members.

Matthew Schuellein, senior in English, said most of what the performers said rang true to him.

"I related to their stories – especially the heavy stuff," he said, referring to the serious issues the performers addressed. "I've had friends who have gone through the same things as they talked about. We really do deal with similar situations to theirs."

Schuellein said though he did not know what to expect from the show, he was impressed with it.

"I liked pretty much all of it," he said. "But I was thinking there would be more material from the cultural aspect, and they'd talk more about ethnically diverse issues."

Leslie Hart, freshman in mass communications, said she has attended several cultural events since she came to K-State.

"I came tonight for my anthropology class," she said. "But I've gone to several other cultural events that I wouldn't have had the chance to see had I not come to college."

Hart said she believes diversity is essential in creating a good atmosphere at K-State.

"There is a diverse group of people here, and it's important to understand others because it's helps us all get along," she said.

Radio stations playing more anti-smoking, drinking ads

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Radio stations in the Manhattan area claim that a recent increase in advertisements promoting a decrease in smoking and drinking are not the result of a specific effort.

Many students said they have noticed more of these ads on the radio recently.

"I hear them all the time on the radio," Joanna Neeley, sophomore in pre-nursing, said. "Most of them tell all of the typical bad stuff about smoking and drinking, and then give statistics to make it more real to the average person."

Kenny Titus, program director of KSDB-FM 91.9 and senior in mass communications, said he agreed there has been an increase, but it has happened naturally over time.

"There hasn't really been a specific effort to run them," Titus said. "Most of them are public service announcements, and we rotate through the ones that arrive at the station."

Titus said the ads are sponsored by the Ad Council, and by the Department of Transportation.

"I think they're coming in more heavily now because people are just trying to spread the word," Titus said.

Mark Ediger, general manager of KJCK-FM 97.5, said the station has been playing a steady number of anti-drinking advertisements for many years, but have recently been playing more anti-smoking ads.

"There hasn't really been a huge mass increase recently, but we have been playing more because there are obvious health risks to these behaviors," Ediger said.

The ads that run on 97.5 are the result of an effort by the National Association of Broadcasters, the Kansas Association of Broadcasters and individual broadcasters, he said.

Others have a different idea of why this increase occurred.

"A few years ago there was a nationwide legal arrangement where tobacco companies, such as Philip Morris, lost a lawsuit, and were required to spend money advertising the dangers of tobacco use in the states that were involved, which included Kansas," said Soontae An, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications.

An also said another factor could be the demographics associated with tobacco.

"The number of people who are smoking have decreased in many areas and groups, but not among young people and women," An said.

An said stations are required to provide time for these ads to run for free, since it is a public campaign.

"An issue with this, however, is that many times stations don't want to lose money, so they run these ads in time that is not considered 'prime time,' so it is less expensive," An said.

Ediger said his station has good intentions with running the ads.

"Our motivation is that is just the right thing to do," he said.

Display honors K-State women

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Velma L. Carlson was a bit of a rebel.

She attended K-State from 1915-1919, but didn't receive a degree because she refused to take a kitchen gardening class, which was required for women. Her counter-culture ways continued throughout her life, such as her work with Margaret Sanger promoting Planned Parenthood.

K-State students will have the opportunity to learn more about Velma, as well as other prominent women who have been associated with K-State throughout the years, by visiting the "Documenting Women" exhibit displayed outside of the university archives on the fifth floor of Hale Library.

"We had all these wonderful holdings in the university archives donated by women or about women," Tony Crawford, university archivist, said. "We thought Women's History Month would be a good time to showcase these."

Crawford said the items on display are just a sampling of what the archives have.

Crawford said there have been several important graduates from K-State who were women.

"Alice Nichols wrote 'Bleeding Kansas,' which is still an important work," he said.

According to the university archives Web site, Nichols wrote the book, which is about territorial Kansas during 1954.

Cindy Von Elling, a computer resource specialist with the special collections department, put most of the exhibit together, Crawford said.

Von Elling said she enjoyed the process of researching and putting together the display.

"I already had short biographies of some of the women on the Web," she said. "As I was going through the boxes, the more I learned about them (the women featured) the more I liked them."

Bridgette Carpenter, freshman in psychology, said she plans to visit the exhibit.

"(For my women's studies class) we can go see it for extra credit, and I think I'm going with a friend," Carpenter said.

TO THE POINT

Licensing policy is effective use of resources

Applications for recreational, professional, occupational and driver's licenses now must be accompanied by the applicant's social security number.

The SSNs collected from hunting license applications are checked against a list of parents who owe child support. Those in arrears are denied a license until they pay child support or set up a payment plan with the Department of Social and Rehabilitative Services.

This might seem like an invasion of privacy, but it is an effective use of resources by the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks. The department's Automated Licensing System, implemented in August 2005, allows for speedy matching of applicants with those owing child support and should be used for quicker licensing and to benefit Kansans.

Parents who have not paid to support their children should not be allowed to spend money on recreational activities like hunting. The health and well-being of Kansas' children must be placed above the freedom of parents to obtain licenses.

Further, when parents do not pay child support, the burden of caring for the children can fall to Kansas taxpayers, an unfair burden when the parent in arrears enjoys freedom of recreational activities.

If license applicants protest the necessity of giving their SSNs, they should make sure their records are clean, and their SSNs will not be used again after the initial check.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

Natural spending

Preparation is needed to live in wilderness

JONAS HOGG

I can't take no more; I'm going to go live in the woods – maybe start sending in my columns via smoke signal or homing pigeon.

The Konza prairie seems like a nice place.

The highfalutin' scientists that are always doing something of supposed importance are likely to come out and start fussing and carrying on, so I'll just pick up and go to another spot of the prairie, seems easy when you don't own much.

Now all that's left is to grow an impressive beard, get some birds living in it and strike up a never-ending debate with myself, and I'm sure I can get the world to just go on and let me be.

I just don't get the world anymore, it just seems full of too much stuff. You've got to have a nice car, with leather interior, and an 80-disc CD changer, and a DVD player in the seats, and a designer toothbrush holder ... Of course, one can't just up and wander off into the woods. Some dang fool hippie tried that in Alaska a few years back – set all his cash on fire and just headed off, thinking he was going to find Winnie the Pooh or some such. He found a bear alright (in all fairness, the bear probably found him), but it wasn't Winnie, and someone had to tell his folks that he'd become an hors d'oeuvre for local wildlife.

So, before I begin my grand journey to forsake modernity, I must embrace it one last time, and off to Wal-Mart I go.

Wal-Mart is a curious place, lots to see, but not much with any real use – decorative shower curtains, decorative fake plants, decorative managers. I head to the back to find something to cover my soon-to-be-natured self with – maybe they have squirrel fur.

No luck.

Aisle after aisle rolled by – bazillions of towels, dishes so fancy you only bring them out once a year, enough stuff to keep an entire population contentedly drooling. I could only find one package of squirrel fur, which wasn't my size and had a big corporate logo shaved into it like some sort of high-fashion balding.

Giving up on Wal-Mart, I decide to try one of those sports stores, the kind that spell extreme without the "E" in front and have pictures of people falling off airplanes, falling down mountains and falling out of their mind.

Next thing I know, I'm a walking mound of outdoorsy crap. New-fangledy sleeping-bag, squirrel fur (with a subdued corporate logo in bio-friendly dye), gas stove guaranteed to boil a gallon of water in three seconds, hiking boots guaranteed not to crush any bugs, and Swiss-made, carbon-fiber, Swiss-army approved canteens guaranteed to make you 80 percent more Swiss or your money back, with refunds given in Swiss Francs.

Just about the time the total went through to my credit card company I realized I'd sort of back-pedaled on the whole escape from society affair, so I threw it all down, took my Swiss Francs and headed out.

It's just no good, can't get away from all of this, even when you want to get away. Only one thing left to do ... better go find me a bear.

Materialism is the only path to happiness

MEGAN MOLITOR

I wake up in the morning on my 250-count Egyptian sheets, and nervously chew on my carefully manicured nails. Instantly, I remember what jolted me out of my slumber, and it sends a shiver throughout my body in my silk pajamas.

It was a dream, one that I pray none of you ever have to experience. I dreamed of a world of non-materialism, a world in which people depended on themselves for survival. The horrors of this came back to me, pummeling me one after another. Roughing it, making my own clothes, outdoor excursions, cleaning and cooking, bargain shopping – my heart began to pound incessantly.

I asked myself why anyone would choose to live like this. What benefits does a world lacking extravagance possibly hold for an individual?

Online shopping, credit cards with unbelievable limits that somebody else pays for, and those fantastically amazing new vibrating razors – that's what creates happiness and a fulfilling life.

No room is left in my busy schedule for such inconveniences as preparing my own meals, or an activity such as bird-watching, or whatever it is those nature lovers do. With people or appliances ever-present to do my bidding, it frees up my time so I have plenty of it left over for important up-keep tasks, such as getting my hair done or shopping for new heels. Hey, in this world, a girl has to look good.

Also, the joy and pleasure I get from doing, well, nothing, and simply taking advantage of the finer points of the lavish life make me a happier and a more calm individual. While some people in this world are rushing around, using trees as compasses, telling time by the sun and generally using precious energy, I am getting a deep tissue massage and relaxing my worries away. That is how we should live life.

What could I possibly get out of a tougher life? More character? I scoff. Character is nothing compared to fabulous shoes and a killer car, preferably with somebody else to drive me around in it. I enjoy indulging to keep myself happy, and I'm sure others would be happy as well if they knew the alternative to Happy Megan. It's not pretty.

Travel over to my side of the fence, my lovelies. All you poor souls who haven't yet discovered the magic of materialism, let me show you the way. There's more to life than tree bark and dirt, and I would love nothing more than to show you all to the path of happiness and extravagance. Once you discover it, there will be no returning. A day without lifting a finger is far superior to a day of working with all 10, plus numerous other extremities.

Mark my words, the world of lavish living and material happiness will make its return into mainstream society. In fact, I believe it is already here. So go ahead, jump on the bandwagon, give in to all those things everyone has told you that you "don't need." Personal latte makers and razor-thin cell phones await those who choose to follow me.

Professor's teaching style garners praise

By Kelsey Childress
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Steven Doll| COLLEGIAN

Michael Wesch, assistant professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, has had positive reviews from his students and other professors about his classes, which feature information he learned from the time he spent in Papua, New Guinea.

A professor in the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work is creating a lot of buzz about his classes, which have become increasingly popular during the two years he has been teaching at K-State.

"Dr. (Michael) Wesch is the greatest professor I have ever had in my 17 years of formal education, and that sentiment is echoed by many of the students he has every semester," said Kevin Champion, senior in anthropology and Spanish, and current teaching assistant for Wesch. "The amount of impact he has on students in one semester is absolutely beyond anything I have ever experienced before."

Michael Wesch, assistant professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, is teaching introduction to cultural anthropology, and special topics in anthropology, which focuses on digital media, this semester.

He is a K-State graduate who received his degree in anthropology in 1997 and then went on to graduate school at the University of Virginia.

Wesch began teaching classes at K-State in 2004, after spending about 18 months in Papua, New Guinea, where he said he researched how Western practices like education and religion can relate to the customs of the native people.

"I learned how to respect and admire people who were very different from me, and how important that respect and admiration is in order to learn something from one another," Wesch said. "I try to bring that insight into the classroom by learning everything I can about my students, showing them that I respect them and care about them, and creating a learning environment where we can all learn together."

Wesch said he is planning on returning to Papua this summer to show them film footage from 1969 to 1970 that was shot by researchers who were studying media in the country.

Wesch has created a "World Simulation" project, where students are placed into 15 to 20 small groups, and have to survive in their environment by building their own culture, as different components are discussed in class.

"Everybody in the world is profoundly interconnected," Wesch said. "Processes of globalization send products, ideas, media, money, and people everywhere throughout the world, connecting us all. This creates great promise, but also tremendous challenges. The 'World Simulation' allows me to challenge students to begin thinking about the world and our role within it."

Other professors have noticed Wesch's success.

"His teaching style, I think, is utterly unique," said Harald Prins, distinguished professor in the Department of sociology, anthropology and social work. "This is especially true for the large introduction to anthropology courses, with enrollments from 200 to 400 students. When students walk into the classroom, they are entering this simulated world and asked to find a way to survive."

Besides his work in Papua New Guinea, and with the 'World Simulation', Wesch's teaching style has gained respect from many students who claim they have learned much about anthropology from taking his class.

"Like a lighthouse, Dr. Wesch reveals, through colorful examples and real-time videos, the potential disaster of ignorance, if we refuse to understand our world and those in it with the most heartfelt compassion," Adam Bohannon, junior in anthropology, said.

"Dr. Wesch's love for anthropology radiates during his classes, and it almost has a contagious quality. I have met students who were so impacted by what he brings to the table that they are forever changed and no longer will see the world the same way.

"Dr. Wesch is the best instructor I have ever had, and I believe his efforts to be a wonderful teacher changes the world, one student at a time."

Help is given for choosing major

By Ashleigh Williams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Choosing a major might not be as easy of a task as it sounds, but with the help of the Academic Career and Information Center, students don't have to make that decision alone.

The ACIC, located at Holton Hall 14, offers a variety of services to help students not only choose a major, but also help get students on the right track for a career.

Some of the services the ACIC offers are career assessments that suggest careers to match interests, career profiles, salary information, job outlook and one-on-one career assessments.

Michelle Haupt, coordinator for the ACIC, said the center is there to help students make informed decisions.

"Many students feel as if the decision is only their responsibility," Haupt said. "Yes, it is their responsibility, but we want to help provide the most information we can to help make those decisions."

Travis Cooper, sophomore in secondary education, said the ACIC helped him find his specific interests.

"They helped me narrow down my interests, and then it was easier to pick a major based on my interests," he said.

The ACIC also works closely with Career and Employment Services, so that once students do find a major or career, they can gain experience through part-time jobs or other job opportunities.

"We help students identify careers with potential opportunities, and then students can go to CES for the next step," Haupt said.

Emily Mohr, peer assistant at the ACIC, said that because deciding on a major or career is such a big decision, students should choose something that will make them happy.

"Deciding on a major or career affects your whole life," Mohr said. "Students should pick something they are interested in, good at, and something that will make them happy. If students do something they are interested in they typically do better."

There also is a class offered by the ACIC that Mohr said students might find beneficial.

"The Academic Career Decision class tailors to a lot of different resources, helps build résumés, and conducts mock interviews," Mohr said. "These are tools students need to obtain jobs they want."

Mohr said, most of all, they want to help students enjoy their college experience.

"We want to help students find a major that fits their characteristics and enjoy their college experience," she said.

Team needs post-season experience

MATTHEW GIRARD

The K-State women's basketball team didn't make it to the NCAA Tournament for the first time since the 2000-01 season, but don't shed a tear or throw your arms up in the air – this is a good thing.

You can complain about teams who have worse records than the 19-11 Wildcats, and you can complain about the tradition of K-State being an NCAA Tournament team, but it doesn't matter.

K-State picked up a bid to the Women's National Invitational Tournament, will play at least one more home game, and this young team will gain valuable post-season experience. The Wildcats will start the tournament by playing Idaho State at home Friday.

Wildcat fans have been spoiled over the past few years with K-State teams dominated by future WNBA players, and not being in the "Big Dance" after they left was bound to happen.

All teams, consisting of mostly lower classmen, have to start somewhere.

Take the defending national champion Baylor Bears, for example.

In 2002-03 then-sophomore Steffanie Blackmon and then-freshman Sophia Young – both eventual All-Americans – used the WNIT as a springboard to lead the Bears to three-consecutive NCAA Tournament births, and the ultimate prize of being crowned the nation's best women's basketball team.

The Bears rattled off five consecutive wins over Northern Iowa, Arizona State, Fresno State, Colorado State and Auburn to capture the WNIT championship.

Baylor coach Kim Mulkey-Robertson said the WNIT experience helped her players get better, and it will do the same for the Wildcats.

"The more games you can play, the better for your young players coming back next season," Mulkey-Robertson said after Baylor's overtime win against K-State in the Big 12 Conference Tournament. "Anything I can do to help my team get better for the next year, the more games you can play, to extend it to two more weeks or however long you can play in the thing, let them play games.

"There's no substitute for playing games."

And that's exactly what K-State needs to do.

They might not be an NCAA Tournament team yet, but they are close. These Wildcats gave No. 2-seed Oklahoma and No. 3-seed Baylor all they could handle in the span of 15 days.

Playing in the WNIT should give K-State all the momentum they need to get back to the NCAA Tournament.

Trust me, when you've got a foundation of freshmen Shalee Lehning and Marlies Gipson, and you have juniors Twiggy McIntyre and Claire Coggins around for another year – K-State will be "dancing" again very soon.

Cats to make 2nd appearance in WNIT

Staff Report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The road has not quite ended for the K-State women's basketball team.

On Monday, the field for the 2006 NCAA Women's Tournament was announced, and K-State was left out.

However, later in the night, the Wildcats were asked to play in the postseason Women's National Invitation Tournament.

This is only K-State's second appearance in the WNIT, the first being in 1999 when the Wildcats lost 70-83 to Arkansas State in the second round after a first-round 71-60 win over Creighton.

"I am ecstatic about the fact that our team has played its way into the postseason WNIT," coach Deb Patterson said in a press release.

"This team has proven its ability to play to the final possessions of a game with top-10 opponents, and I could not be prouder of the improvement and competitive intensity we are bringing to the floor as such a young squad."

In Deb Patterson's 10-year tenure as K-State coach, the Wildcats have seen mid-March action seven times.

K-State (19-10) will face Idaho State (17-12) on Friday at 7 p.m in Bramlage Coliseum.

Tickets for the game go on sale today and can be purchased at the K-State Athletic Ticket Office starting at 9 a.m.

After losing to Baylor in the second round of the Big 12 Conference Tournament last week, sophomore Kimberly Dietz said the team would be excited just to continue playing, regardless of the tournament.

"We're excited for any games we have ahead of us," Dietz said.

K-State goes for 12th-straight win against Wichita State

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In 1912, the Titanic sank, Arizona and New Mexico became states and Woodrow Wilson was elected to the Oval Office.

Today, K-State's baseball team has an opportunity to win 12-straight games, a feat it has not accomplished since 1912 – 50 years before coach Brad Hill was born.

In addition to K-State's 11-game winning streak, the Cats (12-1) are off to the second-best start in school history, and own the best record in the Big 12 Conference.

As a result, No. 29 K-State finds itself in this week's Collegiate Baseball's Top 30 for the first time ever.

"I like what we're doing," Hill said. "I obviously like our pitching, and we've done the other things. We have played good defense when we've needed to, we've had clutch hitting at the right times, and when you combine those things, you end up winning a few games."

However, the Cats might have their hands full when they take on No. 19 Wichita State (17-2) at 7 tonight in Tointon Family Stadium.

The Shockers are riding a 12-game winning streak of their own – the second-longest active streak in the country, behind Florida State.

The Shockers are K-State's first ranked opponent of the season, and if the Cats can beat them, Hill said his squad would gain confidence, but it is important to keep the season in perspective.

"It's one (game) of 56," Hill said. "We need to go out and continue doing what we're doing, and not try to make a lot out of it. If we try to do extra special things and try too hard, then we are going to have failure."

K-State boasts the top three batting-average leaders in the Big 12 in senior outfielder Joe Roundy (.481), junior infielder Jared Goedert (.476) and senior outfielder Barrett Rice (.457).

Roundy, seeking to extend his career-high 11-game hit streak, said he was unaware of his status as the conference's top hitter.

"That's awesome, but I'm more impressed with our winning streak and how we are playing as a team. We are all hitting really well right now."

K-State sophomore Brad Hutt (2-0, 3.50 ERA) is slated to take the mound for the Wildcats, whose starters are Joe Roundy slides safely into second base against South Dakota State at Tointon Family Stadium.

Hutt's last start came March 6 against Eastern Illinois, when the Cats won 12-1.

He pitched seven scoreless innings, giving up two hits while striking out three.

Hutt said to be successful, he needs to concentrate on pitching his game.

"I need to hit spots, get ground balls and just let the defense work," Hutt said. "My goal is to get into the seventh (inning) and let the bullpen take over. I have a lot of confidence in (the bullpen)."

Wichita State will send freshman Aaron Shafer (3-0, 1.31 ERA) to the hill. The Shockers postponed Shafer's start so he can pitch in tonight's game.

Last year, the Wildcats swept both games against the Shockers for the first time since 1955.

However, Hill said Wichita State's squad is more experienced this season.

"Last year is last year and this year is this year," Hill said. "It doesn't hurt; I can tell you that – knowing you can beat them. But they were young last year, and right now they are playing pretty good baseball."

Wildcats slip in final round, take 6th at Hackler Invitational

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team had three out of five tournaments in the fall season where it slipped in the final round.

In the first two tournaments this spring, the Wildcats posted their best round of each tournament in the final round, but Monday at the General Jim Hackler Invitational in Murrells Inlet, S.C., the Wildcats reverted to old ways as they again slipped in the final round.

K-State fell from a tie for fourth place with Pepperdine -- after opening rounds of 299 and 290 -- into a tie for sixth with Arkansas and fellow Big 12 Conference member Texas Tech, after shooting 302 in the final round.

The Cats shot the worst final-round score of any team that placed in the top 10 of the 15-team field.

"We played a little bit better than we scored, but that's just golf," coach Tim Norris said. "It was a pretty tough day to shoot a good score, with the combination of wind and really good pin placements.

"Overall, though, Tyler (Cummins), Ben (Kern) and Robert (Streb) played pretty solid for us, we were just lacking one score today and maybe one score in that first round that might have bolstered us a little higher up in the standings."

Defending champion Rhys Davies from East Tennessee State entered the final round in familiar territory, holding the lead. He held steady, shooting par in the final round, only to get surpassed by Pepperdine's Alex Coe, who won the tournament. Coe fired a 6-under-par 210, while Davies ended with a 5-under-par 211, placing second.

East Tennessee State shot a 3-over-par 867 to win the tournament, defeating host school and defending champion Coastal Carolina, which placed second after firing a 13-over-par 877.

K-State seniors Cummins and Kern, along with freshman Streb, paced the Wildcats as they each finished in the top 22.

Cummins tied for 11th after posting a 3-over-par 219, Kern tied for 20th with a 5-over-par 221 and Streb tied for 22nd after shooting a 6-over-par 222.

Cummins' 11th place was his best finish since Oct. 3-4 at the Memphis Intercollegiate, where he tied for eighth. He said he was pleased with his performance, but he knows his team could have played better overall.

"It was good to finish sixth because of the level of competition, but being tied for fourth going into the last day and shooting another high number as a team was, overall, disappointing," Cummins said.

Freshman Joe Kinney tied for 52nd after shooting a 13-over-par 229 and senior Jonathan James took 72nd after a 22-over-par 238 to round out the Wildcats.

Even with the continued final round woes, Kern said this tournament will be a good learning experience for him and his teammates.

"I think this will be a really good confidence booster, but will still got some work to do heading into the final months of the season," Kern said.

MLB | Royals cut eight, sign right-handed pitcher

SURPRISE, Ariz. — The Kansas City Royals attempted to bolster its pitching staff on Monday, the same day the club reassigned eight of its players to the minors.

Hudson

In the market for a starting pitcher after Mark Redman had knee surgery and Zack Greinke left camp for personal reasons, the Royals signed right-hander Luke Hudson to a minor league contract with an invitation to the major league camp.

Hudson went 6-9 with a 6.38 ERA in 19 games last season with Cincinnati, starting 16 times. The 28-year-old missed all of 2003 after having shoulder surgery and missed the first two months of last season with a shoulder injury.

The eight players reassigned to the minors were: Donnie Murphy, Brian Bass, Chris Richard, Ryan Baerlocher, Angel Sanchez, Juan Cedeno, Luis Cota and Adam Donachie.

BKC | Chaney retires as Temple's basketball coach

PHILADELPHIA— John Chaney retired Monday after 24 seasons as Temple's basketball coach, ending a Hall of Fame career in which his temper sometimes got the better of him.

Chaney

The 74-year-old Chaney, a fiery sideline presence admired as much for his mentoring as his success on the court, guided Temple to five NCAA regional finals and 17 NCAA tournament appearances and was twice the national coach of the year.

This season, Temple (17-14) made the NIT for the fifth straight season, a dramatic decline from when it was an NCAA tournament regular.

NFL | Howard, former K-Stater, signs with Eagles

PHILADELPHIA — When defensive end Darren Howard lifted up his Eagles jersey for the first time, it was a symbol of patience paying off for the Philadelphia Eagles.

Howard

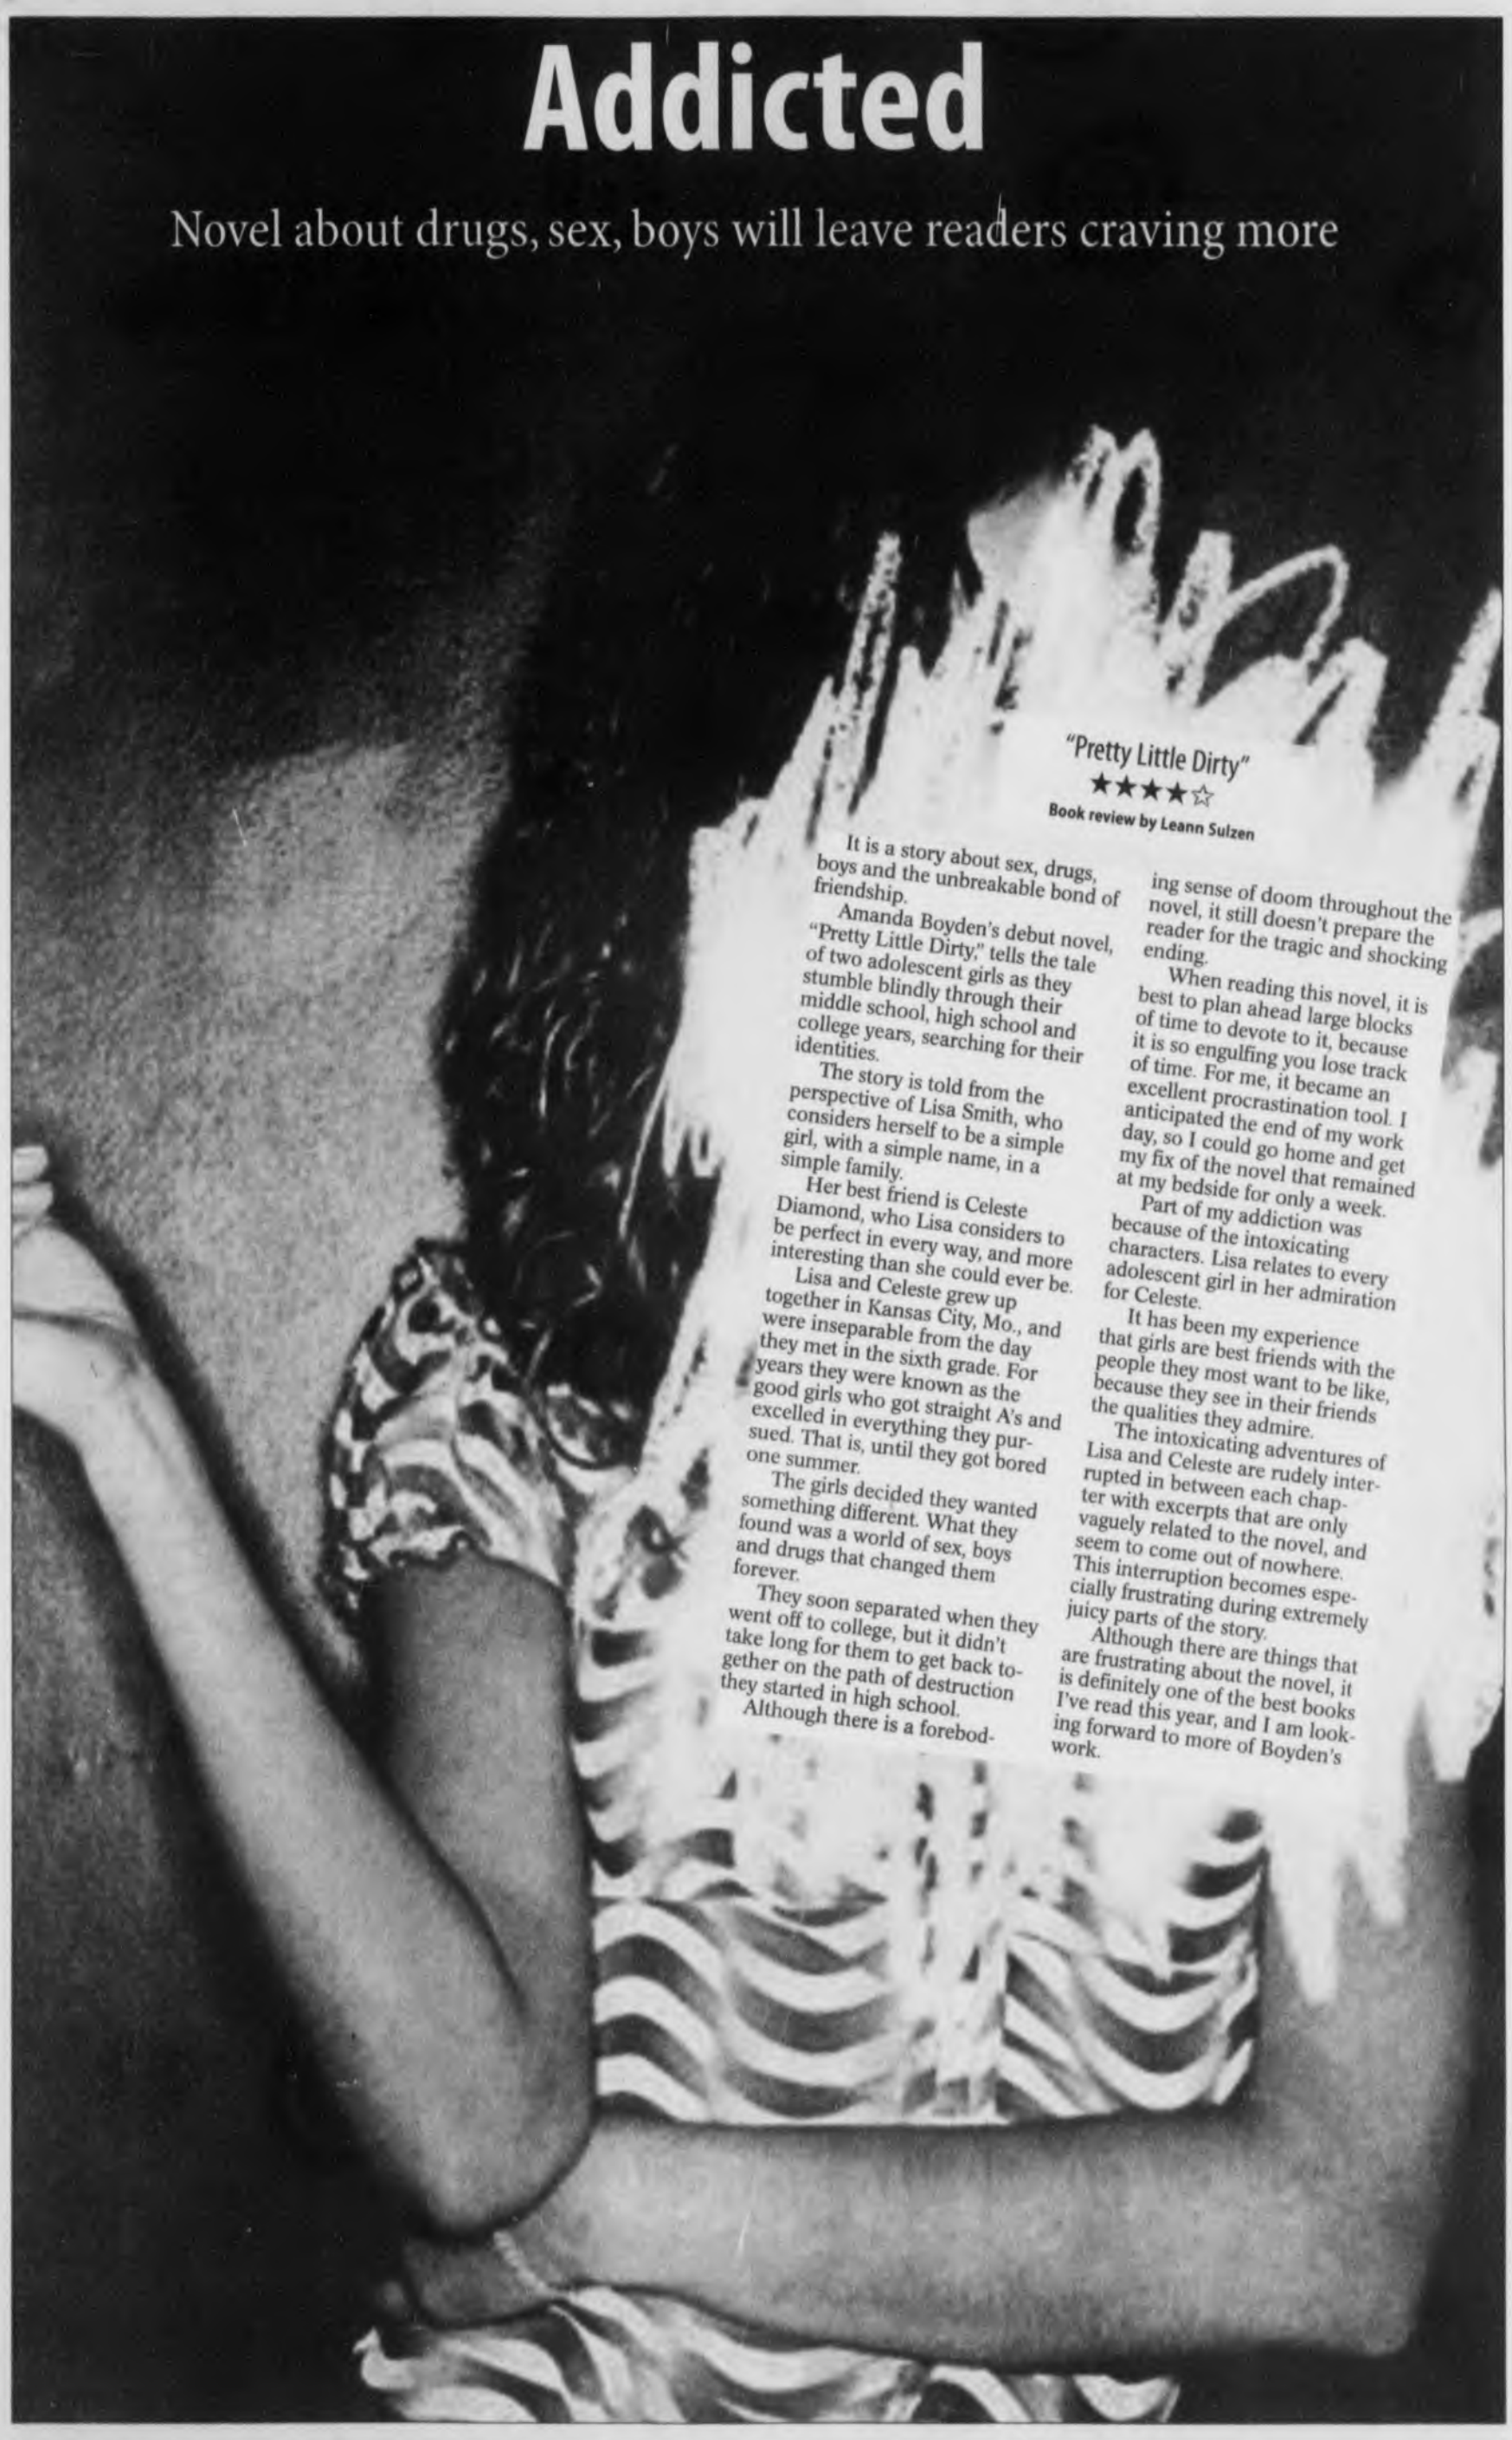
Howard signed a six-year deal on Monday to become the starter opposite Jevon Kearse at the right defensive end position.

"It's good to be in an organization that's wanted you for the past couple of years...I'm going to give everything that I can to help this football team," said Howard at his press conference Monday.

NFL | Lewis' contract a 1-year deal with options

BALTIMORE — When the musical chairs for running back were starting to go, Jamal Lewis started to wonder if he was going to be left out.

Lewis



Based on his three-year contract to re-sign with the Ravens, Lewis doesn't have to take a back seat to anybody. Technically, his three-year, $26 million gives him the highest average of any running back in NFL history. His $8.6 million average on paper tops the eight-year, $62 million deal given by the Seahawks to Shaun Alexander and the eight-year $60 million deal given by the Chargers to LaDainian Tomlinson.

In reality, though, Lewis will be playing on a one-year deal that pays him $6 million, and the relationship with the Ravens will be reviewed after the season.

Lewis received a $5 million signing bonus and a $1 million base.

Novel about drugs, sex, boys will leave readers craving more

"Pretty Little Dirty"

Book review by Leann Sulzen

It is a story about sex, drugs, boys and the unbreakable bond of friendship.

Amanda Boyden's debut novel, "Pretty Little Dirty," tells the tale of two adolescent girls as they stumble blindly through their middle school, high school and college years, searching for their identities.

The story is told from the perspective of Lisa Smith, who considers herself to be a simple girl, with a simple name, in a simple family.

Her best friend is Celeste Diamond, who Lisa considers to be perfect in every way, and more interesting than she could ever be.

Lisa and Celeste grew up together in Kansas City, Mo., and were inseparable from the day they met in the sixth grade. For years they were known as the good girls who got straight A's and excelled in everything they pursued. That is, until they got bored one summer.

The girls decided they wanted something different. What they found was a world of sex, boys and drugs that changed them forever.

They soon separated when they went off to college, but it didn't take long for them to get back together on the path of destruction they started in high school.

Although there is a foreboding sense of doom throughout the novel, it still doesn't prepare the reader for the tragic and shocking ending.

When reading this novel, it is best to plan ahead large blocks of time to devote to it, because it is so engulfing you lose track of time. For me, it became an excellent procrastination tool. I anticipated the end of my work day, so I could go home and get my fix of the novel that remained at my bedside for only a week.

Part of my addiction was because of the intoxicating characters. Lisa relates to every adolescent girl in her admiration for Celeste.

It has been my experience that girls are best friends with the people they most want to be like, because they see in their friends the qualities they admire.

The intoxicating adventures of Lisa and Celeste are rudely interrupted in between each chapter with excerpts that are only vaguely related to the novel, and seem to come out of nowhere. This interruption becomes especially frustrating during extremely juicy parts of the story.

Although there are things that are frustrating about the novel, it is definitely one of the best books I've read this year, and I am looking forward to more of Boyden's work.

Local artist uses sarcastic song writing to entertain

"My Socks Never Match"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

In my endless pursuit to discover the next great artist or band on the national or international level, I often overlook musical acts that reside right on my doorstep. I can name the most obscure bands from the farthest reaches of the world, but for the life of me, I couldn't tell you anything about the bands playing in Aggieville establishments on a Friday night.

This situation is being rectified, as I become more aware and support Manhattan's local music scene. In fact, Manhattan is fortunate to have many talented artists from the Sunflower State.

"My Socks Never Match" is the debut album from Electric Needle Room, the brainchild of University of Kansas graduate and current Manhattan resident Matt Beat.

Beat's own description of Electric Needle Room's music is "dreamy, ambient indie-pop/synth-pop that never lets up on the cheesiness."

A listen to "My Socks Never Match" reveals Beat to be a perpetual smart-ass who is thrust into the real world, and as he encounters the drudgeries of post-graduate life, he refuses to grow up. Beat seems unsure of his place in the world, but comforted by his undying wit and sarcastic worldview.

Beat's music and lyrics conjure memories of other ironic musical artists, like Pavement's slacker-savant Stephen Malkmus and the piano-playing troubadour, Ben Folds.

The album employs a lo-fi recording process, which is an advantage and a hindrance. The album's sound maintains the intimacy of Beat's bedroom recordings. However, such low fidelity recording methods cause some of the instrumentation to blur together. It is a minor gripe compared to the strength of the song-writing.

The album opens somberly with "I Hate the Suburbs." An insistent groove is created by a drum machine, over which Beat lays a hazy keyboard line that is reminiscent of driving through the streets, gazing out the window at the repetitive sights of the suburbs:

"SUV at the gas station, next to a brand-new sub (marine sandwich) division/Everywhere I turn, a strip mall/I hate the suburbs, but I can't escape them."

"Dear Celebrities, Thank You for Making the World a Better Place," is a jaunty, country-tinged ditty where Beat addresses the celebrity world. He compliments the social elite on being brave, talented and kind before he snidely chides, "Get over yourself."

This is the template for the majority of the album. On most of the songs, Matt's brother, Steven, plays percussion, while Matt plays all of the other instruments (usually keyboards) and sings in his nasally croon.

If there is any gripe to be had about the album it would be the length. At 16 songs and nearly 67 minutes, Beat could've tightened the album's flow. A few songs meander too long, as well as some instrumental interludes that could have been left out.

The majority of "My Socks Never Match" is a fun and uplifting journey. With such a great album, I hope that Electric Needle Room is able to reach its deliberately unusual goal of "Capturing the brains of every college town in the United States."

Electric Needle Room is playing at 9 p.m. tonight at PJ's Pub, 1129 Laramie St.. To find out more about ENR, visit www.electricneedleroom.com.

Isaac Hayes wants out of 'South Park'

After nine seasons, more than 100 episodes and thousands of hot lunches served, Chef is apparently hanging up his apron and leaving the tiny town of South Park, Colo.

Or at least the man who cooks up Chef's voice is. On Monday Isaac Hayes — who's provided the booming baritone for "South Park"'s cafeteria employee and resident ladies' man since the show began in 1997 — released a statement announcing his desire to be released from his contract with "South Park," blaming the program's "growing insensitivity towards personal spiritual beliefs."

"There is a place in this world for satire, but there is a time when satire ends and intolerance and bigotry towards religious beliefs of others begins," Hayes wrote in the statement.

K-State places 12th at Texas A&M open

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's women's golf team posted a 120-over-par 984 to place 12th at the Texas A&M Mo-Morial over the weekend.

Tying for first at the tournament were Arkansas and Texas A&M. There were 18 teams in the field.

Individually for K-State, junior Helene Robert tied for 24th with a 22-over-par 238. Sophomore Michelle Regan tied for 49th with a 29-over -par 245, sophomore Kali Quick tied for 69th with a 35-over-par 251, junior Katy Heffel placed 77th with a 39-over-par 255 and sophomore Hailey Mireles placed 78th with a 40-over-par 256. Freshman Krista Nelson, who played as an individual, placed 94th with a 61-over-par 277.

Coach Kristi Knight said the team struggled after the first two rounds.

"We didn't play as well as we would have liked," she said. "We played well the first two rounds, but we struggled Sunday and didn't make as many putts."

This course, Knight said, is the hardest the team will play this season. Although the numbers don't show it, Knight said there were some good things that came out of the tournament.

"We beat two Top-50 teams," she said. "We beat Notre Dame and Oregon State, and that's something that we've struggled with the last couple of seasons. That's how to improve your ranking, is to beat teams that are ranked higher than you.

"We let a few get away from us but, at the same time, we beat two and that's the good news."

Robert said the conditions on the course were rough for the players.

"The conditions and the pin placements were really tough," she said. "I just stayed patient and did what I had to do."

Over spring break, the golfers will travel to the Dr. Donnis Thompson Invitational at the Kanahoe Klipper Golf Club in Honolulu. The Thompson Invitational will be March 21 and 22. The team will then travel to the Mountain View Collegiate at Mountain View Golf Course in Tuscon, Ariz., on March 25 and 26.

Robert said the Hawaii tournament will be exciting for the players.

"I've heard there are a few holes right by the ocean," she said. "I'm looking forward to going out there, having some fun and playing a great course."

The tournament in Arizona, Robert said, will provide some familiar ground for her.

"I'm going back to this tournament for the third time, and I know you can score well on this course," she said. "I'm looking forward to going and trying to shoot really low."

"We'll be concentrating on iron play and working around the greens on chipping and putting," Knight said. "It always comes down to the short game, so that's always a common theme.

"If you're doing those things well, you have a chance."

Cats struggle in singles play

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lately, the K-State women's tennis team has preferred the buddy system.

The Wildcats won the doubles point against both Oklahoma State and Iowa this weekend, but dropped eight of 12 singles matches to lose both duel competitions 4-3.

Coach Steve Bietau said he did not enjoy his weekend.

"It's not a pleasant experience, and it's not a lot of fun when you let a match that you think you are capable of winning get away from you," Bietau said. "It's not how most people would want to spend their weekend."

K-State (5-4, 1-2 Big 12 Conference) dropped its second Big 12 duel match Saturday to Oklahoma State 4-3.

The loss was the Wildcats' first when winning the doubles point.

Singles action was highlighted by a matchup of old friends – sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia and OSU's Iryna Tkachenko – in No. 1 singles. The two have known each other for six years.

Kvaratskhelia, ranked No. 77 in the nation, won in straight sets (7-6, 6-0), despite being distracted early on.

"The first set was really more mental, like a psychological game," Kvaratskhelia said. "It was really hard but I kept telling myself, 'Maybe she is going through the same thing.'"

Senior Jessica Simosa defeated Zana Masnic at No. 2 singles (6-3, 6-2), after being down 3-0 in the first set.

After going down 3-0, Simosa went on a nine point run of her own to put the match away.

"I was down because I was trying to win the points too fast," Simosa said. "So she was just returning my shots, and I was trying to make winners out of every shot."

However, Saturday's match was not so easy for the rest of the team, Bietau said.

"Simosa figured out what was wrong and corrected it," Bietau said. "Unfortunately, that didn't happen on very many courts."

The Wildcats played Iowa, ranked No. 47 nationally, on Sunday. The match was moved to Ahearn Field House because of rain.

The change of environment did not change the result.

K-State swept the doubles point but, once again, lost 4-3.

"It sucks to lose," sophomore Olga Klimova said. "We shouldn't lose these matches."

This time it was the bottom of the lineup winning the Wildcats' only singles matches.

Sophomore Fernanda Da Valle defeated Kayla Berry (6-4, 6-4) at No. 5, and Klimova beat Krissy Dowlin (6-1, 7-6) at No. 6.

K-State can learn from the tenacity they saw from Iowa, assistant coach Marcos Mendez said.

"Iowa has a lot of things that we can copy," Mendez said. "Their attitude was great, and they came here and fought hard."

Hopefully, this match will serve as a reminder in the future, Bietau said.

"Maybe a month from now, or six months from now, or a year from now, our team can look at this weekend and say, 'That match got us going,'" Bietau said.

K-State will be back in action Wednesday, playing Kansas in Manhattan.

Judge considers dismissing death-penalty case

By Matthew Barakat
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALEXANDRIA, Va. - The federal judge in the Zacarias Moussaoui case is considering ending the death-penalty prosecution of the al-Qaeda conspirator after learning that a federal lawyer apparently coached witnesses on upcoming testimony.

U.S. District Judge Leonie Brinkema said Monday it was "very difficult for this case to go forward" after prosecutors revealed that a lawyer for the Transportation Security Administration had violated her order barring witnesses from any exposure to trial testimony.

Brinkema sent the jury home until Wednesday while she considers her options.

If she bars the government from pursuing the death penalty, the trial would be over and Moussaoui would automatically be sentenced to life in prison without possibility of release. The government likely would appeal that ruling.

A hearing is scheduled for Tuesday to determine the scope of the problem. The TSA lawyer, Carla Martin, and most of the seven witnesses – past or present employees of the Federal Aviation Administration who received e-mails from Martin – are expected to testify.

The judge said she had "never seen such an egregious violation of a rule on witnesses," and prosecutor David Novak agreed that Martin's actions were "horrendously wrong."

Defense lawyer Edward MacMahon asked Brinkema to dismiss the government's death-penalty case, saying, "This is not going to be a fair trial."

At the very least, he said the government's FAA witnesses should be excluded. But prosecutor Novak protested they represented "half the government's case."

"There is no way to un-ring the bell," the defense said in a court filing Monday night. "The FAA witnesses have been tainted, and no matter how much they contend that they can be truthful, they have been coached concerning the defects in the government's case and how to overcome those defects."

In a filing of its own, the government said there is no need to exclude the FAA witnesses from testifying, saying the violation of the court's order, "while egregious," can be remedied when the witnesses are questioned in front of the jury.

Martin's e-mails to the upcoming witnesses included excerpts of the government's opening statement and Martin's assessment that the opening statement "has created a credibility gap that the defense can drive a truck through."

She expressed concern that FAA witnesses would be made to look foolish on cross-examination and warned them to be prepared for certain topics.

Brinkema said the violation was compounded by the fact that Martin e-mailed the witnesses jointly, violating standard practice against joint interviews of witnesses.

"What that leads to is the very real potential that witnesses are rehearsed, coached or otherwise that the truth-seeking concept of a proceeding is significantly eroded," Brinkema said.

Efforts to reach Martin for comment by telephone were unsuccessful.

Brinkema said she also would reconsider the defense's request of last week for a mistrial made after a question from Novak suggested to the jury that Moussaoui might have had an obligation to confess his terrorist connections to the FBI even after he had invoked his right to an attorney.

She noted that when Novak asked the question Thursday, she ruled it out of order after the defense said the question should result in a mistrial.

The judge warned the government that it was treading on shaky legal ground because she knew of no case where failure to act resulted in a death penalty as a matter of law.

"This is the second significant error by the government affecting the constitutional rights of this defendant and, more importantly, the integrity of the criminal justice system in this country," Brinkema said.

Of the seven witnesses whose testimony was potentially tainted, three were expected to be government witnesses and four were expected to be defense witnesses.

Novak suggested that, in lieu of dismissal, perhaps two of the government's witnesses should be excluded from trial and the defense could present its FAA witness evidence through a stipulation rather than by testimony, meaning the defense witnesses would not be subject to cross-examination.

Moussaoui pleaded guilty in April to conspiring with al-Qaeda to hijack aircraft and commit other crimes.

He is the only person charged in this country with the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks, but he has specifically denied any link to 9/11 and says he was training to be part of a possible future attack. Prosecutors, to obtain the death penalty, must prove that Moussaoui's actions resulted in at least one death on Sept. 11.

Brinkema barred prosecutors from seeking the death penalty against Moussaoui in 2003. An appellate court overruled her in 2004.

Taxpayer's Bill of Rights branded as potentially harmful

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Democrats discussed the Taxpayer's Bill of Rights Monday night, and concluded that rather than cutting on wasteful government expenditure, TABOR cuts essential services such as health care and education.

"TABOR was first enacted in Colorado in 1992, and represents the most restrictive tax and expenditure limitation in the country," said April Holman, director of Fiscal Focus for Kansas Action for Children.

Kansas Action for Children is a non-partisan group that addresses child advocacy issues and lobbies for tax policies conducive to children and families, Holman said.

"Kansans value the public education and the health care system provided by the government," Holman said. "These sectors will be hit the hardest, since 80 percent of the state budget is allocated to these two areas."

The major criticism against TABOR is it is a constitutional measure, which makes it difficult to repeal if policy-makers in Kansas decide it is not accomplishing the intended goal, Holman said.

The presentation said TABOR works on a rigid, unrealistic and flawed formula of inflation plus population growth.

"The basic premise of the formula is being challenged, since inflation is calculated on the Consumer Price Index, which compares individual and government spending patterns," Holman said.

In terms of population growth, Holman said the formula fails to consider subgroups like children and senior citizens, who form a considerable part of the budget allocation.

Steve Smethers, associate professor of journalism and mass communications and vice president of the Riley County Democrats, said he does not foresee anything positive resulting from TABOR.

"TABOR will have a potentially devastating effect on Kansas schools, health care, social programs, prisons, roads and any other services which depend on government funding," Smethers said.

Holman said TABOR's proponents were people who have a personal philosophy of taking care of themselves and their families and not for the greater good of society.

She said although TABOR is a dead issue for Kansas in 2006, there is the threat of the bill passing in the near future.

The statistics presented during the meeting revealed TABOR cuts had resulted in a fall in the per capita spending on education in Colorado.

The presentation considered the hypothetical situation that TABOR had been in effect in Kansas since 1993.

Holman cited statistics that about 1,300 criminals would be on the streets because of no prison space, 50,000 low income children would have no health care and parents would be paying $1,400 more for their kids' college tuition.

"There would have been a 50-percent increase in the number of kids per class because 10,000 teachers would have been laid off," Holman said.

3rd U.S. mad cow disease case discovered on Alabama farm

By Libby Quaid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – A cow in Alabama has tested positive for mad cow disease, the Agriculture Department said Monday, confirming the third U.S. case of the brain-wasting ailment.

The cow did not enter the food supply for people or animals, officials said. The animal, unable to walk, was killed by a local veterinarian and buried on the farm.

"We remain very confident in the safety of U.S. beef," said the department's chief veterinarian, John Clifford.

Authorities said the farm was under an informal quarantine but would not say where it was.

"We will not release this information at this time until we complete our investigation, and that could take a few days," said Alabama agriculture commissioner Ron Sparks.

The cow spent less than a year there before it died, officials said.

Federal and state investigators are working to determine the cow's age, where it was born and raised and locate its herdmates and offspring. Sparks said there are no suspect animals on the farm.

Clifford said the cow was a Santa Gertrudis breed, a red-colored animal that thrives in the southern U.S.

The news came as the Bush administration worked to reassure Japan and other foreign customers of American beef. Japan halted U.S. beef shipments in January after finding veal cuts with backbone – cuts that are eaten in the U.S. but not in Asia.

Japan was the top customer of American beef until the first U.S. case of mad cow disease prompted a ban it had only recently lifted.

"We would not anticipate that this would impact our ongoing negotiations," Clifford said. "Our product is safe. We've got a number of interlocking safeguards. And Japan themselves have had 20-plus cases of BSE."

Mad cow disease is the common name for bovine spongiform encephalopathy, or BSE.

The first U.S. case of mad cow disease appeared in December 2003 and involved a Canadian-born cow in Washington state. The disease was found again last June in a cow that was in Texas.

The local vet examined the Alabama cow's teeth and said the animal was older, "quite possibly upwards of 10 years of age," Clifford said.

Clifford said it can be difficult to tell the age of older cows based on their teeth.

"It's an estimate," he said. "We may not be able to determine the exact age. But we're going to do everything we can to trace this animal back to the herd of origin and determine its age."

The age of the cow is important because the U.S. put safeguards in place nine years ago to prevent the disease from spreading. The U.S. banned ground-up cattle remains from being added to cattle feed in 1997. Eating contaminated feed is the only way cattle are known to contract the disease.

Older animals are more likely to have been exposed to contaminated feed.

In Canada, which enacted a similar feed ban in 1997, the most recent case of mad cow disease was in an animal born after the ban, raising questions about enforcement. That case was confirmed in January.

The Agriculture Department has been considering when to scale back its higher level of testing for mad cow disease. After the first case of BSE, testing was increased from about 55 to 1,000 daily.

The department hasn't decided how many animals to test once surveillance is scaled back but will follow international guidelines, Clifford said.

In humans, eating meat products contaminated with BSE has been linked to more than 150 deaths, mostly in Britain, from variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease, a rare and fatal nerve disease.

way to start an administration," Lucas said. "The main thing that we need to do in Senate is refresh ourselves on the issues and what's going on in committee."

Katie agreed with bringing a new perspective to SGA.

"I think a lot of it is our ideas haven't been narrowed down and focused down into one thing," she said. "We're bringing a fresh perspective into SGA and making sure all students' voices are heard."

Lucas said the most challenging and rewarding aspect will be meeting as many K-State students as possible to discuss issues.

"But that's what we enjoyed the most about campaigning," Lucas said.

Katie said getting to know everyone in SGA will be a challenge since they already have established business relationships.

"It will also be one of the most rewarding things since obviously they are leaders in their own right," Katie said. "Just being associated with them is a great honor."

GAS | Obstacles remain for bio-fuels as research continues

In addition to increasing demand for fuel-convertible crops, many crops are also eligible for subsidies and federal tax credits brought about by the Energy Policy Act of 2005. Not withstanding, the benefits of increased agriculture for a largely agricultural state.

"In my view, this just almost has to be a positive thing for Kansas," said Mark Schrock, professor of biological and agricultural engineering.

In addition to ethanol, Kansas stands to reap the benefits of bio-diesel production, as well as contributing to its research, Schrock said.

Schrock's research on bio-diesel was being done at K-State as early as 1981, when he worked on a conversion from a soy-based Canola Oil.

"It's the same stuff that's being marketed as bio-diesel now," Schrock said.

Bio-diesel, though not as popularized as ethanol, has a higher energy yield, and being a soybean reliant crop produces less of a strain on arable land, as soybean produces its own nitrogen, a necessary ingredient for fertilizer, rather than pulling nitrogen from the soil.

There has even been breakthrough on cellulose-based ethanol, which could be derived from some grasses and theoretically would have a greater energy yield than bio-diesel, Schrock said.

But irrespective of the type of research and production being done, Schrock said agriculture wins.

"Regardless of what pathway we use ... they're all going to generate a very large, new market for agricultural products."

Despite the potential of bio-fuels, some obstacles remain to be overcome.

A recent article by the Associated Press discusses the difficulty of establishing an ethanol market. Fuel stations are hesitant to offer specialty blends due to the lack of cars that require high ethanol blends, and car manufacturers are reluctant to mass-produce cars dependent on specialty fuel that is scarce, if not non-existent, in many areas.

However, some say with the increasing problem of oil dependence and climbing prices hesitating now could be costly in the future.

"It has the potential to be a severe blow to our quality of life and our way of living," Schrock said. "I think we can get through it, but we will have to change."

As research on alternative fuels continues, both K-State and the farmers of Kansas stand to benefit from creating and producing these new technologies.

"I think there's a lot of opportunity here, and I do think agriculture is being underestimated," Schrock said.

attorney, and that we'll be issuing another warrant regarding those complaints."

Grubbs would not comment on what other charges Uhlarik is being investigated for.

Uhlarik, who has been teaching at K-State since 1970, holds appointments in both the Department of Psychology and the Department of Mechanical and Nuclear Engineering. He is teaching a graduate-level psychology class this semester.

Christine Sibilla, junior in psychology, was in Uhlarik's drugs and behavior class the first time he was arrested.

"I didn't really think much about it; it was kind of annoying that his GTA had to teach the class, because he was a good teacher," she said. Sibilla said she thought it was odd, because his second arrest was for the exact same offense. "It was weird," she said.

Author accused of stealing ideas

By Jill Lawless
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON – Dan Brown has guarded his privacy carefully – refusing most interviews about the novels that have sold millions worldwide, keeping to the writing routine that began when he worked two teaching jobs to make ends meet.

Accusations from two British authors who claim Brown stole their ideas in writing "The Da Vinci Code," however, forced open an unwelcome window into his literary world. Revelations range from the profound – his views of the craft of writing – to the mundane – how he uses the hourglass that marks the intervals of his day.

In Exeter, N.H., where Brown lives with his wife Blythe, he rises at 4 a.m. to work – "by making writing the first order of business every day, I am giving it enormous symbolic importance in my life," he said in his 69-page witness statement.

On Monday, Brown found himself on the stand at London's High Court, denying accusations of copyright infringement from Michael Baigent and Richard Leigh.

He acknowledged reading Baigent and Leigh's book while he was writing "The Da Vinci Code" – along with 38 other books and more than 300 documents submitted as evidence to the court.

He said Baigent and Leigh's work "was not a crucial or important text in the creation of the framework of 'The Da Vinci Code.'"

His witness statement also offered fresh insight into the creative process of one of the world's most popular authors. His 4 a.m. ritual began when he was working two jobs as a teacher to pay the bills and the early morning hours were the only time he had.

"For me, writing is a discipline, much like playing a musical instrument," Brown said in the statement.

According to the statement, the outline of the book was written in his parents' laundry room. His desk was an ironing board.

"Because I was visiting my parents, I had no office space, and the only private place in their house was a tiny laundry room," he said.

He keeps an antique hourglass on his desk, and it tells Brown when it's time to take a break. Stopping every hour for some exercise – push-ups, sit-ups, and stretching – he keeps the "blood and ideas flowing."

The few seats in the 10th-floor courtroom not filled by journalists on Monday were quickly taken by people hoping to catch a glimpse of Brown's testimony – including many with an interest in shadowy medieval orders, alleged dark secrets within the Roman Catholic Church, and celebrity authors.

In the witness statement, Brown said he had been "shocked" at the reaction of Baigent and Leigh. But under questioning by the plaintiffs' lawyer, Brown acknowledged that he could not always recall exact dates of milestones in the creation of his novel.

"It's as if you've asked me to go back five years or 10 years and asked me not only what I got for Christmas, but what order I opened the presents," he told Jonathan Rayner James, a lawyer for the plaintiffs.

Both books explore theories – dismissed by theologians – that Mary Magdalene was not a prostitute but Jesus' wife, the couple had a child and the bloodline survives.

Baigent and Leigh are suing "Da Vinci Code" publisher Random House for copyright infringement, claiming Brown "appropriated the architecture" of their 1982 nonfiction book "The Holy Blood and the Holy Grail."

If the writers succeed in securing an injunction to bar the use of their material, they could hold up the scheduled May 19 film release of "The Da Vinci Code," starring Tom Hanks and Audrey Tautou.

Random House lawyers argue that the ideas in dispute are so general they are not protected by copyright. They also say many of the ideas in "The Holy Blood and the Holy Grail" do not feature in Brown's novel, which follows the fictional professor Robert Langdon as he investigates the murder of an elderly member of an ancient society that guards dark secrets about the story of Jesus and the quest for the Holy Grail.

Brown said he had fully acknowledged his debt to the two authors by having a character in "The Da Vinci Code" refer to the earlier book and its theories. He even named a character Sir Leigh Teabing – an anagram of Baigent and Leigh.

Other authors whose works he mentioned had sent letters of thanks, Brown said. But the plaintiffs had made allegations which contain "numerous sweeping statements which seem to me to be completely fanciful."

Brown's statement and testimony provided tantalizing glimpses of his pre- "Da Vinci" life – from pupil at exclusive New England prep school Phillips Exeter Academy to semi-successful Los Angeles songwriter.

It also revealed a complex and wide-ranging research process undertaken with his wife, whose interest in "the sacred feminine," Brown said, led to one of "The Da Vinci Code's" key themes.

Brown is due to continue his testimony on Tuesday.

The third author of "The Holy Blood and the Holy Grail," Henry Lincoln, is not involved in the case. A lawyer for the plaintiffs, Paul Sutton, refused to say why he was not participating.

Lincoln, who is in his 70s and reportedly in poor health, could not be reached for comment.

Firefighters battle Texas fires

By Betsy Blaney
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BORGER, Texas - Using bulldozers and air tankers, firefighters struggled Monday to stop wind-blown wildfires that scorched more than 1,000 square miles of the drought-stricken Texas Panhandle.

The blazes were blamed for at least seven deaths, four of them in a crash on a smoke-shrouded highway over the weekend. Four more bodies were found Monday evening in a car that had crashed into a ravine, and authorities suspected those deaths were also caused by the wildfires.

About 1,900 people in seven counties were evacuated.

"This has been a very deadly wildfire season, but Texas communities have shown strength, and we're going to continue fighting these fires from the ground and from the air," said Rachael Novier, a spokeswoman for Gov. Rick Perry.

There was no immediate estimate of the number of homes damaged or destroyed. Firefighters used bulldozers to plow fire breaks in the parched earth, while air tankers dropped water on the flames.

Jennifer Orand fled her doublewide mobile home Sunday in the tiny Panhandle community of Texroy to stay with a nearby relative. When she returned Monday, there was nothing left.

"I just started crying," said Orand, 27, who shared the home with her husband. "You hear all the time that people think it will never happen to you. I never thought I'd say that myself."

Eleven fires burned across an estimated nearly 700,000 acres Monday, up from 663,000 over the weekend.

State fire crews fought more than 160 blazes in one 24-hour period.

The size of the scorched area easily eclipsed the 455,000 acres that burned in December and January, when the governor declared a disaster.

The cause of the latest blazes was under investigation.

The previous fires were apparently sparked by people who burned trash, tossed cigarettes or illegally set off fireworks in the middle of one of the worst droughts in Texas in 50 years.

About 3.5 million acres – 2 percent of the state's land mass – have burned since Dec. 26.

Tou Ger Xiong has been called "the Hmong version of Chris Rock, Jim Carrey and Snoop Dogg," and he showcased his likeness to those performers Tuesday night in the K and S Ballrooms of the K-State Student Union.

Xiong, who has been speaking nationally for over nine years, performed his program "Bruce Lee Meets Snoop Dogg" as a part of the activities being held for Asian Awareness month.

Xiong opened the show telling the story of his family's escape from war-torn Laos. He described how, during the Vietnam War, the Central Intelligence Agency trained the Hmong men of Laos as soldiers to aid the United States in the conflict, and his father was one of those men. After the United States left the region, however, Xiong said the Hmong people were persecuted, and faced execution if they remained in their homeland. After a long journey through the jungle and across the Kong River, Xiong said his family was able to escape to a refugee camp, from where his family was eventually able to immigrate to the United States.

He drew big laughs from the audience when he described his first impressions of his new home, telling the story of his first experiences with everything from snow to indoor plumbing. Xiong said it gave him a good perspective on the amenities that, here, are considered commonplace.

"We take what we have for granted," he said.

When he spoke of what he faced in school as a child, Xiong drew laughs and gasps from the audience, in reaction to the stories of the miscommunication and racism he experienced. He said his experiences, both of learning to try to understand other cultures and experiencing intolerance, taught him a lot.

Sexual ads bill stalls in Senate

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senate Bill 519, which would restrict the advertisement of sexually-oriented businesses on Kansas highways, was referred to the Federal and State Affairs Committee last month.

The bill was drafted after complaints that advertisements were negatively affecting the quality of life in Kansas.

The measure would prohibit signs or outdoor advertising for adult-cabaret or sexually-oriented businesses from being located within one mile of the highway.

Phillip Cosby, a retired Abilene resident, said he is a supporter of the bill and said such advertisements are detrimental to Abilene's economy.

"Tourism is a big part of Abilene's economic viability, and the appearance of an overly large, garish adult porn sign right at our doorstep has a negative impact on tourism," Cosby said.

"There is a big conflict in Abilene being a destination for a sex shop and the Tuesday night's public meeting regarding City Park's future, and the possibility of an aquatic recreation center downtown was an event with no major incidents.

About 20 people came to hear City Parks and Recreation Director Terry DeWeese talk about the projects and take questions in the music room of Northview Elementary School. The audience had few questions, and DeWeese at times had to carry the discussion.

City staff presented two potential plans for City Park, both of which keep all the facilities presently in the park. Both also try to move the facilities to the east side of the park and free up more space for wide, open areas on the west side.

DeWeese said they both will keep the same number of parking spaces, about 390, but in different places from their current orientation.

The main difference between the two is Privilege fee committee allocates funding to various campus groups

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students who are enrolled in 15 credit hours or more paid $283.50 in privilege fees for the Spring 2006 semester. This is a 4- to 5-percent increase from last semester, said Student Body President Michael Burns.

The privilege fees for 2006 produced a budget of $10,338,236.

This budget is being distributed to 23 different organizations such as Student Health, University Counseling Services, Peters Recreational Complex and K-State Bands.

Student Health received the most funding for 2006, with a budget of $3,222,217.

Jaimee Keister, sophomore in human ecology and mass communications, said she was not aware she way paying these fees.

"I just pay my bill and don't really notice what I am paying for," Keister said. "I never knew or even thought about privilege fees."

Keister said she did not use the organizations funded by the fees enough to get her money's worth of privilege fees.

"Band and athletics is not something I really take advantage of," Keister said. "I understand these things need funding, but we already are paying so much for school."

Burns said these organizations provide important services to students.

"When you look across the board, there are so many vital services, and they are all very important to the students' well-being," Burns said.

Burns said there a 3-percent average increase per year.

"We have to increase fees, because like with anything else, these operation budgets are faced with rising inflation," Burns said. "The privilege fee committee can decide if they want to enhance student services that come with the higher cost of privilege fees."

Senate Privilege Fee Chair Matt Wagner said the organizations funded by privilege fees come up for review every three years, unless the organization needs emergency funding, or if there were discrepancies in the way money was spent.

Wagner said the only organization that did not receive the funding they requested this year was the K-State band.

"Students have been paying for the band since 1989, and in that time the funding has jumped from about $55,000 to $146,000, and that's students' dollars," Wagner said. "Students are paying more than the committee felt they should be."

Frank Tracz, professor of music and director of bands, said not receiving the requested funding will cause problems for the band.

"We will have to cut back on a number of things," Tracz said. "Students won't see or feel a difference right away, but they will eventually."

Tracz said the band would need an increase in funding whether it is provided by privilege fees or other funding.

"Maybe SGA perceives that somewhere else should be funding the band and thats fine, but we need to find those other groups that will provide us with funding," Tracz said.

Wagner said the privilege fee committee will not know how much students will pay in fees for next semester until late summer.

"We base the fees on enrollment so they can be divided out evenly," Wagner said.

Bill up for debate

TOPEKA — A day after one Senate panel endorsed a school finance package, another committee advanced a gambling bill Tuesday that leaders hope will cover the bulging education price tag. The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee voted 4-3 to advance the casino and slot machine proposal, without a recommendation on whether it should be passed.

All female club works to promote beef industry

By Kelsey Noel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Forty-nine K-State students are members of an organization whose purpose is to promote beef. That group is the Collegiate Cattle Women.

Amy Hughes, senior in animal science and industry, is president of the club. She said though the majority of the members are majoring in animal science, that is not the case for everyone.

"We have chemical engineering, education, and art majors, as well as business and communications majors," Hughes said.

The group has been at K-State for more than 10 years, she said, but has done most of its growth in these past two years.

"When I joined the group, there were only 15 active members," Hughes said.

Mishelle Hay, academic administrative assistant for the Department of Animal Science and the club's adviser, said the increase in members is due to the group's strong leaders.

"There was a new officer team in December 2004 that completely changed the club around," she said. "The officers were already involved in the cattle industry and beef promotion, and they were enthusiastic."

Hay said the club then began inviting speakers to their monthly meetings and participating in more events.

"Now we do a minimum of two or three events monthly," she said.

Hughes said some of the club's projects include helping at Cattlemen's Day festivities; selling commemorative blankets for the 100th anniversary of the Department of Animal Science; and selling "Eat Beef" license plates. Additionally, they deliver presentations in area schools about the importance of eating beef and the beef industry in general.

Hay said the group tries to be active in other areas besides the College of Agriculture.

"They've done university-wide things, too," she said. "And because they do so much, they have networking opportunities – they have even worked with people at the state and national level in the beef industry."

Marisa Hands, senior in animal science and member of the club for four years, said she enjoys being a part of Collegiate Cattle Women for several reasons.

"There is a lot of excitement with wanting to promote beef," she said.

"We have several activities, and I think it's fun to get together and promote what we love."

Hands said she has always loved being involved with beef.

"I grew up in southwest Kansas on a cow/calf operation and feed farm, so it was really good to find an all-girls club here that promotes the industry," she said.

Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN

While at Tuesday night's Collegiate Cattle Women club meeting in Weber Hall, Amy Hughes, senior in animal sciences and industry and club president, talks with Cortney Bowden, junior in food science.

Hay said she believed going into the schools was very beneficial to members of the organization.

"Working with schools and in the Boys and Girls Clubs are especially helpful to our education majors in the group," she said. "This gives them a chance for extracurricular activities where they can work with kids."

Anyone who is interested in joining Collegiate Cattle Women can visit the group's Web site, www.asi.ksu.edu/ccw. People can attend the group's meetings by contacting any of its officers.

Faculty Senate discusses electronic dissertations, thesis works

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Electronic dissertation and thesis project was the main topic discussed at Faculty Senate's monthly meeting on Tuesday.

"Beginning fall 2006, doctoral students will be required to submit dissertations electronically," said Marty Courtois, computer information specialist at Information Technology Assistance Center. "In fall 2007, it will be the turn of the masters' students," he said.

Courtois said pilot tests conducted revealed that more than 90 percent of the students who tried posting their dissertations online could do it with ease.

The dissertations will have two back-up copies and be saved as PDF documents. They can be retrieved in full-text by running author or keyword searches.

"The thesis will be indexed by Web search engines," Courtois said. "Google has also agreed to include them as a part of Google Scholar."

Angela Pfizenmaier, doctoral degree specialist at the Research and Graduate School Vice Provost's Office, addressed the broad issues with regard to electronic theses, dissertations and reports.

"The three distinct areas are the submission process, access to the dissertations and preservation/archiving concerns," Pfizenmaier said.

Courtois said that the new system would not differ from the traditional system.

"Various universities are in the process of trying out ETDR," Courtois said. "It reflects positively on the students and the university to have that kind of access to research."

In other business discussed at the meeting, Beth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology, presented an annual e-mail security report.

"The number of e-mails has tripled in the past five weeks," she said. "We are planning to outsource specialists to address the problem."

Unger said those concerned with the e-mail overflow are looking at ways to curtail and do away with spam at its area of origin.

"We have come up with a new system, which will be in effect the Monday after spring break, where in spam will be stopped at the border and will not reach the inbox," she said.

Adult billboards OK as long as they are discreet

A Kansas Senate Bill that would restrict the advertisement of sexually-oriented businesses on Kansas highways is stalled in the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee.

The bill, which was drafted after complaints that such advertisements were negatively affecting Kansas residents' quality of life, would prohibit advertisements for adult-oriented businesses within one mile of highways.

Those in support of the bill have said that such advertisements negatively affect tourism sites and economic viability of communities.

Conversely, those against the bill cited legal issues with the proposed bill and infringement of First Amendment rights.

While the bill sets out to protect the best interests of Kansas residents, it is not necessarily the best solution.

The proposed bill would place too much restriction on advertisers and businesses.

A compromise for the content of an adult-oriented advertisement on a Kansas highway might be monitoring the advertisements on a discretionary basis.

Another alternative could require businesses to put "For Adults 18 or older only" on the advertisement.

Commercial speech receives some First Amendment protection, and the proposed bill in the Kansas Senate would further restrict that protection for sexually-oriented businesses.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

Drilling the issue

Alaskan reserve should be protected

KELSEY CHILDRESS

It is North America's largest wildlife refuge.

It contains several animal species, such as the endangered bowhead whale and three types of bears that depend on its 19 million acres for survival. The Arctic National Wildlife Refuge should not be opened to oil drilling.

Why? Because it's not worth it.

A few miles away from ANWR, in the Prudhoe Bay, one of the biggest oil fields in the United States, there are about 400 oil and other toxic chemical spills a year. Developing the 2,000 acres of coastline in the refuge would affect the entire 1.5 million-acre coastline, and ultimately destroy the delicate ecosystem that exists.

It is impossible to keep such an extensive operation to only 2,000 acres. It will at least affect more than 15,000 acres with the development alone, and the entire region will be opened up to prospective drilling.

The proponents of oil drilling will say and do anything in order to make their legislation go through, even increase the amount of money given to the refuge by the federal government, so it will seem like they actually care about the wildlife.

In reality, in order for the refuge to get more money, they will have to start the proceedings that will eventually lead to oil drilling. This is blackmail and is unfair to the animals that have made this beautiful reserve their home.

This refuge was created by the government for a reason.

They proclaimed those 19 million acres as a preserve for the fascinating wildlife that are living there. The government should not go back on its promise to keep those animals safe.

The preserve was created by K-State graduate Fred A. Seaton, previous United States Secretary of the Interior under Dwight D. Eisenhower. Seaton, after whom Seaton Hall is named, clearly realized the importance of preserving our natural wildlife.

Because the idea of keeping this area so remote was important to the United States, there are currently no roads except for the Dalton Highway, which is made of gravel and only touches the edge of the refuge. Access is usually only available by plane.

In a speech to the House Committee on Resources on March 12, 2003, Gale Norton, current U.S. Secretary of the Interior, claimed that if we drilled in ANWR today, it would take 10 years to reach the market. This would obviously not solve the oil shortage crisis that we are facing right now.

Americans always support instant gratification, and waiting 10 years before U.S. citizens see any of this supposed 'abundant' oil is obviously not worth the wait.

We should focus on other methods to solve our problem, like buying hybrid vehicles and conserving this non-renewable resource.

If oil drilling becomes a reality in ANWR, roads surely will have to be built, which will further desecrate the wildlife.

Are we going to destroy the only entire natural wilderness we have left in North America simply in the name of oil? When is our addiction to petroleum going to cease? When we have demolished all natural beauty permanently for a few years' worth of this crude substance?

When it comes down to it, America needs to discover other ways to power the industrial greed for oil, and stop the blatant disregard for wildlife preservation.

ANWR might reduce reliance on foreign oil

KODY COOPER

Anti-drillers should not be personally faulted for their erroneous beliefs. They are victims of the indoctrinatory propagandizing of hippie organizations like "Sycophants of Tolerance and Open-mindedness Organized for a Green Environment" (STOOGE).

However, you can still be saved from the STOOGEs. I start with the basics.

America is an addicted junkie who insatiably seeks euphoric highs through its drug of choice: black heroin. Every waking moment, she fantasizes about sticking that gas pump needle into her infrastructural veins.

America would like to get off the oil addiction, but she needs her daily fix to sustain her mobile economy. With all those cars, trains and airplanes, it's no wonder decades of habitual self-injection have left trademark "tracks."

America gets its fix by dealing with global black heroin dealers like Saudi Arabia and Venezuela. Often, these dealers gleefully grab America's nether regions and twist, inflicting choking price gouges. This directly affects America's citizenry.

Kansans pay $2.35 per gallon at the pump. Some Californians pay $3.35. To loosen the foreign lords' death grip, America has developed a multi-pronged energy independence strategy. This includes oil cultivation in the homeland.

The 1.5 million-acre Coastal Plain of the 16.9 million-acre Alaska National Wildlife Refuge is the chief candidate for homeland cultivation.

ANWR, created in 1960, was first zoned for energy exploration in 1980.

The U.S. Geologic Survey estimates the region will produce between 6 billion and 16 billion barrels of oil – the single greatest prospect for oil and natural gas known to exist on U.S. soil. That is enough to supply Kansas alone for the next 141 years.

STOOGEs argue drilling would ruin the majestic landscape of the pristine Alaskan wilderness. Don't Americans realize how beautiful the Coastal Plain is?

After all, this is the locale known for its nine months of harsh winter, 75-below-zero wind chill, 56 days of complete darkness per year and miles of flat, white nothingness. How could we ever put oil rigs there?

The fact is, the proposed ANWR legislation is the most environmentally regulative oil endeavor ever proposed. Mandated revolutionary technologies drastically reduce terrain coverage, emissions and seismic effects on wildlife.

However, STOOGEs maintain that's not enough to protect the cute cuddly animals of ANWR.

Citing objective scientific sources like People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, they maintain that our snuggly buddies like the cuddly caribou would be adversely affected by drilling because they calve on the Coastal Plain.

Never mind that the U.S. Geological Survey reports a 95-percent chance drilling won't affect caribou calving.

The wildlife-oil field coexistence case study at the Prudhoe oil field of the North Slope is even more telling. The National Academy of Science reports that the Central Arctic Herd of caribou there has grown by 25,000 in coexistence with the Prudhoe oil field.

Jealous of the thriving North Slope caribou, ANWR's Porcupine Herd of caribou enthusiastically supports drilling. It seems the precarious STOOGEs aren't even on the side of the cuddly caribou. Whose side are they on then?

ANWR would create 500,000 new jobs for Americans – 7,000 for Kansans alone. Three quarters of Alaskans support development. It seems STOOGEs aren't on the side of many Alaskans, Kansans or Americans.

By opposing ANWR cultivation, STOOGEs actually side with the foreign oil lords. And, why not? I'm sure environmental champions like the Saudi royal family and Hugo Chavez will be responsible stewards of our earth.

Opposing ANWR simply means opposition to energy independence and economic growth. Furthermore, it means entrustment of environmental stewardship to foreign oil thugs. Don't be a STOOGE.

K-State should extend kindness, try to bring Jankovich in as coach

Editor,

I truly believe the best choice for replacement (of Jim Wooldridge) would be Tim Jankovich, who is now an assistant to coach Bill Self at KU. Jankovich was the starting point guard for three years at K-State under perhaps our greatest coach ever, the late Jack Hartman.

Jankovich won many honors for his outstanding play at K-State as well as for his academics. He earned a Masters degree at K-State and was an assistant coach to Hartman here. He was even a Rhodes Scholar. Having a coach who is also a Rhodes Scholar would have to be great for public relations.

Jankovich has experience as head coach of the Division II University of North Texas, where he produced a huge turn-around and was very successful.

He also was a success as head basketball coach at Hutchinson Community College. He has been assistant for some great coaches. He also was a great recruiter as an assistant coach at Colorado State.

I think it is time to bring Janky back to K-State to try and take our men's basketball program to glory.

Some are against him because they say, "How could a Wildcat ever coach at KU?" I think Jankovich is there because Bill Self is a great coach. Janky has purple in his veins, and I think we should treat him as a Wildcat. We should make him one heck of an offer, and ensure he can get the support needed to build a successful basketball program here. Thank you.

Christianity should be respected, column relies on democratic clichés

Editor,

It looks like the anti-American liberals are at it again. Lola Shrimplin's article, "State has no right to endorse single religion," (March 9) contains more democratic clichés than Ted Kennedy's last drive to Chappiquidick.

Of course to open the article she needs to play to the anti-American crowd and explain how we shouldn't even be here in the first place; all we ever do is eradicate peace-loving civilizations.

I guess we never do anything right and never help out anybody in the world. I guess the $600 trillion this country has given in all types of foreign aid over the past decade accounts for nothing, but I digress.

When 85 percent of a country, not to mention surely an even higher percentage in Missouri, is Christian, it's not "protecting the minority," it's simply being able to take a look around and see the 'evil majority,' or Christians, are actually having their rights trampled.

And since when is it any individuals position to tell a state what they can and can't do? I guess when it's gay marriage or abortion, they feel they can.

The war on Christianity has been growing these past years and will reach a boiling point soon.

She and others who make the argument for other religions are quick to dismiss that little line in these kinds of laws that say other religions will be respected.

Standing up for beliefs necessary, action for religious rights admirable

Editor,

I am writing in response to Lola Shrimplin's thoughts on religion-based laws (March 9).

As a Christian, it is very exciting to hear there is action being taken to allow prayer and religious displays to be part of the public environment.

I believe Christianity is becoming the minority as society strives to accommodate to freedom of religion laws. For example, the removal of the Ten Commandments from a judicial building in Alabama, or lawsuits threatening organizations that choose to put up a Christmas tree instead of 'holiday' trees. I am waiting for when Christians are told we can no longer wear a cross around our necks.

There are statistics relating to religion in Missouri. According to www.adherents.com, 76 percent of the U.S. population claims Christianity and Missouri is one of the 36 states in which the Catholic Church is the largest body of religious people.

It has been said that tax payers' money should not go to displaying Christian symbols in schools. However, I recall being taught about other religious activities such as Hanukkah and the Ramadan in my school days.

There is no law telling others they cannot practice their religion of choice, so why are there laws against displays of Christianity? And what is wrong with someone saying they don't agree with such laws and seek to change them? I applaud the efforts of the Missouri legislator to forget what is acceptable in society and speak what they believe, even if it steps on a few toes.

New heating, air conditioning units can be operated off-site

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two Manhattan-area middle schools are getting a technology make-over.

Susan B. Anthony Middle School and Dwight D. Eisenhower Middle School are having their heating and air conditioning controls replaced to make them more energy efficient, said Robert Seymour, associate superintendent for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383.

"The old controls are antiquated and can't get repairs," Seymour said.

Seymour said even though the old controls were installed in the middle schools in 1996, they need replacing.

The new heating and air conditioning controls are state-of-the-art computer technology that offer Internet access as a way to monitor the system, said John Maberry, director of transportation and facilities for the district. The main system is inside the school, but can be checked off-site.

Maberry said the new controls have carbon dioxide sensors that test air quality in the buildings. When carbon dioxide levels are too high, the sensors activate rooftop heating and cooling units. The rooftop units pump fresh air into the building to lower the carbon dioxide levels. Once the levels are down, the unit shuts off, he said.

"The specific purpose (of the rooftop units) is to inject fresh air into the building," Maberry said.

The rooftop units work in conjunction with about 80 heat pumps spread throughout the building to heat and cool it. The rooftop units heat and cool the incoming air as it enters the building so the heat pumps aren't overloaded, Maberry said.

If one of the heat pumps shuts down – due to the replacements – the entire building will not lose heat, because the heat pumps work individually, he said.

"One area may be cooler, but it won't be freezing," Maberry said.

Since the new controls allow the units to run only when necessary, Maberry said they are much more efficient and will likely save the district money.

Maberry said one of the benefits of the new system is being able to check it through the Internet.

"I can diagnose and make changes to settings right through the computer," he said. "It allows me to see what's going on (and) what's malfunctioning."

The system can be monitored from any computer connected to it, Maberry said. The system is password protected for safety concerns, and the district has set parameters of what the high and low heating and cooling settings should be, so the system would notify Maberry and his staff if the settings were changed to outside those parameters.

The total cost for the replacements is $130,000 per school. The money is being taken from the Capital Outlay fund, which is a fund specifically for facility repair, Maberry said.

Thermal Comfort Air is the company contracted with the district to replace the heating and air conditioning controls, said Dennis Falder, shop foreman for the district.

Maberry said the district put out a request for proposals from various companies around the country, watched each company's presentation and then chose the lowest bidder to do the job.

Maberry said the replacements started in December and are slated to be finished by April.

"We do one room at a time," Falder said.

Most of the replacement work takes place at night or on the weekends, so the school day is not interrupted.

Maberry said if the new controls in the middle schools are successful in lowering heating and cooling costs, then the district will look at the other schools on a case-by-case basis to see if their systems can be replaced.

Some of the older grade schools are stone buildings and putting central heating and air conditioning in those buildings runs about $30 a square foot, or nearly $1 million for the entire building.

"In a nutshell, (the new controls) make it more efficient so it's drawing less power and heat," Seymour said.

PLAYBOY
is coming to
KANSAS

Attention female student body! Ever fantasized about being pictured in the number one men's magazine in the world? Now's your chance to turn fantasy into reality. PLAYBOY magazine is coming to Lawrence to interview and photograph female students for its fall 2006 "Girls of the Big 12" pictorial.

Thousands of coeds have tried out for PLAYBOY since it began its college conference pictorials 30 years ago. Many have gone on to become PLAYBOY Playmates, models and actresses. Even more have become doctors, lawyers, professors, business and government professionals, wives and moms. Who knows what the future holds for you!

To arrange an interview, please call 312-315-7342. Or, candidates can send a recent full-figure photo in a two-piece swimsuit plus a head-and-shoulders shot to Playboy's home office in Chicago. Polaroids, snapshots, or jpegs are OK. Candidates should also supply the following information:

1: Year in School 2: Course of Study 3: Contact info, including phone number
4: Date of Birth 5: Height, Weight & Measurements

Candidates must be at least 18 years of age and registered as a full- or part-time student at a Big 12 university. Clear copies of identification–one verifying enrollment in school and one a photo ID that shows date of birth–must be included. All photos become property of Playboy and cannot be returned.

Interviews at KANSAS will be held on APRIL 10 & 11
Playboy will contact candidates to provide the location where the Playboy Photo Team will hold interviews.

Send submissions to: Playboy Magazine,

TO THE EDITOR

K-State should extend kindness, try to bring Jankovich in as coach

Editor,

I truly believe the best choice for replacement (of Jim Wooldridge) would be Tim Jankovich, who is now an assistant to coach Bill Self at KU. Jankovich was the starting point guard for three years at K-State under perhaps our greatest coach ever, the late Jack Hartman.

Jankovich won many honors for his outstanding play at K-State as well as for his academics. He earned a Masters degree at K-State and was an assistant coach to Hartman here. He was even a Rhodes Scholar. Having a coach who is also a Rhodes Scholar would have to be great for public relations.

Jankovich has experience as head coach of the Division II University of North Texas, where he produced a huge turn-around and was very successful.

He also was a success as head basketball coach at Hutchinson Community College. He has been assistant for some great coaches. He also was a great recruiter as an assistant coach at Colorado State.

I think it is time to bring Janky back to K-State to try and take our men's basketball program to glory.

Some are against him because they say, "How could a Wildcat ever coach at KU?" I think Jankovich is there because Bill Self is a great coach. Janky has purple in his veins, and I think we should treat him as a Wildcat. We should make him one heck of an offer, and ensure he can get the support needed to build a successful basketball program here. Thank you.

Christianity should be respected, column relies on democratic clichés

Editor,

It looks like the anti-American liberals are at it again. Lola Shrimplin's article, "State has no right to endorse single religion," (March 9) contains more democratic clichés than Ted Kennedy's last drive to Chappiquidick.

Of course to open the article she needs to play to the anti-American crowd and explain how we shouldn't even be here in the first place; all we ever do is eradicate peace-loving civilizations.

I guess we never do anything right and never help out anybody in the world. I guess the $600 trillion this country has given in all types of foreign aid over the past decade accounts for nothing, but I digress.

When 85 percent of a country, not to mention surely an even higher percentage in Missouri, is Christian, it's not "protecting the minority," it's simply being able to take a look around and see the 'evil majority,' or Christians, are actually having their rights trampled.

And since when is it any individuals position to tell a state what they can and can't do? I guess when it's gay marriage or abortion, they feel they can.

The war on Christianity has been growing these past years and will reach a boiling point soon.

She and others who make the argument for other religions are quick to dismiss that little line in these kinds of laws that say other religions will be respected.

Standing up for beliefs necessary, action for religious rights admirable

Editor,

I am writing in response to Lola Shrimplin's thoughts on religion-based laws (March 9).

As a Christian, it is very exciting to hear there is action being taken to allow prayer and religious displays to be part of the public environment.

I believe Christianity is becoming the minority as society strives to accommodate to freedom of religion laws. For example, the removal of the Ten Commandments from a judicial building in Alabama, or lawsuits threatening organizations that choose to put up a Christmas tree instead of 'holiday' trees. I am waiting for when Christians are told we can no longer wear a cross around our necks.

There are statistics relating to religion in Missouri. According to www.adherents.com, 76 percent of the U.S. population claims Christianity and Missouri is one of the 36 states in which the Catholic Church is the largest body of religious people.

It has been said that tax payers' money should not go to displaying Christian symbols in schools. However, I recall being taught about other religious activities such as Hanukkah and the Ramadan in my school days.

There is no law telling others they cannot practice their religion of choice, so why are there laws against displays of Christianity? And what is wrong with someone saying they don't agree with such laws and seek to change them? I applaud the efforts of the Missouri legislator to forget what is acceptable in society and speak what they believe, even if it steps on a few toes.

New heating, air conditioning units can be operated off-site

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two Manhattan-area middle schools are getting a technology make-over.

Susan B. Anthony Middle School and Dwight D. Eisenhower Middle School are having their heating and air conditioning controls replaced to make them more energy efficient, said Robert Seymour, associate superintendent for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383.

"The old controls are antiquated and can't get repairs," Seymour said.

Seymour said even though the old controls were installed in the middle schools in 1996, they need replacing.

The new heating and air conditioning controls are state-of-the-art computer technology that offer Internet access as a way to monitor the system, said John Maberry, director of transportation and facilities for the district. The main system is inside the school, but can be checked off-site.

Maberry said the new controls have carbon dioxide sensors that test air quality in the buildings. When carbon dioxide levels are too high, the sensors activate rooftop heating and cooling units. The rooftop units pump fresh air into the building to lower the carbon dioxide levels. Once the levels are down, the unit shuts off, he said.

"The specific purpose (of the rooftop units) is to inject fresh air into the building," Maberry said.

The rooftop units work in conjunction with about 80 heat pumps spread throughout the building to heat and cool it. The rooftop units heat and cool the incoming air as it enters the building so the heat pumps aren't overloaded, Maberry said.

If one of the heat pumps shuts down – due to the replacements – the entire building will not lose heat, because the heat pumps work individually, he said.

"One area may be cooler, but it won't be freezing," Maberry said.

Since the new controls allow the units to run only when necessary, Maberry said they are much more efficient and will likely save the district money.

Maberry said one of the benefits of the new system is being able to check it through the Internet.

"I can diagnose and make changes to settings right through the computer," he said. "It allows me to see what's going on (and) what's malfunctioning."

The system can be monitored from any computer connected to it, Maberry said. The system is password protected for safety concerns, and the district has set parameters of what the high and low heating and cooling settings should be, so the system would notify Maberry and his staff if the settings were changed to outside those parameters.

The total cost for the replacements is $130,000 per school. The money is being taken from the Capital Outlay fund, which is a fund specifically for facility repair, Maberry said.

Thermal Comfort Air is the company contracted with the district to replace the heating and air conditioning controls, said Dennis Falder, shop foreman for the district.

Maberry said the district put out a request for proposals from various companies around the country, watched each company's presentation and then chose the lowest bidder to do the job.

Maberry said the replacements started in December and are slated to be finished by April.

"We do one room at a time," Falder said.

Most of the replacement work takes place at night or on the weekends, so the school day is not interrupted.

Maberry said if the new controls in the middle schools are successful in lowering heating and cooling costs, then the district will look at the other schools on a case-by-case basis to see if their systems can be replaced.

Some of the older grade schools are stone buildings and putting central heating and air conditioning in those buildings runs about $30 a square foot, or nearly $1 million for the entire building.

"In a nutshell, (the new controls) make it more efficient so it's drawing less power and heat," Seymour said.

PLAYBOY
is coming to
KANSAS

Attention female student body! Ever fantasized about being pictured in the number one men's magazine in the world? Now's your chance to turn fantasy into reality. PLAYBOY magazine is coming to Lawrence to interview and photograph female students for its fall 2006 "Girls of the Big 12" pictorial.

Thousands of coeds have tried out for PLAYBOY since it began its college conference pictorials 30 years ago. Many have gone on to become PLAYBOY Playmates, models and actresses. Even more have become doctors, lawyers, professors, business and government professionals, wives and moms. Who knows what the future holds for you!

To arrange an interview, please call 312-315-7342. Or, candidates can send a recent full-figure photo in a two-piece swimsuit plus a head-and-shoulders shot to Playboy's home office in Chicago. Polaroids, snapshots, or jpegs are OK. Candidates should also supply the following information:

1: Year in School 2: Course of Study 3: Contact info, including phone number
4: Date of Birth 5: Height, Weight & Measurements

Candidates must be at least 18 years of age and registered as a full- or part-time student at a Big 12 university. Clear copies of identification—one verifying enrollment in school and one a photo ID that shows date of birth—must be included. All photos become property of Playboy and cannot be returned.

Interviews at KANSAS will be held on APRIL 10 & 11
Playboy will contact candidates to provide the location where the Playboy Photo Team will hold interviews.

Send submissions to: Playboy Magazine,

Quick tips for March Madness

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Tomorrow is the greatest day of the year.

Not the day before classes end and spring break begins, but something even better than that.

It's the moment when you can watch college basketball from the time you serve up your lunch until the moment you decide to go to bed.

The NCAA Tournament, so appropriately coined, "March Madness," is upon us, and there is nothing one can do to avoid it.

Everyone has an opinion on who is going to win, from athletes to secretaries. Everyone has his or her brackets correct until the first upset of the tournament causes you to toss that paper you worked so diligently on into the trash.

If you have not filled out your bracket yet, here are some important tips to remember as you sit at your desk or computer.

USE A PEN

Don't be a cheater; make sure your bracket is legit. You can't go back and change your answers. You can go back and make adjustments Thursday morning, but after tipoff, the only marks that can be made on the bracket are a plus for a win or a minus for a loss.

DON'T BE AFRAID TO TAKE A GUESS

There is always a good chance that a lower seed will defeat a high seed in the first round, but if you're not a gambler, go with the high seed. The low seed vs. high seed matchups you should be aware of are No. 12 Texas A&M against No. 5 Syracuse.

The Orangemen would not have even been in the tourney if not for their improbable run in the Big East Tournament. But Syracuse has nothing left, and the Aggies are a better team than its No. 12 ranking.

Also, take a chance with No. 11 San Diego State against No. 6 Indiana in the Oakland Regional. The Hoosiers have been inconsistent all year, and their next loss will be the final game for coach Mike Davis, who will not return next season.

WATCH OUT FOR WEST VIRGINIA

If there is any team in the tournament that is loaded, but not hyped, it is the Mountaineers. They have everything needed to make a deep run into the tournament. They have a solid backcourt and frontcourt, depth on the bench and the ability to score with anyone in the nation.

Throw in a zone defense like none other in college basketball, and they will create problems for teams that don't have the adequate time to scout against them.

STAY FAR AWAY FROM THE 'ZAGS

It was great half-a-decade ago when Gonzaga was coming out of nowhere to beat teams from the power conferences.

But that is in the past.

The Bulldogs are good enough to get into the Sweet 16, but no further than that. Tournament games are won with solid and consistent backcourts, and this is where the Zags' are lacking.

They will get bounced in the third round by UCLA, who boast one of the best backcourts in the nation that you might never have heard of: sophomores Jordan Farmar and Aaron Afflalo.

Sit back, slot about nine hours of your day away on Thursday and Friday and enjoy the show.

Who knows? Maybe next year you'll be inking in K-State, if Director of Athletics Tim Weiser hires the right coach.

Cats look for fresh start against 'Hawks

Staff Report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team will be looking for a fresh start against Kansas today, coming off back-to-back 4-3 losses to Oklahoma State and Iowa Saturday and Sunday, respectively.

The Wildcats' busy schedule does not allow a lot of time to reflect, coach Steve Bietau said.

"One of the nice things about having matches close together is you really don't have a lot of time to sit around and feel bad about any failures that you've had," Bietau said. "You have to get ready to play again."

Part of that preparation will go towards singles, where K-State lost eight of 12 matches last weekend.

The problems in singles stem from game management, Bietau said.

"It's not a tactical thing," Bietau said. "We're talking about being able to pull out close matches and having our best stuff at the most important times."

The Wildcats have not had as much trouble in pairs, gaining the advantage in doubles in their last five matches.

The success was not so easy earlier in the year when K-State lost the doubles point in three consecutive matches.

"I felt like we were underperforming in doubles, so we worked on it, and it got better, but now we have another area that's not where we want it to be," Bietau said.

K-state and Kansas match up pretty evenly, Bietau said.

The Wildcats and Jayhawks have both gone 1-2, with nearly identical scores, to common opponents Tulsa, Oklahoma State and Texas Tech.

However, the similarities in records and opponents can be misleading, Bietau said.

"I'm always cautious about looking at common opponents because it doesn't always tell you a lot that's useful for you," Bietau said.

As far as rivalries go, this match may be a little more laid back, Bietau said.

"I think with the international nature of our team and the fact that we are still pretty young," Bietau said.

"I'm not sure the rivalry is the same as it is in some other sports.

"I don't get the sense from our team that they are uptight about playing KU; it's just another match."

K-State takes on Kansas at 2 p.m at the Washburn Tennis Facility at Peters Recreation Complex.

Rice's home run carries Cats past Shockers, extends streak

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two teams came into Tuesday night's game at Tointon Family Stadium riding nation-leading win streaks, and one swing of the bat by K-State senior Barrett Rice proved to be the deciding factor in a 6-3 victory by the No. 29 ranked Wildcats (12-1) over the No. 19 Wichita State Shockers (17-3).

K-State now owns a 15-game home winning streak, and the nation's second-longest winning streak at 12 games after snapping the Shocker's 14-game winning streak.

Rice stepped up to the plate in the bottom of the sixth inning with the Wildcats trailing 3-1 and two runners on base. After taking one ball and one strike, he blasted a ball that cleared the trees over the left field wall, in what sophomore starting pitcher Brad Hutt called the farthest hit ball he had ever seen at Tointon. The home run gave the Wildcats a lead they would not relinquish.

"That was the first ball I've ever hit that hard," Rice said. "It was a fastball inside, and luckily I just got one solid."

The game started off as a pitcher's duel between Hutt and Shocker freshman Aaron Shafer.

Hutt got in a jam early, giving up one run in the first inning, but only surrendered two more runs in his final 5.2 innings, with both runs coming in the fifth. He said he tried to regain his composure after giving up the early run, and was happy he could help his team get a win of this magnitude.

"I made some good pitches after that first run, and it's just a matter of staying composed and getting back in our game," Hutt said. "This win gives us a sense of confidence, but at the same time we know we have to maintain this level of play throughout the rest of the season."

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

K-State junior Eddie Vasquez lines up for a bunt Tuesday evening against Wichita State. The Wildcats beat the 19th ranked Shockers 6-3, improving their record to 13-1.

Hutt struck out five batters and gave up eight hits in his 6.2 innings of work, and earned the win to move him to 3-0 on the season.

Shafer was lights-out in the first five innings for the Shockers, giving up only one run off three hits. He also had a career-high six strikeouts, but his earned run average moved from 1.31 to 2.42 after surrendering four total runs to the Wildcats, with three coming in the sixth inning. He was removed from the game after giving up the home run to Rice and took the loss to fall to 3-1 on the season.

Senior closer Bryan Peterson came into the game in the ninth inning and struck out two of the four batters he faced to finish off the Shockers, earning his third save of the season.

The Wildcats recorded eight hits on the evening and six runs, but even with that, coach Brad Hill said the guy on the mound made all the difference in the win for the Wildcats.

"It all starts with Brad Hutt on the mound," Hill said. "I thought he gave us a great effort out there. He made some nice adjustments on them after the first inning, and he just threw a good game."

Rice finished the game 2-for-3 with three runs batted in and one run scored.

Freshman Tyler Link came into the game in the sixth inning to pinch-hit for sophomore Derek Bunker, and in his first at-bat he singled, which brought home Eli Rumler for the fifth run of the game for the Wildcats.

Junior Jared Goedert did not record a hit in the K-State victory, but he had an RBI and two runs scored, with his first coming off Rice's home run and second coming off freshman Byron Wiley's single to right field, adding another insurance run and putting K-State ahead by the final score, 6-3.

The third-largest crowd in Tointon history witnessed the Wildcats defeat the Shockers, with 2,127 fans piled into the stadium.

"That was the first ball I've ever hit that hard. It was a fastball inside, and luckily I just got one solid."

Barrett Rice
SENIOR

Hill said he was excited to see all the fans show up for the game and knows this type of atmosphere will be beneficial to his team as it enters conference play in a couple weeks.

"I thought this game was really big for us," Hill said. "To get in front of a big crowd kind of gave up a Big 12 (Conference) atmosphere. I told the guys to get use to it because in a couple weeks we got games like this every Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and it's good to win a game like this to show we can do it."

NFL | Shields agrees to contract with Chiefs

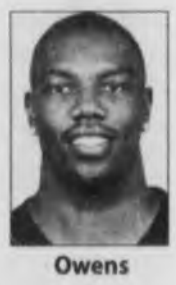
Shields

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Right guard Will Shields, an 11-time All-Pro, has agreed to a four-year contract that will ensure his career ends with the Kansas City Chiefs, a team spokesman confirmed Monday.

Shields has started 207 games for the Chiefs, who drafted him in the third round out of Nebraska in 1993.

Shields contemplated retirement for more than a year because of chronic back pain. The team had been working on a reworked deal that would make his contract more cap-friendly, but negotiations were slowed by uncertainty over the collective bargaining agreement.

NFL | Vikings ship Culpepper to Miami



Culpepper

MINNEAPOLIS — Daunte Culpepper's seven up-and-down seasons in Minnesota came to an end Tuesday.

Just what the disgruntled quarterback wanted.

The Vikings agreed to trade the three-time Pro Bowl selection to the Miami Dolphins for a second-round draft pick, less than a week after Culpepper — who is still rehabbing his injured right knee — said he wanted out.

NFL | Owens released by Philadelphia

Owens

PHILADELPHIA — Terrell Owens is free to play for any team willing to have him.

The Philadelphia Eagles released the exiled Owens on Tuesday, ending a tumultuous, two-year relationship with the wide receiver.

Owens was due a $5 million roster bonus on Wednesday, so the Eagles had to cut him or trade him before then to avoid paying him the money.

The move was a formality because Owens was kicked off the team in November following a series of incidents and infractions, including repeated criticism of quarterback Donovan McNabb.

MLB | Francona gets extension through 2008

Francona

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Terry Francona has found a home in Boston.

The manager who led the Red Sox to their first World Series championship in 86 years received a two-year contract extension through 2008, seven months after uprooting his wife and children and moving just outside the city where he works.

General manager Theo Epstein called Francona "a mainstay of the organization" whose ability to communicate, ignore criticism and create a loose clubhouse atmosphere is important in Boston with its passionate fans and pervasive media.

NFL | Cowboys release Keyshawn Johnson

Artist uses exploration to create pieces that delve into the present, future

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There's something wild in Willard Hall. Don't worry; it's supposed to be there.

Leah Bestmann's thesis exhibit for her master's of fine arts degree, titled Threshold, will be on display in the Chapman Gallery through the end of the month.

There are 28 pieces total, a combination of watercolor, gouache, ink, charcoal, oil and acrylics, and they will be available for purchase, after the exhibit ends.

According to Bestmann, her artistic process is not about portraying something in the present but creating something new.

"All of them are about the imaginative spaces and fictional places, and they just kind of evolve," she said.

Bestmann said she uses a graduated process to create her works.

She makes a few marks, reacts to those, makes more marks, reacts, adds here and subtracts there, without a concrete idea of what the finished product will be.

"I never know what I'm going to get, it's very exploratory ... in a day and age when most things have been explored," she said.

In Bestmann's artist statement, she states that much of her inspiration comes from her interest in science fiction and fantasy, both written and cinematic.

The effect of her interest in her art has aided her creation, and Bestmann said her creative process is about "discovering a place when you don't know anything about it, a land uninhabited."

As the creative process has flowed, Bestmann said her thesis adviser, associate professor of art Kathleen King, has been helpful during the process.

"She's been very patient, she really just kind of guided me," Bestmann said.

King said since Bestmann began work as a graduate student, her artistic focus has shifted from drawing and painting from observation to the most abstract imagery presented in the exhibit.

Although candidates for a masters of fine arts are required to submit a written report, King said, the thesis committee considers the required art display as the body of the thesis statement.

Bestmann hasn't always had an art career at K-State.

She first attended Augustana College in Sioux Falls, S.D., and studied under Carl Grupp, emeritus professor of art for Augustana College.

Grupp was full of praise for his former student, and said he would like to see her doing museum work.

"She was just dynamite," he said. "I think her work is right up there with a lot of the greats."

In addition to her own artistic ability, Grupp said Bestmann worked to help other students as well.

"She just was a leader in the class ... she'd inspire the other classmates to push on farther."

As one of her first teachers, Grupp said he has enthusiastically watched Bestmann's progress through the years.

"I think it's exciting, it will be fun to see where this all leads," he said.

After her master's work is completed, Bestmann said she hopes to teach or tour the country, but that creation remains her first priority.

"I'm going to find some type of job where I can keep doing my art."

Looking for love on spring break has its challenges

LAUREN ROHRER

Spring break is an ideal time for getting out of Manhattan, soaking up some sun, draining your bank accounts and hooking up with relative strangers.

Sure, you could say that we hook up with relative strangers on any given night in Aggieville, but if you're doing it in some third world country, there's almost zero chance of running into your fling on a random Tuesday morning in the K-State Student Union (uncomfortable).

Therefore, we celebrate our own immoralities; and why shouldn't we? In five years, our behavior will be "socially irresponsible," as opposed to right now, when it's simply referred to as "college."

But before you jump headfirst into Tequila for a week, a few things to consider from this very socially irresponsible spring break veteran.

Ladies, I can tell you now with absolute certainty, Mr. Right is not going to be in Cancun. Unless it's Mr. Cuervo, in which case, you really can't go wrong there.

Mr. Right Now, on the other hand, will be there in full force. I am all for hooking up on vacation. Just do not lose your sanity completely, and be sure to take the right precautions or you will wind up with some insane gynecological condition that even Lafene hasn't heard of yet.

Watch your cash flow. Honestly, one week of sleeping seven-deep in one room is not going to kill you. However, dealing with the parents after you have run out of money halfway through your semester might.

Difficult as it might be, do your best to hang on to a shred of common sense and do not leave $20 tips, no matter how sexy the bartender is.

One last thing, and this is about as deep and sincere as I get; do not drink the water. Seriously, do not drink the water, unless you want to spend your break back at the crappy motel revisiting every meal you have had in the last six months.

And for that matter, why would you have water in your glass anyway, you pansy. It is spring break, put some liquor in your system or do not tell anyone you are from Manhattan because you will embarrass yourself and, more importantly, the rest of us.

DAILY HOROSCOPES

Aries
(March 21 - April 19)
You will have a grilled cheese sandwich today, and a bowl of tomato soup. When nobody is looking you will secretly dunk your sandwich. You never tire of the wild life, do you?

Taurus
(April 20 - May 20)
You are being followed by a man with an eye patch and a prosthetic limb. He, in turn, is being followed by a large reptile, which is making a ticking sound.

Gemini
(May 21 - June 20)
In the grocery store, you will see quite a few people with infants in their shopping carts. Try though you might, however, you will not be able to find the bin with the children. Perhaps they're sold out? Important Safety Tip: do not stop one of the women with an infant and ask her to show you where her baby came from.

Cancer
(June 21 - July 22)
It was a simple mistake, which anyone could have made. What's more, now you know better. I think, though, that the expression is too widespread for you to actually get it changed to "never look a gift horse in either end."

Leo
(July 23 - August 22)
A man dressed like a giant shrimp will roar past you in an experimental hovercraft today. (Again.)

Virgo
(August 23 - September 22)
Someone will ask you if you'd like some "fresh ground pepper" on your salad. Personally, I always say "yes" to people carrying a baseball bat, outside a playing field.

Libra
(September 22 - October 22)
When's the last time you did something nice for Doug? Sure, he's cranky a lot, and dresses funny, but he's a good person. Perhaps you should take him to lunch?

Scorpio
(October 23 - November 21)
Today you will discover a really cool technique of whistling through your nose. Oddly, nobody will be terribly enthusiastic about your new talent.

Sagittarius
(November 22 - December 21)
Leek soup day, today. Despite your recent tendency towards shoplifting vegetables, I highly recommend you buy a leek, not take one.

Capricorn
(December 22 - January 20)
You will decide to write a letter to the editor. "Who is this 'Al Ninyo' guy," you'll say, "and why don't they just lock him up?"

Aquarius
(January 21 - February 18)
Your incisors will seem to be getting longer today, and you will find sunlight hurts your eyes. Probably just a cold, and nothing to worry about.

Pisces
(February 19 - March 20)
It's time to move on to bigger and better opportunities. Be sure to be outrageously nice to everyone until you leave.

After watching a presentation on severe weather, Priyanka Parajuli, 9 year old Jardine resident, receives a simulated tornado in a bottle. The presentation was done by Matt Miller, chief meteorologist for KTKA-TV 49 news, as part of severe weather awareness week as a program for Jardine apartment residents.

Topeka meteorologist visits Jardine

Lightning can reach 50,000 degrees Fahrenheit.

This was one of many pieces of information given at Matt Miller's presentation at the Jardine Community Center Tuesday night.

Miller is the chief meteorologist at Channel 49 News in Topeka.

"This presentation is important, because everyone in Kansas needs to know what to do in the coming months of the storm season," Miller said. "I hope they have a better awareness of how bad thunderstorms can be."

In a room full of students, families and young children, Miller began by asking the crowd who had witnessed a tornado. He said he has lived in "tornado ally," which Kansas is a part of, most of his life.

His presentation included the elements needed to form a thunderstorm, like moisture and an unstable environment.

"Thunderstorms also need a forcing mechanism to kick the storm off," Miller said. "Some storms can grow to be 10 to 12 miles tall."

Miller also described the varying types of storms and the differences between them, as well as explaining tornado warnings and watches. He went on to describe the stages of a thunderstorm. These include the cumulus stage, the mature stage, the dissipating stage and the wind shear.

He also spoke briefly on lightning, which he said is the second highest killer in weather, preceded only by floods.

"All thunderstorms have lightning," Miller said. "It relieves a charge that is built up from the atmosphere and the ground."

Miller said the thunder we hear is actually the air exploding as lightning creates a shockwave.

"Every five seconds you count between the sight of lightning and the thunder you hear, the storm is three miles away," he said.

He also spoke about the severe weather in Lawrence, this past weekend. He said what looked like a tornado actually was what is known as a "gustnado," which is different, but creates the same type of damage.

The way tornados are measured is by the Fujita Wind Damage Scale, which goes from F0-F5, Miller said.

He explained the different types of tornados, including gustnadoes, waterspouts and landspouts.

"We have a huge international population in Jardine, and many of them aren't used to the severe weather we have in Kansas," said Craig Wanklyn, community center assistant coordinator at Jardine. "Hopefully this will give them safety tools. This presentation is a part of Severe Weather Awareness week."

After the presentation, weather-themed prizes were drawn, including flashlights, weather radios, and thermometers.

Many left the presentation with an increased understanding of the area's weather.

"This was very interesting for me, since this is my first year in Kansas," Solange Uwituze, graduate student in animal science and industry, said. "Where I come from, we don't usually have strong winds or tornados, so I was curious about the science."

As for this season, Matt Miller said he has his prediction for what is in store in this area.

"You never know for sure, and everyone thinks that if a storm hits them, it's automatically a rough season," Miller said. "But I think we're in for above average storm activity."

Band plans trip to South Pacific

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Symphony Band will share American music with audiences across the South Pacific this spring.

During its trip scheduled from May 18-27, the band will travel to Australia, New Zealand and Fiji. The band's director, Frank Tracz, said that while the band had considered Europe as its travel destination, staff members decided on the South Pacific instead.

"It was more bang for the American buck," he said.

Band members conducted fundraisers, including selling calendars and organizing a battle of the bands competition, to offset the cost of the trip. Private donors also made contributions toward the trip.

During the trip, the band will perform five to seven concerts, some shared with local bands and ensembles. The band is preparing about 25 songs for its performances.

While in Australia, Tracz said band members will see landmarks like the Sydney Opera House and will experience a traditional meal of the native Maori tribe.

"The students are going to see a part of the world most of them probably wouldn't otherwise get to visit," he said. "It should open up a lot of band members' eyes, and that's a good thing."

Alfred Cochran, assistant provost and professor of music, said the Symphony Band's trip was not only a positive representation of K-State but an excellent learning experience for the students involved.

"I think it's a good growth opportunity for our students to see other cultures and hear other musicians play," he said. "And when you know, as a musician, that you're traveling abroad, you're going to practice very hard ... which makes it an excellent growth opportunity for the ensemble."

Additional dates will be added to the band's practice schedule to prepare for the upcoming trip. Band members already practice three times a week, and will meet for an additional five rehearsals before they leave.

The band's last local performance before leaving will be the evening of May 15 in Manhattan's City Park. The band will play several of the pieces it will play on the trip.

Symphony band member Melanie Caster, sophomore in music education, said despite worrying about travel hassles like currency exchange and jet lag, she was excited about the South Pacific trip.

"I'm looking forward to experiencing the various cultures of the three countries we're playing in and seeing how the people react to our music," she said.

Committee sends gambling bill to Kansas Senate

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – A day after one Senate panel endorsed a school finance package, another committee advanced a gambling bill Tuesday that leaders hope will cover the bulging education price tag.

The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee voted 4-3 to advance the casino and slot machine proposal without a recommendation on whether it should be passed. Senators are expected to debate the issue later this week, but it's unknown whether supporters can generate the 21 votes needed for passage.

"It's going to be an extremely close vote," Senate President Steve Morris, R-Hugoton, said. "Right now, I think we have somewhere between 20 and 21 votes."

Senators haven't passed a gambling bill in more than a decade. Committee Chairman Pete Brungardt said he was "quietly confident" it will pass this year.

"I feel good about it. The only vote that counts is the final one, and we should know by the end of the week," Brungardt, R-Salina, said.

The gambling bill advanced only after Sen. Roger Reitz, an opponent of the proposal, declined to vote. That avoided what would have been a tie vote, which would have kept the measure bottled up.

Reitz said the rising costs of meeting Kansas Supreme Court and federal education mandates meant that gambling was just the beginning of a bad trend.

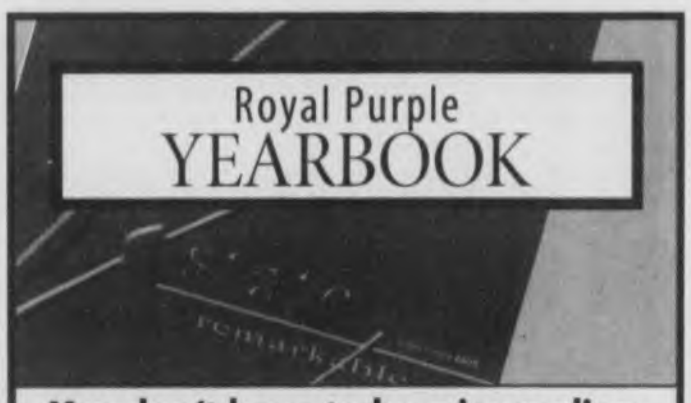
"With No Child Left Behind, we're going to have gambling and taxes in a big way," Reitz, R-Manhattan, said. "That dog doesn't hunt with me."

But supporters like Morris and Gov. Kathleen Sebelius said Kansans already gamble out-of-state or at Indian casinos, meaning the state experiences gambling's pain without any revenue gain.

"We are shipping to other states, voluntarily, a large amount of money that could stay within Kansas," Sebelius said during a news conference.

Senate leaders see expanded gambling as a way to generate revenue to help pay for a plan to spend an additional $660 million over three years on education to meet a Kansas Supreme Court mandate.

The Senate Education Committee endorsed the school finance bill Monday, and it is expected to be debated next week.



The gambling bill would generate about $152 million in the coming year, of which 25 percent would be returned to local governments for property tax relief.

Annual revenues are expected to jump to $200 million with the opening of casinos in Wyandotte County and southeast Kansas.

The measure also calls for 5,000 slot machines to be divided among parimutuel horse and dog tracks in Frontenac, Kansas City, Wichita and Dodge City, if that town constructs a track.

The committee amended the bill to reduce the number from 7,000.

There also have been proposals to build casinos in Wichita, elsewhere in south-central Kansas and in Junction City.

Judge bars some Moussaoui prosecution witnesses

By Matthew Barakat
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALEXANDRIA, Va. – The judge in the Zacarias Moussaoui trial dealt a serious blow to the government's death-penalty case Tuesday, barring roughly half of the prosecutors' key witnesses because a federal lawyer improperly coached several of them on their testimony.

U.S. District Judge Leonie Brinkema rejected a Moussaoui defense request that she go further and dismiss the government's death-penalty bid for the al-Qaeda conspirator outright. She put off resumption of the trial until Monday to give the government a chance to appeal.

Justice Department spokeswoman Tasia Scolinos said the ruling was being reviewed. While not addressing the likelihood of overturning it, she added that "it is important to remember" Moussaoui has pleaded guilty and at a minimum will be imprisoned for life with no chance of release.

Testimony from the barred witnesses was to make up about half of the government's case, prosecutors said.

Brinkema imposed the sanctions after being informed that a lawyer in the federal Transportation Security Administration, Carla Martin, had urged seven witnesses from the Federal Aviation Administration to read trial transcripts and had prepared them for certain questions on cross-examination.

Federal rules of evidence prohibit witnesses from exposure to trial testimony because of the possibility they will alter their testimony based on what they learn. Brinkema detailed the rules in a pretrial order.

"I don't think in the annals of criminal law there has ever been a case with this many significant problems," Brinkema said after a daylong hearing revealed additional difficulties caused by Martin.

Moussaoui is the only person charged in this country in connection with the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks. He pleaded guilty in April to conspiring with al-Qaeda to hijack aircraft and other crimes, but he denies any involvement in 9/11, saying he was training for a possible future attack.

The sentencing trial that began last week will determine Moussaoui's punishment: death or life in prison.

The aviation witnesses are key because, to obtain the death penalty, the government must prove that Moussaoui's actions resulted in at least one death on Sept. 11. The witnesses were expected to testify that they would have issued alerts and implemented security measures at airports if Moussaoui had revealed his al-Qaeda membership and the true intent of his flight training when he was arrested and interrogated by federal agents in August 2001.

Six witnesses who testified at Tuesday's hearing - the jury was not present - said Martin's exhortations would not have affected their testimony. But Brinkema said that wasn't clear.

"Whether the witnesses have actually been tainted or not is almost impossible to tell," Brinkema said. "There are a number of errors so serious that that portion of the government's case has been seriously eroded."

Martin had been expected to testify Tuesday, but she invoked her right to an attorney. That attorney, Roscoe Howard, later advised her not to testify.

On Monday Brinkema halted the trial after prosecutors revealed that Martin had been coaching seven witnesses - all past and former employees of the FAA - on what was happening at the trial and how to prepare for cross-examination. E-mails written by Martin suggest she believed prosecutors had overstated the FAA's ability to prevent the 9/11 attacks in their opening statement to the jury, and that the FAA witnesses had to be prepared for aggressive cross-examination as a result.

Tuesday's hearing also indicated Martin had falsely advised defense lawyers that two witnesses would be unwilling to meet with them even though the witnesses had said no such thing.

The trial could be delayed anew if prosecutors appeal Brinkema's ruling to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond. Prosecutors made a similar move – albeit not in the middle of trial – in 2003 when Brinkema eliminated the death penalty as a possible punishment for Moussaoui after the government refused to allow defense questioning of al-Qaeda witnesses in U.S. custody. The appellate court overruled Brinkema in 2004 and reinstated the death penalty option.

Outside the courthouse on Tuesday, Abraham Scott of Springfield, Va., whose wife Janice Marie died at the Pentagon on 9/11, called Brinkema's ruling "a fair decision," though he was disappointed that the stricken testimony would not expose what he considered FAA failings prior to the attacks.

Fossett attempts record from Salina

By Roxana Hegeman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALINA, Kan. – Aviator Steve Fossett flew his lightweight experimental airplane Tuesday across much of the United States and Canada in yet another quest to break a world flight record.

Amid little fanfare, the millionaire adventurer quietly left in a seemingly faultless takeoff from Salina Municipal Airport at 6:40 a.m. in the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer. By mid-afternoon he was cruising over the Atlantic Ocean heading toward the western Sahara Desert.

Fossett wants to break the closed-circuit distance record for a flight that begins and ends at the same location. If all goes well, Fossett will land in Salina on Friday afternoon.

His plane, made of lightweight carbon fiber, quickly reached 36,948 feet as it soared above Canada just hours later. Fossett should reach his cruising altitude of 45,000 feet just west of the African coast, according to his mission control's online journal.

The weather was excellent when plane lifted off the 12,300-foot runway. The flight comes about a year after Fossett flew out of Salina on the world's first, solo nonstop trip around the globe. He returned after 23,000 miles and 67 hours. Last month, he broke the record for the world's longest aircraft flight, traveling 26,389 miles in about 76 hours.

"This is a special man and a special aircraft attempting to achieve another significant aviation milestone," said Timothy Rogers, the airport's executive director.

Fossett is piloting the GlobalFlyer on roughly the same route as last year's flight, but he will add several turns to increase the total mileage. The flight is expected to take about 79 hours.

The existing closed-circuit record of nearly 25,000 miles was set in 1986 by the team Richard Rutan and Jeana Yeager.

Back at mission control at the K-State-Salina campus, the progress of the flight was closely watched by Fossett's wife, Peggy, and aviation students who were monitoring its operations.

Students are responsible for tracking Fossett's record attempt on a Web site, http://www.salina.k-state.edu/global-flyer, and for keeping a blog.

Among the students is Patrick Rinearson, a senior at the college. This is the third Fossett flight he has worked on. His responsibilities include watching the jet stream to estimate the length of the flight and keeping track of the plane's position through the onboard Global Positioning System transmitter, satellite phone and text reporting software.

"It has been a great experience to be able to meet the people we have met, to work with people like Steve Fossett," said Rinearson, who was running the mission control team for takeoff.

Evan Beckman, an aviation maintenance instructor at Kansas State who helped with the plane, said the takeoff looked good but noted Fossett still had a long way to go.

"His biggest trick is getting a little sleep now and then. He has the tough job," Beckman said.

Perhaps the one person on the ground who may know best what Fossett is experiencing in that regard is Brad Amstutz, a flight instructor at the Salina campus.

Sitting in a flight simulator on campus, Amstutz is mirroring Fossett's flight around the world – including the sleep deprivation and fatigue – as part of study by the university's psychology department in Manhattan, examining how much cognitive skills deteriorate under such flight conditions.

Throughout the flight simulation, Amstutz will take a battery of tests looking at not only how well he can complete sentences, but also his emotional state and his psychological state, he said.

Amstutz said this flight simulation will be tougher than the last Fossett flight he mirrored because this record attempt is going to be about 10 hours longer and more taxing.

Google to receive order to give up some data

By Michael Liedtke
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN JOSE, Calif. – A federal judge said Tuesday he intends to order Google Inc. to turn over some of its Internet records to the U.S. Justice Department, but expressed reservations about requiring the company to divulge some of its most sensitive data – the actual requests that people enter into its popular search engine.

U.S. District Judge James Ware told the Justice Department it can expect to get at least some of the information sought from Google as part of the Bush administration's effort to revive a law meant to shield children from online pornography.

But Ware stressed he was "particularly concerned" about the Justice Department's demand for a random sample of search requests entered into Google's Internet-leading search engine.

The judge said he didn't want to do anything to create the perception that Internet search engines and other large online databases could become tools for government surveillance. He seemed less concerned about requiring Google to supply the government with a random list of Web sites indexed by the company.

Ware said he planned to issue a written ruling quickly.

After the 90-minute hearing, Google attorney Nicole Wong said the company was pleased with Ware's thoughtful questions.

Justice Department spokesman Charles Miller said the agency looks forward to Ware's decision. "We hope his opinion will demonstrate the government's belief that this info would be helpful in protecting the nation's youth against potentially harmful material," he said.

During the hearing, another Google attorney, Albert Gidari, tried to persuade Ware that the government could get virtually all the information it wanted from publicly accessible services offered by Amazon.com Inc.'s Alexa.com and InfoSpace Inc.'s Dogpile.com.

T. Barton Carter, a communications and law professor at Boston University, said the concerns raised by Ware should be heartening to privacy rights advocates but cautioned against reading too much into the judge's comments until his written order.

"What's going to be important is whether he limits the information (given to the government) and whether he explains why he drew the line where he did," Carter said.

Tuesday marked the first time that Google and the Justice Department have faced off in court over a government subpoena issued nearly seven months ago. The Justice Department initially wanted a breakdown of search requests and Web site addresses from Google for a study that the government believes will prove filtering software doesn't prevent children from viewing sexually explicit material on the Internet.

Google refused to hand over the information, even as three other major search engines turned over some of the requested data. Mountain View-based Google maintained the government's request would intrude on its users' privacy and its trade secrets.

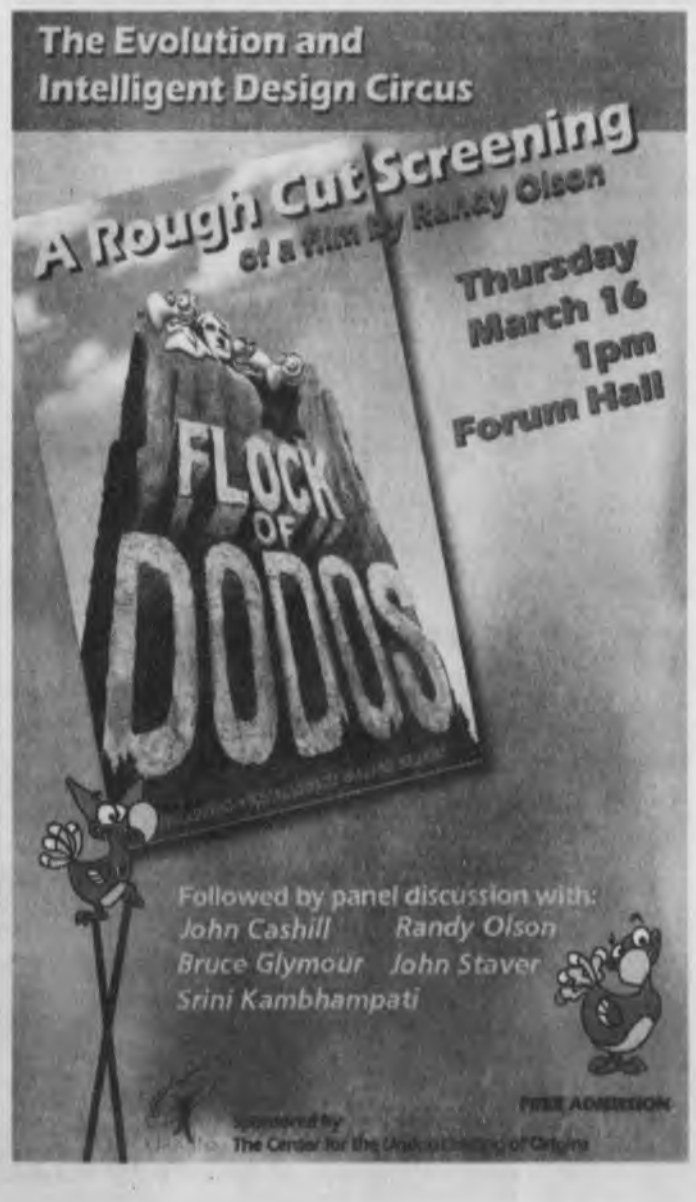
Google's protests prompted the government to scale back its requests dramatically. Justice Department attorney Joel McElvain told Ware Tuesday that the government now wants a random sampling of 50,000 Web site addresses indexed by Google and the text of 5,000 random search requests.

McElvain said just 10,000 of the Web sites and 1,000 of the search requests would be used in a study for a Pennsylvania case revolving around the online child pornography law that has been blocked by the U.S. Supreme Court. That case is scheduled for an Oct. 23 trial.

The Justice Department plans to use the search requests to show how easy it is for online pornographers to fool Internet filters, hoping that it will help demonstrate the need for a tougher law to protect children from the material.

The government's scaled-back requests have minimized Google's concerns about sharing confidential company information, but the privacy issues remain troublesome, Gidari told Ware.

Although the government doesn't want Google to turn over anything that would identify a person making a search request, Gidari said the content of certain queries often contains sensitive information about finances, Social Security numbers and sexual preferences.



Indicating he was thinking about only granting part of the government's request, Ware asked Gidari if Google would rather hand over the Web site addresses or a list of people's search requests. Without providing a definitive answer, Gidari said Google believed an order requiring the company to surrender people's search requests would have a "chilling effect" on the Internet.

Pressed by Ware, McElvain acknowledged the Justice Department had already obtained enough information from other search engines to conduct its study. "But the study would be improved with Google's data," he said.

Lightning likely caused explosion that killed 12 miners, owner says

By Vicki Smith
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. – An explosion that killed 12 workers at the Sago Mine likely was caused by a massive lightning strike that ignited methane gas in a sealed-off area, the mine's owner said Tuesday.

The company's own investigation turned up three pieces of compelling evidence of a lightning strike, all from 6:26 a.m. on Jan. 2, said Ben Hatfield, chief executive officer of International Coal Group Inc.

He said weather monitors confirmed an unusually large and powerful lightning strike near the mine; the U.S. Geological Survey confirmed a seismic event at Sago; and the mine's own atmospheric monitoring system signaled a combustion alarm.

The precise route the electrical charge followed remains under investigation, but Hatfield said there is no evidence that a nearby gas well contributed to the explosion.

Hatfield broke the news to miners' families in a series of private meetings Tuesday, and Sago workers were to be briefed Tuesday night as they returned to work. The coal mine is set to resume production Wednesday.

"While our independent investigation is certainly not the final word on the explosion, we are confident that the joint federal-state investigation will reach a similar conclusion," Hatfield said. "We are pleased that we can get our Sago employees back to work with the knowledge that the explosion was an unpredictable and highly unusual accident."

The explosion trapped a crew of 13 men more than 250 feet underground for more than 40 hours. By the time rescue teams reached them, all but one had perished, most slowly succumbing to carbon monoxide poisoning. Survivor Randal L. McCloy Jr. is still recovering from severe brain damage and other injuries.

Although the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration declared the mine safe to re-enter last week, Hatfield said he delayed resuming production until he could share the initial findings with the families.

Hatfield said reactions ranged from anger and frustration to relief. Mainly, though, families appreciated getting the information before it was released to the media or the general public.

He said he promised the families that lessons will be learned from the disaster, and coal mines will be made safer.

Though MSHA cited the mine for 208 violations in the months before the accident, the company's investigation showed that none of those violations were related to the blast, Hatfield said. Still, the company expects to be under the microscope.

"Frankly, we welcome that scrutiny," he said. "We have worked hard to address all concerns and are confident that we will provide a safe working environment for our miners."

Ashland, Ky.-based ICG has aided state and federal officials throughout the Sago probe but also hired outside consultants to do an independent investigation.

Hatfield said the team concluded the explosion occurred behind 40-inch-thick, dense foam block seals that were designed to withstand 20 pounds per square inch of pressure. The seals, called Omega blocks, were pulverized by a blast that initial calculations suggest had forces of at least three times that amount in some locations.

Hatfield told The Associated Press on Tuesday that ICG will no longer install seals at the Sago Mine and will ventilate existing sealed areas with boreholes to the surface. In time, the company hopes to adopt a technology used in some other mining countries – pumping nitrogen into the abandoned areas to make them inert.

"That's something we're going to take a hard look at," he said, adding that the inert gas technology also could be used at other ICG mines.

Historically, the industry has believed seals were the safest way to manage abandoned areas, Hatfield said. When the areas are not walled off, a fire boss must be sent in periodically to confirm it is being ventilated and deadly or explosive gases are not gathering.

Hatfield also said Sago will comply as quickly as possible with federal regulations enacted last week. Companies now must give each miner an extra air pack and, in some cases, store additional breathing devices along escape routes. Coal companies also must ensure miners have clearly marked "lifelines" along all escape routes.

Hatfield said ICG has obtained enough air packs to comply but is still working on meeting the lifeline requirement. The company is able to notify authorities of any future accidents within 15 minutes as required by a new state mine-safety law.

ICG bought the Sago Mine near Buckhannon from bankrupt Anker West Virginia Mining Co. last March. The operation has been producing coal since September 1999 and had 145 employees at the time of the accident.

Hispanic groups rally for rights in Topeka

By Garance Burke
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – "Dream Big," read one of the signs held aloft at the annual rally for immigrant rights Tuesday on the Capitol steps, where several hundred people gathered to promote civil rights and benefits for Hispanics.

Many of the issues they pressed, such as eligibility for driver's licenses and comprehensive immigration reform, depend on the outcome of congressional debates in Washington D.C. Yet as Kansas prepares for election season, Hispanic activists from Garden City, Kan., to Wichita said they will use local strategies to make their mark on policies affecting the state's immigrant population.

"We're going to keep getting organized," said Jose Manuel Ortiz, a construction worker and member of Sunflower Community Action, a Wichita-based nonprofit that organized the event with Kansas City-based El Centro, Inc. "Latinos have so many important needs, and it's our time to make an impact."

Organizers said the rally drew about double the number of participants as last year's events and included university students, meatpacking workers and numerous families. Participants met with legislators and with the chief of staff to Gov. Kathleen Sebelius.

The Kansas Legislature is considering a bill that would deny non-citizens state and local benefits. A proposal to repeal a law granting in-state tuition to some illegal immigrants may reemerge this session.

As the Hispanic population has grown in the last decade, a new crop of state leaders has emerged. Six different groups receive technical assistance from the Kansas Hispanic and Latino American Affairs Commission to increase Hispanic political participation.

"We're trying to develop capacity for Hispanic leadership across Kansas," said Elias Garcia, the agency's executive director. "Some of that overlaps with immigration issues, and they're definitely emotional issues for people."

Several legislators said Tuesday's rally was a reminder that immigration themes will loom large in campaigns this year.

"People are going to try to take out the frustration they feel about the lack of federal action on immigration in state races," said Rep. Ann Mah, D-Topeka.

Yet the groups' success in making policy inroads will depend on Kansas Hispanics' ability to marshal traditional political resources.

"Hispanics will gain force in Kansas politics as an ever increasing number become registered to vote and can jell together as a cohesive voting bloc," said Joseph Aistrup, associate professor of political science at K-State. "And to the extent that illegal immigration is a big issue in our Kansas communities you'll see these issues playing a more dominant role in state politics."

Tou Ger Xiong tries to get the crowd into his performance Tuesday night. Xiong was born in Laos and came to the United States after escaping with his family.

them through their eyes," Xiong said. "I hated going to school, because I didn't feel like an 'American.'"

Xiong said after the first time he brought a friend of a different race home to meet his family, he became more understanding and accepting of the unique situation he was in, trying to be more mainstream at school, while trying to remain more traditional at home.

"I have one foot in each culture," he said. "I've grown up in two worlds."

The second segment of the program featured original raps by Xiong, during which he encouraged the audience to clap and chant along. The raps featured inspirational messages, about his own experience, as well as advice about overcoming obstacles. Xiong said he likes the medium of rap to communicate with audiences, because it speaks more to today's youth.

"My rap is about bridging cultures and traditions," he said.

Xiong closed the program with slides of his family from his childhood as well as his return to Laos a few years ago. He encouraged the audience to be more aware of the diversity around them, and to take time to get to know people whose cultures might differ from theirs.

Kayla Linnebur, junior in social work, said she liked the way Xiong talked about his experiences growing up, and how he had to learn to accept cultural differences.

"That's how we're going to overcome the problem of discrimination," she said. "I loved it, it was eye-opening, because you don't usually think about the things he made us think about."

Ashley Boldt, junior in family studies and human services, said she thought it was a great opportunity to hear a good message from a different viewpoint than what college students might usually hear.

"I think it went really well, the crowd enjoyed it, it was really funny ... and thought-provoking as well," Boldt said.

Xiong said he was invited to speak at K-State after AASU president Colleen Loo heard about him and looked him up. Xiong said he had fun during the performance, and he always has a high level of respect for those college students who come out to see his program, because he knows how busy they can get.

"I'm glad for whoever comes, and I give it my best," Xiong said. "I try to focus on the three L's, because I want to make the audience laugh, and if they're laughing, they're listening, and hopefully if they're listening, they're going to learn something."

Xiong said his message is about bringing awareness, regarding diversity issues, to whatever audience he is addressing.

"The message of the program is, as much as we're different, we're alike," he said. "We have to get along. (What I talk about) is not just my story, it's everybody's story."

destination of a presidential library."

Devin Karraker, city commissioner for Abilene, said he does not think the signs will have any dramatically negative effects on the community.

"It doesn't really make a whole lot of difference to me," Karraker said. "It is not something I am proud of to have sitting outside of Abilene, but I don't think this will cause the negative secondary affects such as drug trafficking that you might get in other places."

Karraker said there are legal issues to consider when establishing a rule of what is and is not acceptable for advertisements.

"No, I do not want to see these types of sexual-oriented businesses in our community, but there is a legal side of it as well that you have to consider," Karraker said.

Sen. Tim Huelskamp, R-Fowler, sponsored the bill and said he was not concerned about the constitutionality of the bill. Huelskamp cited a case in Missouri where a similar measure was passed in federal courts.

"I have always been a big supporter of the First Amendment, but when we are dealing with signage issues that involve commercial speech can be regulated," he said. "And this bill would regulate this commercial speech, not ban it."

The bill is stalled in the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee, and Huelskamp said the chairman of the committee refuses to let the issue come to a vote.

"There is some strong opposition from the speaker but I am trying to find other avenues to get the issue to come to a vote," Huelskamp said. "He might be opposed to the bill but he should still allow the committee members to vote on it."

The bill will remain in the State Affairs Committee until it is voted on.

Huelskamp said he thinks the measure would pass if a vote was allowed.

"These signs are really a message about Kansas that is not productive for the economy," Huelskamp said, "and whether it is viewed by children or tourists it is inappropriate."

RECREATION | Indoor aquatic center construction, fees addressed

that Option A would have one basketball court, one volleyball court and three tennis courts. Option B would have twice as many of each. Both would have two baseball fields.

DeWeese said concerns over the Rose Garden, which will be moved, and adequate restrooms were among the things he would take with him from the meeting.

The meeting also looked at the construction of an indoor aquatic recreation center, which could be included in redevelopment plans for downtown Manhattan. The example provided at the meeting placed it on Fort Riley Boulevard south of downtown, and likely being connected with a future hotel and other facilities that might be built there.

Plans for the facility include a competition pool and entertainment-oriented amenities.

DeWeese said the city will likely try to get revenue to pay for the center's construction with Sales Tax Revenue bonds. The bonds, called STAR bonds, are payed off with sales tax revenue collected from the specific area and businesses they pay to construct.

Trina McCarty, Manhattan resident, attended the meeting with her daughter. McCarty said her reason for attending was because the center would have affordable fees, so all Manhattan residents can use it.

"I'm comfortable with most of the plans, but my main concern being here is to be sure that it will serve the community," she said.

The next step for the two projects will be at a work session for the Manhattan City Commission and the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board on March 28.

Beverly Page, advisory board member, was at the meeting.

"I think one concern I have heard ... is that we've been focused so much on the aquatic part," Page said.

K-State faces Idaho State in 1st round of WNIT

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is not looking at being left out of the NCAA Tournament as a snub but rather an opportunity.

"It's a wonderful opportunity for us," freshman Shalee Lehning said. "Each game that we have the opportunity to play, it's just going to make us even more experienced. So, we are happy to play in the post season, and we're ready to go out and play."

Despite not participating in the NCAA Tournament for the first time in four years, the Wildcats (19-11) will play in their second-ever post-season Women's National Invitation Tournament against the Idaho State Bengals (17-12) at 7 p.m. Friday in Bramlage Coliseum.

Along with K-State, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa State will represent the Big 12 Conference in the WNIT, and K-State is happy to be playing at home in the first round, junior Claire Coggins said.

"We are disappointed because there are some teams that are 14-16 (that got into the NCAA Tournament), and it doesn't seem right, but that's the way it goes, and we are really proud to get to play in the (W)NIT, and that we get to play at home," Coggins said.

Coach Deb Patterson said regardless of what tournament the Wildcats are playing in, the goal is to finish on top.

"To me, it's the first step in our pursuit of wanting to win a championship," Patterson said.

"When you are in tournaments, whether it be the Big 12 or early in the season, it's about wanting to take one game at a time, but ultimately, looking at that end point."

Idaho State won nine of its last 11 games and is coming off a Big Sky Conference regular-season title.

The Bengals are led by sophomores Andrea Lightfoot and Natalie Doma. Lightfoot, the reigning Big Sky Most Valuable Player and Newcomer of the Year, leads the Big Sky in scoring (18.6 points per game), while Doma was second in the conference in scoring (18.2 points per game) and first in the league in rebounding, averaging 8.6 rebounds per game.

Coggins said doing well in the WNIT will give the Wildcats momentum for next season.

"It makes you really realize how important winning in the Big 12 is," Coggins said. "It's really important for us to take care of business every single night, and it's something that we've learned."

The first-round game also will be the first time K-State and Idaho State have faced each other.

Lehning said the Wildcat fans will give K-State an advantage against the Bengals.

"Our crowd here is amazing, and they are our sixth man," said Lehning, who is five assists shy of breaking Megan Mahoney's freshman assist record of 157.

Patterson said the participation of the home crowd is crucial for this year's tournament and beyond.

"We need our fans; we need a great turnout; we need to fill this place up with a lot of people and a lot of noise because this is the kind of tournament that has propelled programs – two or three years later – deep into the NCAA Tournament," Patterson said.

Tourney allows 8 more teams

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Women's National Invitation Tournament committee has been devising a plan – for quite some time – to give more basketball teams a chance to play in late March.

This year, for the first time since the WNIT's inception, the tournament is changing its format, allowing 40 teams – rather than the traditional 32 – to participate in the post-season WNIT.

"We felt like women's basketball teams deserved more post-season opportunities," said Renee Carlson, associate director of the WNIT. "There are good teams, who've had great seasons, who have one bad game (and don't get in). This is an opportunity for those teams."

At-large bids were still given to 32 teams, but the WNIT restructured its format this season to incorporate eight additional spots, which were open to teams who met the following stipulations: won conference regular-season title, did not win their conference tournament and did not receive a bid to the NCAA Tournament.

K-State's first-round opponent, Idaho State, is one of seven teams – including Western Illinois, Tennessee Tech, Santa Clara, Jackson State, Santa Barbara and Belmont – invited to the WNIT based on the new criteria. One additional team filled the eighth spot with an extra at-large bid, Carlson said.

Idaho State coach Jon Newlee said he is partial to the new set up. His squad belongs in the Big Sky Conference and won its regular-conference season title but could not grab the league crown. Had the WNIT not been reorganized this year, teams like Idaho State might have gotten bypassed, he said.

"The NCAA's focused on the power conferences. Lots of teams within mid-major conferences get overlooked," Newlee said. "I think the expanded (W)NIT is a great idea, a great reward for teams for their body of work."

In addition to these mid-major and lower-conference teams getting to continue in March, the creation of the new 16-team preliminary round – beginning today – allows lower-seeded teams to compete against teams of equal caliber in the prelim, and upon proceeding, earn the opportunity to play an WNIT game at home, Carlson said.

"Not only are we giving teams like Tennessee Tech and Jackson State a chance in, but we're also giving them a chance to host," Carlson said. "It benefits most because of the exposure nationally and also locally."

Newlee said simply being involved in the post season is beneficial to the basketball program, for multiple reasons.

"Everybody here is excited," Newlee said. "It helps in recruiting tremendously – high school players know they're coming into a solid program. And it's just important for players to get post-season experience."

K-State coach Deb Patterson said the enlarged WNIT field increases the tournament's intensity because the additional teams make the tournament more challenging.

"It makes it a tougher tournament for all of us involved," Patterson said. "It's expanded the quality of the field, and the reality is, when you look at the NCAA tournament, everyone understands that it's not the best 64 teams. So, what you have in the NIT is a lot of great basketball teams, like ours, and now we've added just a few more in the mix to complicate it a bit."

Freshman performance: similar to 5 years ago

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In 2001, six freshmen donned the purple and white K-State Wildcat uniforms and helped the team to a 24-7 record.

For the first time in 19 years, the Wildcats danced in the Sweet 16 at the NCAA Tournament.

Three of the freshmen that year placed second, third and fourth in team scoring, all behind sophomore Nicole Ohlde.

Now, following in the footsteps of record-setters Laurie Koehn, Megan Mahoney and Kendra Wecker, are four new freshmen, who are posting numbers that rival those set five years ago.

The freshmen foursome of Marlies Gipson, JoAnn Hamlin, Shalee Lehning and Danielle Zanotti are playing at a level almost equivalent with those players a half-decade ago.

"We know the history with those girls," Zanotti said. "Obviously, they were great all four years they were here, and that's something we aspire to (be like). We're never going to be like those (players) – no one really is – but I think that we want to make identities for ourselves."

Zanotti has 78 points with a 40.5 field goal percentage and 74 rebounds on the season. She said she thought the freshmen improved throughout the season.

"I think all the freshmen have come a long way since the beginning of the year," Zanotti said. "We really had to adjust to the level of play, and I think that with each game, we got better and better.

"We just got done competing with the national championship team from last year, into overtime. If you look at our games, we've made huge strides all season."

Wecker, whose jersey now resides in the rafters at Bramlage Coliseum, scored 557 points her freshman season, with a 52.9 field goal percentage.

While Hamlin hasn't notched as many points with 262, her 51.2 field-goal percentage is the highest of this year's freshman class.

"When we came in, a lot of people said that we wouldn't be big contributors to this team," Hamlin said. "I think we've worked hard throughout the year, and I think we've gotten a lot better, just starting to blend more with the team, the girls that are already here and just finding our skill set at what we do."

Although Wecker's 264 rebounds still stand as the freshman season record, current freshman Gipson has surpassed both Koehn's (114) and Mahoney's (183) freshman rebound marks with 184.

Gipson said she hasn't done any comparison between this freshmen squad and that of five years ago, but agrees this year's freshmen have grown since the season started.

"I think definitely just coming in, we knew it was going to be tough, but we came with a positive mind set," Gipson said. "We were ready to come together as a team and have fun and win games."

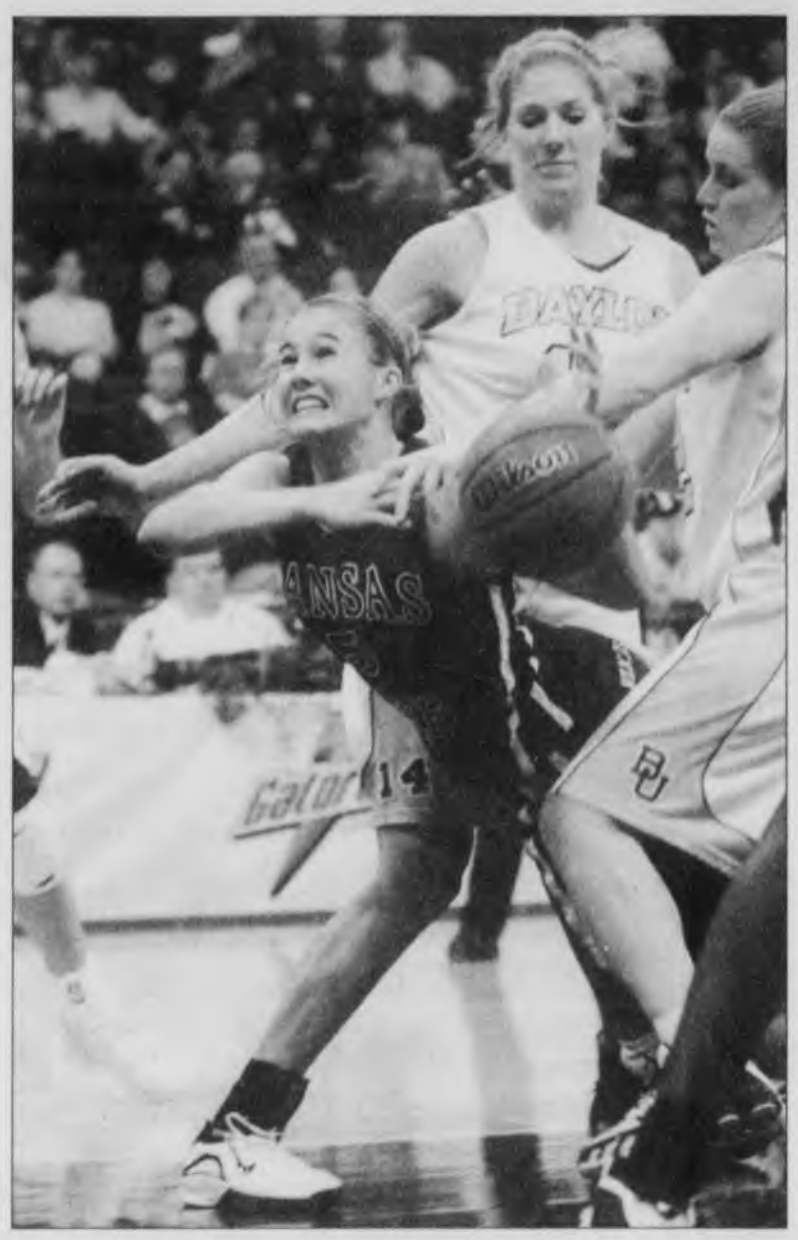
Moving into the beginning rounds of the Women's National Invitation Tournament, one freshmen season record is in danger of falling.

Lehning is only five assists away from breaking Mahoney's freshman season record of 157 assists.

"It's an honor to be in company with Megan Mahoney," Lehning said.

"She's such a great player and one of my role models. To be up there with some records that she set is awesome, but at the same time, I'm not really worried about that. It's at the back of my mind right now. I just want to help contribute to my team and wins are the most important thing to me at this point. I want our team to gets W's, so I'm not really worried about the record."

Coach Deb Patterson highlighted each of the freshmen's evolution through the season. She spoke of Gipson's new left-hand confidence, Lehning's ability to make players around her better, Hamlin's ability to fight inside with Baylor's Sophia Young and Oklahoma's Courtney Paris, and Zanotti's offensive improvement.



"It's just been an incredible ride and process for them, and I'm so proud of their work ethic, their intensity and their commitment to keep getting better," Patterson said. "It just bodes so well for the future."

However, she was unable to compare the freshmen this year with those five years ago. In fact, there is no comparison, she said.

"I just look at these kids as who they are and what they bring, and it's so distant to me," Patterson said.

"They don't bring the same package of skills and the same physical talent to the floor, but they bring incredible commitment to becoming the best they can be. They play so well and hard together.

"I think they've gotten better at a steeper curve because they had to get better to be as competitive as they were in this league, and that's really impressed me."

Freshman Shalee Lehning tries to get through the Baylor defense during the second half of K-State's second-round game in Dallas. Lehning stepped up for the Cats this year and is only five assists away from breaking Megan Mahoney's freshman record of assists.

The Collegian's 2005-06 picks

MOST VALUABLE PLAYER
Shalee Lehning

Lehning did everything for the Wildcats and emerged as a leader. The Sublette, Kan., native was second on the team in rebounds, averaging six rebounds per game, was third in the Big 12 Conference in assists (5.28 assists per game) and led the league in floor burns. Lehning is five assists shy of breaking former Wildcat-great Megan Mahoney's freshman record of 157 assists.

Lehning
GUARD

DEFENSIVE PLAYER OF THE YEAR
Marlies Gipson

Gipson, also a freshman, gave the Wildcats an athletic post player who gave some of the best post players in the conference fits. Gipson led K-State in rebounding averaging 6.3 rebounds per game, was fifth in the conference in blocks (1.79 blocks per game) and ninth in the league in defensive rebounding, averaging five per game.

Gipson
FORWARD

PLAYER WHO SHOULD'VE SPENT MORE TIME OFF THE BENCH
Shana Wheeler

By no fault of her own or anyone else's, Wheeler spent the majority of the season on the bench with a knee injury. Wheeler, a sophomore, played in just nine games for the Wildcats and grabbed 35 rebounds, shot 37 percent from the floor and blocked 14 shots. Wheeler could have given K-State another forward to throw at the more dominating forwards in the Big 12.

FORWARD

MOST IMPROVED PLAYER
Marlies Gipson

Gipson continually improved her game and eventually became an integral part of the Wildcat offense. Gipson averaged 8.8 points per game and shot 47 percent from the floor. She also shot 47 percent from the three-point line.

4 defining moments

A lot was riding on the 2005-06 men's basketball season. While the Cats tasted success at times, the Dallas drop, Wooldridge's firing and no postseason ended the year on a sour note. Here are four defining games of the 2005-06 season.

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

1). Kansas win Jan. 14 in Lawrence.

After two-consecutive Big 12 Conference losses – including a 42-57 drop to Nebraska at home on Jan. 11 – K-State surprises many, beating the Jayhawks 59-55 in Lawrence, slicing KU's 31-game winning streak. The Wildcats' zone defense was too much for the young Kansas squad, as K-State stunned the Hawks in Allen Fieldhouse. Players like sophomore Clent Stewart, junior Cartier Martin and senior Schyler Thomas contributed to the offensive force, and with this solid performance only three games into conference season, it seemed like this was the year K-State would conquer mediocrity.

2). Baylor loss Feb. 1 in Lubbock, Texas.

The Baylor loss came as quite a shock to K-State fans, considering the 70-72 drop to the Bears occurred only three weeks after the Kansas win. The Baylor game marked the second contest in a three-game losing streak and was arguably the lowest point in the season (prior to Wooldridge's firing), considering Baylor finished last in the conference. After the game, the players admitted they had overlooked the Baylor game, which raised questions about coaching and the ability of this team.

3). Kansas loss March 4 in Manhattan

The 66-52 loss at home to Kansas on March 4 can easily be considered the most disappointing defeat of the season. Not only did this game end the regular-conference season, but it erased hopes of an NCAA Tournament bid and chipped away at Wooldridge's job security. Oddly enough, in his post-game press conference, Wooldridge said he didn't see the KU loss as detrimental, also claiming he had put no thought into his job future. He even made clear that he thought his team was still capable of beating anyone in the conference at the Big 12 Tourney in Dallas.

4). Texas Tech loss March 9 in Dallas

The 65-73 Texas Tech loss put an end to K-State's season and the end of Wooldridge's six-year coaching career at K-State – an anti-climatic end to a formerly promising season. Immediately following the loss, Director of Athletics Tim Weiser pulled Wooldridge aside and informed him his contract would not be renewed, resulting in his firing. At 6 p.m., Weiser had a press conference – sans Wooldridge – formally announcing Wooldridge's dismissal and the basketball program's nationwide search for a new head coach. Following his firing, Wooldridge expressed remorse about not doing more with his team this year.

"Just good enough to get to the threshold but not quite good enough to get over it," Wooldridge said. "That's disappointing – I don't know that I'd say regretful, but disappointing. You get that close, but it would be great if you could get over it."

The Collegian's picks for the best of the 2005-06 season

MOST VALUABLE PLAYER

Cartier Martin

Martin, a second-team All-Big 12 Conference selection, is the Collegian's MVP from this year's team. The junior guard, who was No. 4 in the conference with 18.0 points per game, emerged as the most consistent leader for the Wildcats, pacing the team in scoring, minutes per game (32.8 per game), rebounds (6.6 per game) and steals (27 total).

Martin
GUARD

DEFENSIVE PLAYER OF THE YEAR

Akeem Wright

Wright, a junior guard, was Wooldridge's favorite candidate to put against K-State opponents' top scorers. He guarded players like Kansas' Brandon Rush, Texas' P.J. Tucker, Texas Tech's Jarrius Jackson, Colorado's Richard Roby, Texas A&M's Acie Law and Missouri's Thomas Gardner. The tallest of all K-State guards at 6 feet, 6 inches, Wright's athleticism, quickness and solid court awareness allowed him to be the Wildcats' greatest threat away from the ball.

Wright
GUARD

PLAYER WHO SHOULD'VE SPENT MORE TIME OFF THE BENCH

Darren Kent

Kent, a freshman from Apple Valley, Minn., rarely made it on the court — 20 minutes total to be exact — but when he did, he rarely made a mistake. He has a flawless offensive record, boasting 6-of-6 shooting from the floor and 1-of-1 from three-point range. With Diarra graduating, look for Kent to fill in down low.

Kent
FORWARD

MOST IMPROVED PLAYER

Dramane Diarra

Diarra, a Paris, France, native, was non existent last year, after receiving a redshirt for an ankle injury. In his 2003-04 junior year at K-State — after transferring from Cloud County Community — he averaged 1.2 ppg on 38.9 percent shooting, while logging 9.1 minutes per game. This year, not only did Diarra start for the Cats, but he perfected the 12-foot jumper, averaged 5.3 ppg on 44.6 percent shooting and led K-State in blocks with 1.61 per game — good enough for fifth in the Big 12, as well.

Saving spring break

Insurance helps avoid vacation nightmares

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Acapulco and Cancun, Mexico; Negril, Jamaica; Panama City, Fla.; Lake Havasu, Ariz.; Daytona Beach, Fla.; South Padre Island, Texas; Nassau, Bahamas; Las Vegas, Nev.; and Steamboat Springs, Crested Butte and Winter Park – Colorado ski resorts – are the top 10 student spring break destinations for 2006, according to studenttravel.about.com.

K-State spring breakers have experienced the good and the bad of these destinations throughout the years. The No. 1 spot, Acapulco, taught two K-State students the importance of insurance on a spring break vacation.

Rachel Chastain, junior in marketing, said she went to Acapulco for spring break 2005 with a group of friends. After being delayed for 24 hours, the group arrived at about midnight. At 4 p.m. the next day, Chastain's trip ended. While swimming with friends, she slipped and landed on a broken glass bottle as she slid into the pool.

"I was holding my leg together, and then my friends picked me up and put me in a taxi," Chastain said. "We went to the Naval Hospital because the taxi driver said it was the best one to go to."

She said she thought she was going to die.

"I just remember lying on the table, bleeding, and no one could speak English," Chastain said.

The Naval Hospital sent her to Hospital del Pacifico because the injury was too severe to be taken care of at the Naval Hospital. When she arrived, despite the fact they couldn't stop the bleeding from her leg, officials made Chastain wait two hours before giving her surgery. They wanted payment first: $2,200.

"People had to call their parents to get permission," Chastain said. "Then, finally one of my friends paid for it with his credit card."

After spending the night in the hospital, Chastain took the first flight available back to the United States, where her parents were waiting anxiously.

"My parents said they'll never send me anywhere without a credit card," Chastain said.

She was never reimbursed for the flight home or her loss of a trip. She did not purchase the insurance part of the travel package. Chastain said she has advice for future spring breakers.

"Things can happen," she said. "What happened to me was a fluke accident. You should get an international phone, bring a credit card and be careful, because anything can happen."

Linda Pinsent, senior in mass communications, planned a trip to Acapulco for spring break 2005 through StudentCity for 19 K-State students. She said the company strongly recommended purchasing the insurance package, which includes reimbursement for hospital and medical expenses, emergency transportation, trip costs for cancellation due to medical reasons, lost and damaged baggage, flight delay costs and more.

2 arsons damage trash bins

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three arson fires occurred in Manhattan Wednesday morning, two of which damaged trash dumpsters, causing losses for the state of Kansas and Waste Management, Capt. John Doehling of the Riley County Police Department said.

One fire was reported in the 500 block of Manhattan Avenue, when an unknown person noticed a fire in the middle of the street and called the RCPD, Doehling said.

"Some type of flammable liquid was placed in a bottle," Doehling said. "This is commonly known as a Molotov cocktail."

Fires also occurred later in the morning at 923 Vattier St. and 1019 Fremont St., Doehling said.

The fires on Fremont Street and Vattier Street were set in the trash dumpsters and required the Manhattan Fire Department be called in to battle the fires.

These fires resulted in $500 in damages to the dumpsters.

Sobriety check planned

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department will be conducting a sobriety checkpoint in southeast Manhattan on Friday, according to a RCPD press release.

The checkpoint will run from about 12:30 a.m. to 2:30 a.m. Saturday morning.

This checkpoint is the first in a series of three that will be conducted during 2006.

The purpose of the checkpoint, according to the press release, is to detect and deter impaired drivers. If motorists are suspected of being impaired by alcohol, they will be given an on-site sobriety field test. If drivers fail the test, they will be arrested.

The test consists of three parts, including the one leg stand test, which checks for balance. Another part of the test is the walk and turn test, in which a person walks nine steps, then turns and walks back. The horizontal gaze nystagmus test is the third part of the test and includes placing an object in front of the person's eyes to check for a jerking motion.

The exact location of the checkpoint will not be revealed, Capt. John Doehling of the RCPD said.

"We usually don't specify exactly where it is," Doehling said.

Tuition committee announces 5-year strategy proposal

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Special Committee to Study Long-Term Tuition Strategies announced its final five-year tuition strategy proposal on Wednesday.

The committee recommended a predicted tuition rate for fiscal years 2008-12 after investigating a differential rate and a flat tuition rate model, Student Body President Michael Burns said.

The model would increase tuition during the five-year plan by $15 per credit hour per year for resident and non-resident undergraduate and graduate students, Burns said.

The committee also proposed the redistribution of college-specific fees. The College of Architecture, Planning and Design and the College of Engineering pay $14 per credit hour for equipment fees. The College of Business Administration and the College of Engineering pay $15 per credit hour for faculty salaries.

According to its proposal, the tuition committee has recommended that K-State increase the per credit hour rate by $1.55 per year for three years for all colleges.

For the remaining two years of the five-year tuition plan, a portion of the per credit hour increase would be allocated by university administrators for the colleges that currently do not have college-specific fees.

Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore said the revenue-neutral solution would make the college-specific fees the responsibility of all students.

"We're just phasing it out over a three-year period," he said. "The money still goes to each college, but in years four and five, the money will also go to other colleges."

Moore said that if the college-specific plan is rejected, current college-specific fees will remain intact, and the flat $15 increase will change to a $14 increase.

The tuition ad-hoc committee was formed by Student Senate in September to examine the current five-year tuition strategy and form a set of guidelines in considering future tuition strategies.

Burns said the Kansas Board of Regents has consulted Student Governing Association in the past for five-year tuition plan recommendations.

"But I don't know if SGA has ever taken this proactive approach," he said.

The next five-year tuition plan begins in FY 2008, or on July 1, 2007. The new five-year tuition plan is due to the regents by May 2007.

Burns said the tuition committee met five times last semester and once a week this semester for an hour-and-a-half.

While the committee was supposed to release its proposal on March 1, Burns and Moore said it was delayed two weeks so they could meet with key university administrators and deans.

The committee was made up of eight Student Senate members and faculty members Tom Herald, president of Faculty Senate; Ruth Dyer, associate provost; Pat Bosco, dean of student life;

Lawrence receives no aid

LAWRENCE — As Lawrence residents begin to recover from the weekend's severe weather, they will have to do so without federal aid, a state official said Tuesday. Joy Moser, spokeswoman for the Kansas Division of Emergency Management, said only 12 homes in the city sustained 40 percent uninsured damage.

Judge quiets Saddam

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Saddam Hussein testified Wednesday for the first time at his trial, and the judge closed the court after the ex-dictator's speech called for Iraqis to end sectarian violence and fight U.S. troops instead. Even as the judge repeatedly yelled at Saddam to stop making what he called political speeches, the deposed leader read from a prepared text, insisting he was still Iraq's president.

Killer gets death sentence

SARASOTA, Fla. — A judge sentenced Joseph Smith to death for the slaying of 11-year-old Carlie Brucia on Wednesday. The judge also sentenced Smith to two life sentences for the girl's abduction and rape. Her 2004 abduction was caught by a security camera and broadcast nationally.

Goldwater nominees' applications focus on extracurriculars

4 K-State students up for prestigious award that honors math, science, engineering majors

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Alyson Deines, senior in mathematics, has served not only as secretary of the Math Club and done research for the National Science Foundation Research Experiences for Undergraduates project at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, but also she plays tenor saxophone and sings for Combo Mambo and Squib Cakes.

Deines, along with Eli Parke, senior in physics; Amy Twite, junior in chemistry; and Jonathan King, senior in chemical engineering; are K-State's nominees for the Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship.

The Goldwater Scholarship is for students majoring in mathematics, science or engineering, and plan a career in research.

In the fall semester, students with a 3.0 grade-point average majoring in those programs are invited to apply.

King
APPLICANT

They must complete four mini-essays, and a longer essay about an aspect of research in their field of study.

Applicants are reviewed by interdisciplinary faculty, said James Hohenbary, adviser in the Arts and Sciences Dean's Office.

"K-State actually has more Goldwater Scholars than any other public university," Hohenbary said.

K-State has had 53 Goldwater Scholars since the program began in 1989, and the scholarship winners will be announced the last week in March, Hohenbary said.

"I'm not sure they commit to a precise date," he said.

Parke
APPLICANT

The scholarship provides up to $7,500 each year for the final one or two years of undergraduate studies.

King's essay for the competition was titled "Composite Hydogels for Cartilage Tissue Engineering" and was based on research he did at the University of Colorado-Boulder.

King is also a member of the Chemical Car Team.

Twite is participating in research on "Characterizing New Perylene Dimides as Potential Cancer Therapy Treatment Molecules," under Daniel Higgens, associate professor of chemistry.

Twite
APPLICANT

Twite previously did research at the University of Kansas Medical Center. It focused on the effects of hypoxia on micro-circulation and disruption of the blood-brain barrier.

Twite also is the president of the K-State Archery Club and is active in Students for Environmental Action.

Parke said he became interested in physics when he was young and read science magazines.

"I would cut out articles of Discover magazine," he said.

Parke said he plans to attend graduate school and get a degree in plasma physics.

Parke is doing physics research under the supervision of Itzhak Ben-Itzhak, professor of physics.

"We're working on setting up the experiment," Parke said.

Parke and fellow researchers hope to run the experiment, "Molecular Dissociation Caused by Slow, Highly Charged Ions," this summer.

Following her graduation from K-State, Deines said she wants to attend a different graduate school than K-State.

"It's typically better if you don't go to your home institution," Deines said.

Attending a different graduate school will allow her a more varied experience, she said.

In the study done at the University of Nebraska, "Examining the Principles of Robustness and Transients as Applied to a Population Projection Matrix Constructed in Regards to the Peregrine Falcon Population," Deines said she was involved in the research, but basically does what she is told.

"We're having trouble deciding how much math should go into it," she said.

The research will eventually be published in a math ecology journal, but a biology site looking at the research led to some conflicts in research styles, she said.

"The biology site started looking at it and said 'Oh, my gosh, there's math involved,'" Deines said.

USD 383 prepares for military-related population growth

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new head count was presented at Wednesday night's Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 Board of Education meeting. Since Sept. 20, the district has gained 183 new military-related students.

The latest count ended on Feb. 20, but an additional 26 military-related students have joined the district since then, said Bob Seymour, associate superintendent for USD 383.

"A few years ago I used to show you these (graphs), and they were all negative numbers all down the line," Seymour said. "It's a pleasant change to be able to present these positive numbers."

The percent change in student attendance, by grade level, from Sept. 20, 2005 to Feb. 20, 2006, ranges from negative 1 percent, which occurred on the second-grade level, and positive 6 percent, which occurred on the fourth-grade level.

In preparation for future increases, the board took a final action vote of 6-0 to approve the request for proposal of the facility study issues discussed at the March 1 board meeting.

This proposal, made by the USD 383 Facilities and Growth Committee, consists of three phases by which the district will make room to accommodate additional growth.

Phase One of this project will identify the needs of the elementary schools, the possible reopening of Bluemont School and adult learning.

"There's been a lot of positive public feedback about Bluemont and the discussion that we've had, and we didn't take a formal motion," said Beth Tatarko, USD 383 board member. "I guess I'm thinking that should be somewhere in the future or maybe related in time with this."

According to the proposal, the second phase of the master redistricting plan will involve secondary schools and support services, as well as a long-term forecasting of additional needs, and the third phase will tie Phase One and Phase Two into one coherent plan.

The final phase of this plan is scheduled for completion in June 2007.

The board also decided in a 7-0 final action vote to hire an office secretary for the specific purpose of enrolling new students from June 12 and Aug. 3.

In the past, all new students have been enrolled on one central enrollment day, which this year will take place on August 3 this year.

This decision was reached for three main reasons, said Karen Roberts, executive director of teaching and learning. The first reason is to welcome new students and parents; the second is to relieve pressure from central enrollment day, and the third is to help the district "know their numbers" and prepare for the growth, Roberts said.

The office position will either be filled by one full-time employee or two part-time employees and will be for the summer only.

It was predicted that hiring an additional secretary would cost the district $3,500, which will be allocated from sales tax funds, because the new position is related to military growth.

"We want to welcome the parents and students and make sure they feel that we want them to attend our schools," Roberts said.

At this point, it is difficult for the district to predict future military growth.

All the district has been told is that the growth will cycle – there will be a few weeks with declining enrollment and then it will pick back up, superintendent Bob Shannon said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Tuition panel work should be appreciated

On Wednesday, the Special Committee to Study Long-Term Tuition Strategies announced its final five-year tuition strategy proposal for Fiscal Years 2008-12.

The ad-hoc committee of eight Student Senate members met and worked with K-State administrators and deans for six months to ensure that students' input would be represented in the next five-year tuition plan.

This is the first time SGA has formed a special committee and taken a proactive approach in drafting a tuition plan.

While tuition will increase 12 percent for undergraduate residents in FY 2007, the tuition committee worked to draft a proposal that will keep increases to a minimum for the next five years.

Students should appreciate the hard work and diligence of the committee to take students into account when working to draft the next five years of tuition.

Members of SGA also should vote in favor of the future recommendation for formation of a permanent tuition committee when the legislation is introduced to Student Senate. The permanent committee would ensure students continue to have a voice in tuition rates and funding initiatives.

Student Senate members, faculty member, administrators, deans and other university officials who were involved should be applauded for their work on the five-year tuition strategy proposal.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

Shooting up

Home-run king should be erased from history

MICHAEL ASHFORD

San Francisco Giants slugger Barry Bonds has been called out, this time by people with actual evidence of his steroid use.

What so many people have speculated about for years now is out there in print for any and all who are willing to read and listen.

In the book "Game of Shadows," written by San Francisco Chronicle reporters Mark Fainaru-Wada and Lance Williams and set to hit the shelves March 27, Bonds' rampant steroid use since 1998 is outlined in incredible detail, sometimes down to day-by-day usage.

According to the book, Bonds was so jealous during the 1998 season in which Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa captured the nation's eyes and heart with their home run-record chase, he turned to pumping himself with all sorts of performance-enhancing drugs.

Once he started on "the juice," Bonds went from a good player known more for his all-around game to a bulky, massive, I've-got-anacondas-for-arms power hitter, the likes of which the game had never seen. Bonds went on to eclipse McGwire's record of 70 home runs in a season, with a 73-round-trip season in 2001.

But he cheated to get there.

At least, that's what the average, normal person would say.

But to baseball's higher-ups, the records Bonds set still stand, and all because of a simple technicality: at the time, there was no steroid testing in baseball.

It's not just Bonds and baseball, either.

"Game of Shadows" apparently goes on to detail steroid use by other baseball stars, NFL players and some of the world's most elite track and field athletes.

Yet nowhere is there an asterisk.

Nowhere has a name been stricken from the record books for all time.

Nowhere has someone been made an example of.

Now 41 years old, Bonds is set to begin his 21st season in Major League Baseball, and while he isn't the most popular guy, he still is getting paid big-time cash to play America's favorite pastime, needing just seven home runs to pass Babe Ruth for second all-time.

Baseball commissioner Bud Selig recently announced he has decided on a plan to deal with the newest evidence against Bonds, but he isn't saying what that plan is.

Here's a plan of action, Mr. Commissioner: strike every single one of Bonds' records from baseball's history books.

Remove them.

White them out.

Do what needs to be done to remove this tarnished stain from the sport of baseball.

Pete Rose has been banned from baseball for life because he bet on games. In much the same way, Bonds should not exist in baseball's history books after the 1998 season.

Any other athletes who have used performance-enhancing drugs to make themselves better than their opponents should meet the same fate.

So what if there was no steroid testing in baseball at the time.

"Game of Shadows" proves Bonds, along with many other professional athletes, cheated the system and found a loophole to give themselves an edge over the honest, hard-working athletes who deserve the recognition.

Bonds not only player guilty of steroid use

OWEN KENNEDY

I have a confession: I do drugs. I've been using these despicable demons for almost 20 years, and I'm not going to stop anytime soon.

Let me explain myself. I graduated Drug Abuse Resistance Education because I could define "drug": any foreign substance or quantity of a substance put into one's body. I'm guilty of using nicotine, alcohol and caffeine, just to name a few. But these drugs never enhanced my performance on the baseball diamond, so it is difficult to call them "performance-enhancing" drugs.

Barry Bonds has been accused of using real performance-enhancers sometime in the last few years. I'm not sure why this is a big deal, considering all the players in baseball, and all sports for that matter, who also have used drugs of the same sort.

Actually, I know why this is such a big deal. Bonds has been in the steroid spotlight with one other player: Mark McGwire. I wasn't sure why these two sluggers were the only ones catching the brunt of the 'roid rage, until I looked at the record books.

In fall 1998, I watched McGwire break Roger Maris' single-season home run record. I don't remember much about when Bonds broke McGwire's record, but they had different responses.

Before Bonds broke the record, I seldom heard any references to McGwire and steroids, but for some reason, after Bonds broke Big Mac's record, 'roids ruled the sports page. Bonds caught a lot more heat for breaking the record than McGwire did, and it's because of Bonds' career statistics. He is closer to "the" record than Big Mac was. The all-time home run record.

Not many people care if Bonds has the single-season record, because there is a good chance another player will break it in a few years and we will forget all about Bonds and his supposed juice use. But since Bonds is so close to breaking Hammerin' Hank Aaron's all-time record, we can't pull ourselves away from the doping issue.

This isn't about the Babe or baseball; it's about personality. Baseball enthusiasts don't want an arrogant egomaniac holding one of sport's most-known records. Not because he doesn't deserve it, but because they simply don't like him.

If Bonds had thanked Maris after breaking McGwire's record, as Big Mac did in 1998, the media would embrace him in a heartbeat. But because he is cocky and not very personable, he is made out to be the villain. He is the bad guy because there is a possibility that he used an illegal substance to help his game.

We can't talk about how most pitchers used grease and other pitch-enhancing substances way back when. Yeah, they broke the rules, but they came before the Babe, and they didn't play in a time when players had to treat the press like royalty. Bonds is a different story.

Critics say that if we allow athletes to use steroids, kids will follow their bad example.Yes, since no baseball players chew tobacco on the field or drink alcohol after the game or cheat on their wives on the road.

True, steroids can give athletes an advantage that can be called unfair, but if we're going to try to stop athletes from using performance-enhancing drugs, let's not look solely at one individual or one sport.

If you have to use a performance-enhancing drug, follow Rafael Palmiero's example and use Viagra. It will help you hit a lot more "home runs" ... and it will help you have sex more easily.

Military service a privilege, not right; 'don't tell' policy not homophobic

Editor,

I strongly disagree with Zachary Eckels' assertion about the military's "don't ask, don't tell, don't pursue" policy (March 9). His primary complaint seems to be that the military is outdated, "homophobic" and somehow is denying rights to gays and lesbians.

The policy surfaced in 1993, and essentially overturned the military's decades-old "zero tolerance" policy toward gays. It represented a compromise between Clinton and the Joint Chiefs of Staff following Clinton's earlier executive order allowing gays and lesbians to serve.

The notion that rights are being denied is a non-issue. That presupposes there is an inherent right for citizens to serve. Military service is a privilege. If it were a right, every blind and paraplegic individual who ever dreamed of being an infantryman or fighter pilot would have an actionable claim against the government for denial of rights.

Gays are allowed to serve with the stipulation that they keep their orientation to themselves. Common sense tells us that stipulation extends to heterosexual service members. That is eminently fair.

Anyone who is serving or has served knows that service necessarily requires a measure of sacrifice of personal identity.

Ultimately, "don't ask, don't tell, don't pursue" offers something for everyone. For gays it offers the opportunity to serve, and for straights it offers a veneer of privacy for common decency, good order and discipline. To refer to the military as homophobic because of this policy is the last refuge of a demagogue who has no further rational argument on the issue.

Americans misled if they believe ANWR drilling will ease gas prices

Editor,

Kody Cooper indicates in his column (March 15) that he is in favor of drilling for oil in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. Most Americans who agree with Cooper do so for economic reasons. They think drilling means more oil is available, so the amount they'll have to pay goes down.

Sounds logical. However, our federal government already has publicly and explicitly stated that this will not happen. According to the Energy Information Administration "... the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) could countermand any potential price impact of ANWR coastal plain production by reducing its exports by an equal amount."

This means the countries that have most of the oil will just cut production by the amount we increase it, and the overall supply (and prices to the consumer) remain the same.

Companies like Exxon (whose earnings exceeded those of the country of Denmark in the third quarter of last year alone, according to the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette), will reap huge profits if ANWR is opened to drilling. According to BuyBlue.org, Exxon contributed almost $800,000 to politicians last year (95 percent Republicans), and that is more than enough to compromise the values of many of our leaders.

If we drill in ANWR, you and I will not save any money, rich oil companies get a mountain of cash and a beautiful part of our planet is gone.

Even if you only care about the last two a bit, I think all of us can get on board with the first one.

Columnist gives contradicting views; explanation needed in the future

Editor,

I really enjoyed Annette Lawless' column, "To be good or to stray," in the paper from March 13. I thought this would be great to cut out and take home to my 14-year-old daughter as an example. Imagine my surprise to find, five pages later, her "Spring break getaway checklist."

My question is simply this: How does she reconcile the statement in the first column, "I was stereotyped as that nice girl from Kansas – strong in my morals and religious at heart," with "Condoms and other contraceptives are also must-haves for this vacation. What happens during spring break stays at spring break"?

The first is conduct to be emulated and venerated; the second is situational and, even worse, locational ethics. It doesn't matter what one does as long as it's done on spring break. I would truly like to see her explain the contradiction in her next column. Neither of the columns will make it to my house. One can't be a good example on Page 4 and a bad example on Page 9.

Manhattan needs 3-step process to elevate students' housing quality

Editor,

I have discovered that the off-campus housing in Manhattan is just horrible. There are many students who are living in "death traps," just because landlords don't want to make them safe to live in, and that is all they can afford.

I believe the city of Manhattan needs to put a three-step plan that is simple and attainable into affect.

Step one would ask for the requirement of landlords to register each of their units. This way, the city of Manhattan actually would know how many apartments there are and where they are located.

Step two simply would ask for the creation of a document that states where the Code Services and other offices are located, what they are, what they do and how they can help us. Step two also would ask that it be mandatory for landlords to have their tenants sign and keep a copy of this document, as well as the pamphlets explaining what code violations their apartment might have and what requirements are supposed to be met.

The final step would be a mandatory inspection list if apartments receive many complaints. After landlords have gotten their apartments back up to code, they would be taken off the mandatory inspection list.

Please consider this three-step plan for housing code compliance. If you would like to help or would like to sign my petition, please e-mail me at aschraad@ksu.edu. Thank you for your support.

Liberals support freedom of religion, equal standing under national laws

Editor,

I found the letters of Ryan Spencer and Jenni Hankins to be quite troubling (March 15).

First, Ryan Spencer equates liberals with being "anti-American." A liberal person is not someone who tries to destroy something, but rather, attempts to make it a better place for all people. In this instance, liberals do not want to see a state law establishing a religion. It is not because I hate America, but rather, I believe in the importance of the First Amendment, which states that Congress shall make no law regarding the establishment of religion.

The problem in these two letters is their belief that Christianity is being degraded. It's not. There are no laws saying Christians can't practice their religion or express their spiritual leanings. As a liberal, I believe in the respect of all religions, including Christianity. Also as a liberal, I believe in freedom of expression, so I believe in the right for Christians to wear crosses around their necks.

Another problem is with the claim that it is hypocrisy to not have Christian emblems in school, but it is OK to learn about other religions. There is a difference between a state-sponsored school endorsing a religion by placing crucifixes in the classrooms and students being taught about religions.

I'm a proud liberal, and I believe in the importance of respecting all religions, and that is why I cannot endorse the idea of a state establishing Christianity as its official religion. All people should have equal standing under the law.

Picking the NCAA Final Four

CEDRIQUE FLEMMING

All the hype and anticipation is finally over, as the NCAA first-round games tip off today and tomorrow.

The first few rounds provide hours of basketball entertainment with upsets galore. No one can predict who will advance to the second round, so I figured I would spare everyone the grief and tell you who will advance to the Final Four in Indianapolis.

ATLANTA REGIONAL

The Duke Blue Devils are the No. 1 seed in the Atlanta region. Duke struggled at the end of the regular season, losing its final two games, but the Blue Devils rebounded to win the Atlantic Coastal Conference Tournament.

All-American senior J.J. Redick is arguably the best player in college basketball and with fellow All-American senior Shelden Williams, the tandem will lead Duke to another Final Four under coach Mike Krzyzewski.

The Devils' toughest opponent will be the LSU Tigers, whom they will meet in the Sweet 16. The Tigers could cause problems for Duke because of their inside presence.

LSU forward Tyrus Thomas, the Southeastern Conference Freshman Player of the Year, will make his much-anticipated return from a high-ankle sprain that has sidelined him for the last four games.

Sophomore forward Glen Davis, a.k.a. Baby Shaq, is a monster below the basket and will slow down Williams, but Redick will prove to be the difference as the Blue Devils take down LSU.

WASHINGTON, D.C. REGIONAL

The Connecticut Huskies – need I say more?

This team is by far the most talented team in the nation and will dominate throughout the D.C. regional en route to a Final Four appearance.

Sophomore Rudy Gay is a National Association of Basketball Coaches (NABC) Division I First Team All-American. Gay also was unanimously named to the All-Big East First Team.

Senior Hilton Armstrong and junior Marcus Williams both were named to the All-Big East Second Team, and senior Rashad Anderson and junior Josh Boone earned All-Big East Honorable Mentions.

The Huskies will cruise into the Elite Eight, where they face a possible match-up with the defending national champions, the North Carolina Tar Heels. The Tar Heels are a young squad led by All-American Tyler Hansbrough, and with coach Roy Williams at the helm, they might be able to pull the upset against UConn.

MINNEAPOLIS REGIONAL

The No. 1 seed in this bracket is Villanova, but with senior guard Allen Ray's status still unknown after suffering a soft tissue injury to his eye in the Big East Tournament last week, it is hard for me to put Nova in the Final Four. Ray has been medically cleared and will suit up in the Wildcats first-round game, but it is unclear how effective he will be playing with an injury.

The only thing I have to say is to watch out for No. 4 Boston College. This team is dangerous. Junior forward Jared Dudley and senior forward Craig Smith lead an experienced team into a bracket that is theirs for the taking. Smith earned All-ACC first team honors, and Dudley gained All-Conference second-team honors.

The best matchup for the Eagles will be in the Sweet 16, when they will probably face Villanova. Again, Villanova has one of the best backcourts

K-State guts out 6-1 win over Jayhawks

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team had a tough time with in-state rival Kansas, despite winning 6-1.

The Wildcats split five matches with the Jayhawks, winning four.

There was no telling who would win, with tight matches on all courts, coach Steve Bietau said.

"We had those four singles matches out there where, other than No. 1 singles, any of them could have gone either way," Bietau said.

"The only point where I started to feel good was after we won the fourth point."

Toughness proved to be the deciding factor, Bietau said.

"The match-up here was so close that the team that competed the best was going to come out the winner," Bietau said. "I think the results speak for themselves."

K-State's only loss came at No. 2 singles, where Elizaveta Avdeeva defeated senior Jessica Simosa (6-4, 6-7, 6-4).

However, Simosa did not come up short in effort, Bietau said.

"I thought Simosa competed exceptionally hard," Bietau said. "The tennis played on the No. 2 court was the best tennis of the day."

But losing still hurts, even when the effort is solid.

"I didn't play bad at all," Simosa said.

"I actually played pretty good but I'm disappointed because I was there for three hours – running my ass off, all over the court – and at the end I didn't get the win."

K-State won the doubles point for the sixth straight time.

Sophomores Fernanda Da Valle and Olga Klimova defeated Christine Skoda and Brittany Brown (8-1) and sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia and freshman Maria Perevoschikova clinched the doubles point by beating Lauren Hommell and Edina Horvath (8-6).

A change in strategy helped the duo rally from being down 4-2, Kvaratskhelia said.

"We were switching our combinations so that they wouldn't know what we were doing or what we were going to do," she said.

The victory puts the Wildcats (6-4, 2-2) in eighth place in the Big 12.

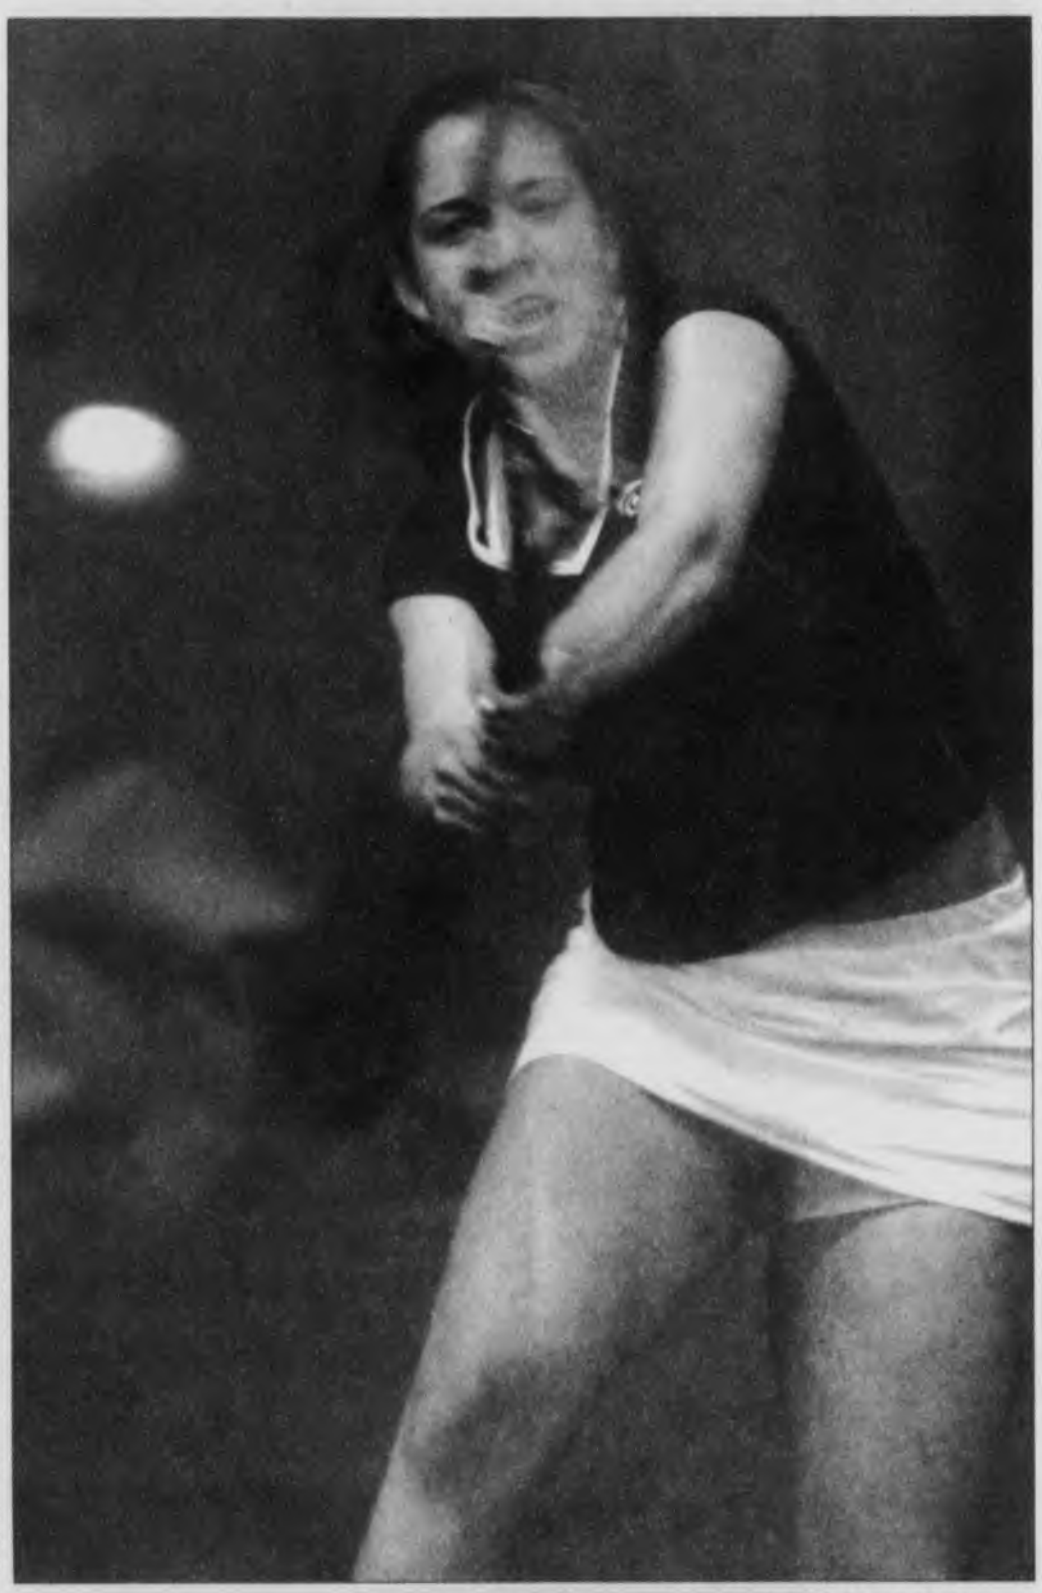
A loss would have dropped K-State to 10th place.

The win puts the Wildcats back in the mix in the Big 12, Bietau said.

"It's always good to win, but to beat KU is even better."

Tamar Kvaratskhelia
K-STATE TENNIS PLAYER

"You've got Texas and Baylor who are just above everybody else in the conference, and then you got another group with a lot of teams, and we've lost to two of those teams already," Bietau said. "You do the math and see where you are after you lose to three of those teams."



The fastest match of the day was at No. 1 singles where Kvaratskhelia defeated Ksenia Bukina (6-1, 6-0).

Kvaratskhelia said she had some extra incentive.

"It's always good to win, but to beat KU is even better," Kvaratskhelia said.

The Wildcats now have won six of the last seven matches against the Jayhawks.

However, Kansas is still far ahead overall, with a record of 47-7 against K-State.

Top: K-State senior Jessica Simosa returns a volley during her match against Kansas' Elizaveta Avdeeva on Wednesday afternoon at Ahearn Field House. Simosa became the second K-State player to defeat her Kansas opponent three of her four years on the tennis team.

Left: Tamar Kvaratskhelia hits the ball during singles competition Wednesday. Kvaratskhelia helped K-State to a 6-1 win over Kansas to improve K-State's record to 6-4 on the season.

Tracksters to start outdoor season

By Chris Carpenter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State track team will begin the 2006 outdoor season today at the ESU Spring Twilight meet at Emporia State University in Emporia, Kan.

After a strong indoor season that included the Wildcat men's best finish at the NCAA Indoor Championships since 1993, the stage is set for an outdoor season that will include 11 meets and span three months.

Coach Cliff Rovelto said he tries to build a complete team that can compete in bigger events.

"In our sport there is no defense," Rovelto said. "All we have control over is what we do. Our capability is there."

He said a pair of steady weight throwers will compete in the outdoor season: sophomore Laci Heller and senior Coby Cost.

Heller won a Big 12 title in the indoor season in the weight throw with a throw of 63 feet, 8 1/4 inches.

Cost, a native of El Dorado, Kan., finished third in the Big 12 championships to round out his indoor career. His distance of 67 feet, 7 inches was a personal season-best.

However, because he didn't qualify for the indoor national meet, Cost said he hopes to qualify for outdoor nationals.

"Unfortunately, I didn't qualify indoors, so my goal is to qualify for outdoors," Cost said. "I want to be more consistent week-in and week-out, try and throw the same mark."

There are more events and more athletes participating during the outdoor season, which makes the competition stiffer. But it's a nice change of pace, Cost said.

"The field gets a little stronger," Cost said, "but it's a good change to go outside."

During the 2005 outdoor season, K-State broke seven school records and returns five of those record-setting athletes.

Senior Breanna Eveland set two marks in the pole vault (14 feet, 1 1/4 inches) and the women's decathlon (6,821 points), while senior Kyle Lancaster established a collegiate season-best on his way to breaking the high jump record (7 feet, 7 inches). Junior Lisi Maurer returns after breaking the school record in the 100-meter hurdles (13.42 seconds). The 4x100-meter relay team of junior LaToya Banks, senior Shunte Thomas, sophomore Candice Mills and Maurer established a new K-State mark with a clocking of 44.80.

Also returning is national indoor champion senior Christian Smith, who won the mile run at the Indoor Championships last week and set a national record in the 1,000-meter run earlier in the indoor season, with a time of 2 minutes, 19.57 seconds. Smith has won three-straight Big 12 titles in the 1,000-meter run.

Smith will be featured in Sports Illustrated's "Faces in the Crowd" section this week for his efforts.

During spring break, the team will travel to Tucson, to compete in the Jim Click Invitational, followed by another weekend trip to Tucson, Ariz., for the UTEP Invitational on April 1.

MLB | Damon has shoulder tendinitis

TAMPA, Fla. — Johnny Damon has tendinitis in his throwing shoulder, and the New York Yankees star will not be available to play the outfield for the United States on Thursday night against Mexico in the World Baseball Classic.

Damon

The Yankees sent Damon to be examined by Dr. Lewis Yocum in California on Tuesday, and the speedy leadoff man was cleared to pinch-run for the U.S. squad if needed. Whether Damon can hit will be determined before Thursday's game, but he will not play in the field.

Damon had an MRI exam. His sore left shoulder is the same one that hindered him late last year with Boston and weakened an already inferior throwing arm.

SCR | U.S. receives highest FIFA ranking ever

ZURICH, Switzerland — The U.S. national team improved to fifth in FIFA's monthly rankings — the highest it's ever been placed by world soccer's governing body.

The Americans, who broke out of a three-way tie for sixth with Spain and Mexico despite dropping a point to 764 in Wednesday's latest poll, also moved ahead of France, which dropped to eighth.

The United States reached the quarterfinals at the 2002 World Cup finals and won the 2005 Gold Cup.

NFL | Packers win recruiting war for Pickett

GREEN BAY, Wisc. — In perhaps the most competitive negotiation Wednesday, the Green Bay Packers beat out the Bills and the Rams for Rams defensive tackle Ryan Pickett.

Pickett

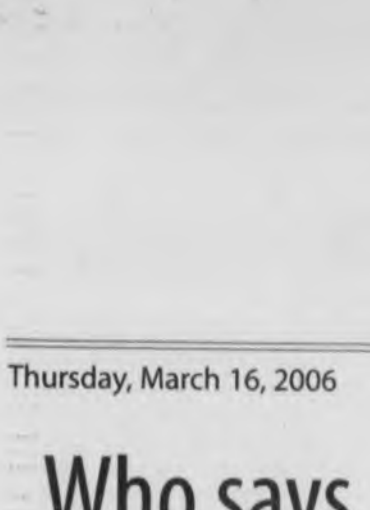
Terms of the agreement weren't available. Pickett was visiting the Bills but had stayed in touch with the Rams, hoping to get an offer that would bring him back. The Packers talked Pickett into his first visit during the weekend, and there was some thought he might not have totally liked his visit.

Those thoughts were proved wrong when the Packers stepped up and gave him a deal. Pickett will replace Grady Jackson as the run-stopping defensive tackle in the team's 4-3 scheme.

MLB | Gooden faces up to 5 years in prison

TAMPA, Fla. — Former baseball star Dwight Gooden was ordered held without bond Wednesday and faces up to five years in prison for violating the terms of his probation.

Gooden



The 41-year-old Gooden pleaded guilty in November to speeding away from police after a DUI traffic stop in August 2005 and was sentenced to three years of probation. On Tuesday, he went to a regular meeting with a probation officer where he admitted to using cocaine, according to Jo Ellyn Rackleff, a spokeswoman for the Department of Corrections.

BKC | Men's tourney teams closing grad gap

ORLANDO, Fla. — Women's basketball teams chosen for the 2006 NCAA Tournament continue to outscore males in college graduation rates, but the achievement gap is closing.

Sixty women's schools playing in the postseason graduated at least 50 percent of their athletes, compared with 41 schools in the men's tournament pool.

Who says women can't play in the PGA?

LONI WOOLERY

An interesting phenomenon happened while watching a guy friend play Tiger Woods 2006. I picked up the controller and realized how simple it was to play.

If anyone would have asked me prior to this if I wanted to play Tiger Woods, I would have turned him down. The only golf club I had ever come close to was when I was five years old and was whacked in the head by my father's back-swing with a three-wood.

Golf was just a sport I occasionally watched because my uncles were obsessed with it.

Tiger Woods changed all of that for me.

It took just a couple of times playing it to get used to which clubs and what kind of swing to use. By the end of the week, I had found my own obsession.

It actually was contagious because my roommate, Chaz, was soon addicted. We started to play in our spare time and began building up our own characters that would be as skilled as such golf greats as Tiger Woods, Vijay Singh, Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus.

It comes as a shock to most of our guy friends that we can – and indeed will – kick their butts in Tiger Woods.

Even better than that, we now get called out anywhere we go. The Collegian's own news editor, Matthew Girard, stopped by one Friday afternoon believing he would shut us out on a game of skins.

He had no idea what he was getting himself into. It was soon apparent that he, in fact, had no game. His desperation was obvious when he managed to chip in an eagle shot from the bunker and ran rampantly through our house cheering. That was the extent of his greatness that day.

This happened in November, and he has continued to show up at the house every other Friday since then.

He has yet to beat us.

However, he recently did come close. All three of us tied with six skins a piece, but Chaz won more money and officially took the win.

For whatever reason, Girard still comes back for more. He likes to say we keep him in check. I think he is a glutton for punishment.

A drunken friend revealed one night how to get a perfect "powered-up" swing. This is an effective cheat that will guarantee an extra 10 percent on your drive, unless you shank it.

Which brings up another aspect of our Friday rendezvous with Girard. We have started to chant, "shank it," every time the game is neck-and-neck. This is an effective way of distracting Girard and has worked 90 percent of the time.

Girard takes it all in stride though, which is more than I can say about other guy friends who have approached. A co-worker of Chaz's has talked mad game about being able to dominant us in Tiger Woods.

However, he hasn't been able to back it up – probably because he is scared of our talent.

The moral of this story is to never under estimate a woman who owns her own Xbox. It usually is a good sign that she knows how to play and won't hesitate to lay the smack down.

Web site provides nutrition facts for planning, maintaining healthy diet

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The "freshman 15" is a concern that weighs on the minds of many college students. Moving away from home, late nights and busy schedules are not conducive to healthy eating or well-balanced meals.

K-State's Housing and Dining Services recently has become one of many schools that now posts nutritional food values on a Web site to aid students in making healthy and responsible eating decisions.

Allowing students to view nutritional information about the food in the dining centers is a trend at many colleges and universities.

Many schools, like Iowa State University and the University of California-Berkeley, post online nutrition information, while schools like Harvard University, the University of Northern Iowa and K-State allow students to plan their meals and add the calories and other nutritional content directly on the Web site, Newberry said.

The Web site allows students to determine the nutritional value of menu items in three ways.

"The first way is by clicking on a menu item and getting its nutritional value," Newberry said. "The second way to determine nutritional values is through 'build-your-meal.' Students choose from the individual food items ... select a serving size, then calculate the nutritional value for the entire meal. The third option is to search the entire database for a particular food item."

Having the option to plan meals and view nutritional values helps students make better, smarter choices for improving one's diet or integrating wholesome foods into a healthy life plan, Melissa Schrader, staff assistant and dietician for Housing and Dining Services, said.

"With the self-service option at our dining centers, there's unlimited amounts of food," Schrader said. "Having nutritional values available means students are less likely to overeat. Having the values available helps them make smarter food choices."

When planning a menu for one meal or planning the meals for the day, it is important to consider multiple nutritional variables, Schrader said.

"It is important to take a broad look, the whole day, at what you are eating for each meal," Schrader said. "Students should make sure to get a variety of foods that complete their nutritional needs and fulfill those food groups suggested from the government's updated personalized food pyramid, called 'My Pyramid.'"

When considering caloric needs, it is best to receive an assessment from a registered dietician because a person's gender, age, height, weight and activity level should be taken into account, Schrader said.

In general, less active women and older adults should consume 1,600 calories; active women and less active men should eat 2,200 calories, and active men should consume about 2,800 calories a day.

"The calories should come from a variety of different food groups, not just one or two groups," Schrader said.

Schrader said she is pleased with how helpful the Web site is. She said students and staff like the "build-your-meal" feature, because they can select a meal, choose what foods they want to eat and how large of a serving they want, and the program offers a spreadsheet that gives the total nutritional value of the meal.

Schrader said it especially is helpful for those on a diabetic diet plan because the individual can see, for example, how much sugar they eat in a meal.

"We have received very nice feedback about the Web site," Schrader said.

Megan Hockman, sophomore in family studies and human services, said she uses the Web site daily to plan her meals. She began using the Web site in conjunction with "My Pyramid" in order to find out the nutritional value of the food she ate at Derby Dining Center.

"I use the Web site for myself everyday to calculate the total nutritional value of my meals," Hockman said. "The freshman 15 is kind of scary, I gained it, and now I want it to go away."

Hockman said she tries to plan meals around healthy foods as well as foods she enjoys.

"Usually I look for one thing on the menu that I like and choose side items around them (main entree)," Hockman said. "For example, if I get a grilled cheese, I won't get fries because both have about 400 calories. I try to choose the rest of my meal depending on calorie content and nutritional value."

Hockman said she feels the dining center's Web site is an good resource for students.

"I live in the freshman hall, and I always hear about girls worried about the freshman 15," Hockman said. "I talk to them about (the Web site) and suggest that they try to plan their meals so that they know exactly what they are eating."

Karen Casey Band to perform at McCain

The Irish contemporary music of the Karen Casey Band will be in concert at 7:30 tonight at McCain Auditorium.

Karen Casey has been publicly praised from Japan to America as one of Ireland's greatest singers. Her new recording, "Distant Shore," is a collection of Irish and contemporary ballads.

"Distant Shore" is a follow-up to Casey's "The Winds Begin to Sing," which won Irish Music Magazine's Best Folk Album award in 2001, according to a press release.

Casey interprets traditional Irish influences and contemporary influences in her music.

"Students may want to come out because it is a different kind of music than what students would hear at bars around here or in the region," Thomas Jackson development officer for McCain, said.

There will be two separate bands, Karen Casey Band and Flook, performing on the same stage, Jackson said.

"We have 443 tickets sold so far. There are 1,700 seats in McCain, we aren't opening the balcony, but we are expecting much more," Jeanne McKenzie, ticket service manager for McCain, said.

For more information and to purchase tickets call 532-6428 or visit www.k-state.edu/music.

Event combines Asian food, dance

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Guests attending the "Taste of Asia" event in the International Student Center enjoy Chinese food catered by Panda Express on Tuesday night. Along with the food, they were treated to a dance performance and a drawing for prizes.

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Food, culture and learning were the main points of interest at the International Student Center's Asian Food Fest.

The event, which was put on by the Asian American Student Union, took place Wednesday night. The students in AASU organized and set up the festivities.

The room quickly filled with about 70 people.

"We're very happy with the turnout," said Colleen Loo, AASU president and senior in chemical science. "Tonight, we hope to allow people to experience a taste of Asian culture in a casual setting and for people to just enjoy themselves."

Loo said the organization was formed in the mid-1990s, with the purpose of having Asian-American students bond with one another and share their culture with others.

The room was filled with tables of food from Panda Express, which was a popular part of the evening for many in attendance.

"I'm attending tonight for an anthropology class as a cultural event," said Catherine Metzgar, freshman in nutrition and exercise science. "I'm excited to learn more about this culture and definitely for some good food."

As they ate, many viewed the tables set up by AASU, which were filled with Asian-themed pieces, including fans, umbrellas, dolls, figurines and wall hangings.

"A majority of these items came from my house," Loo said. "Just things that had been in my family for awhile."

For entertainment, the Japanese Yosakoi Dance Club performed in matching T-shirts and purple headbands. The group consisted of 10 people performed two dances. The first, "Freedom," was a contemporary dance with a mix of instruments, music and voices. The second, "Soran Bushi," was more traditional and dated back to the folk era of Japan.

"This is a fairly new program, beginning only last year," said Seiji Ikeda, club coach and graduate student in fine arts. "We range from traditional to contemporary dancing, with all of it rooted in some type of folk song. The name 'yosakoi' means 'come over tonight,' so I believe that it should be a relaxed atmosphere for young, old and all body types to join and enjoy."

Ikeda said his dancers range from 10 to 50 years old, and he said he was pleased with how the evening went.

Metzgar said she agreed.

"I really enjoyed the dancing, and thought it was really cool," Metzgar said. "It was very expressive, and I loved that they had younger kids in it."

Payment, security options available for garage

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although construction of K-State's first parking garage lies in the distant future, parking officials have a variety of security and payment options to consider.

Nearby universities have implemented several different systems to control who has access to their parking garages and how much a day of parking costs.

The University of Kansas' parking garage, which opened in August 2000, has permit-only spaces and stalls paid for by an hourly fee.

The garage utilizes a "pay-on-foot system" for students, faculty members and visitors who use the facility.

Each parking stall is labeled with a number, and signs instruct drivers to remember their numbers and direct them to one of eight pay-on-foot stations. Drivers then enter their space numbers and put in the appropriate amount of change in the meter at a rate of $1 per hour, 24 hours a day.

The University of Nebraska also allows both permit holders and those without permits to park in its newest parking garage, opened in 2001.

The garage also features a reversible lane between its entrance and exit lanes that allows either two entrance or exit lanes to be open at once during peak garage hours.

Jeffrey Barnes, assistant director of Parking Services, said it's early to tell exactly what type of pay system the K-State parking garage would employ.

"It's going to be a mix of permit and pay-by-the-hour parking, but we don't know what the breakdown is going to be," he said.

Lee Legleiter, junior in marketing and management, said he did not want the university's system of parking to change with the new garage.

"I would like to keep it the same as every other parking lot on campus," he said. "It should be on a first-come, first-serve basis."

There also are a number of security plans the university could choose to implement in the new parking garage.

Security cameras and guards are two of the most popular security measures in campus parking garages.

Machines called advanced proximity readers are gaining popularity in European parking garages. These devices record a vehicle's make, color and tag number and photograph drivers as they enter the garage. A vehicle only is permitted to leave the garage if the original driver is behind the wheel.

Barnes said while the specifics of the new garage's security system have not yet been decided, certain measures are certain.

"There will be tons of lighting and probably security cameras," he said. "There will also be the information/emergency-type phones available throughout the garage."

Lynn Rundquist, junior in family studies and human services and social work, said the security of both drivers and vehicles should be a concern when the new parking garage is complete.

"There should probably be cameras and at least one security guard for after-hours," she said.

Inexpensive renter's insurance worth consideration to protect tenant possessions from theft, disasters

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For tenants, renter's insurance can be obtained at a low price to cover possessions.

Shannon Winter, leasing agent with Hill Investment and Rental Company, said when she graduated from K-State, she knew she should have looked into getting renter's insurance.

"I should have thought of it right away, but I didn't," Winter said.

Though she is still under her parents' plan, Winter said she already is looking into getting renter's insurance for herself.

Winter said she encourages all tenants she works with to take out another insurance plan for their goods, whether they are covered by parents or not.

"It's something students and graduate students should start thinking about when they start living in a rental property," she said.

Michele Hoffman, manager of Hill Investment and Rental Company, said she often encourager her renters to find insurance coverage from their car insurance company or other companies.

"With our apartments, it's not necessarily required, but we highly recommend it," she said.

Hoffman said for the low cost, renter's insurance is worth considering.

"Heaven forbid if anything should happen, then it could be covered," she said.

While getting renter's insurance might be dependent on an area or living situation, Don Thomson, agent at Farm Bureau Insurance, 2630 Farm Bureau Road, said renters should be aware that crime and disaster happen locally.

"If you ever look at the newspaper on Page 2, there are thefts there everyday," Thomson said. "You get to apartments in a college town, and one of the greatest perils is theft."

Thomson said he estimates a person with goods estimated at $10,000 to $15,000 could get renter's insurance for $100 a year.

The insurance would cover damage from disasters such as fire, windstorms, hail and theft.

Renter's insurance depends on the value of items and the insurance company, Thomson said, but the cost is usually low.

"It's not costly to protect yourself," he said. "It's just like getting protection for your car."

For those considering renter's insurance, Thomson said he asks, "Can you live without that stuff?

"Taking a chance for most people is just not worth the cost."

Panel members discuss Medicare

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The failure of medications such as Librium and Xanax to be covered under the new Medicare plan was one of several concerns raised by senior citizens at a town hall meeting on Medicare Plan D on Wednesday night at the Riley County Senior Services Center, 412 Leavenworth St.

Otherwise known as Benzodiazepines, the medications treat seizures, sleep problems and anxiety.

The town hall-style meeting was organized by George Hodges, freshman in social sciences and member of the K-State Debate Team.

In attendance were representatives from the offices of Sens. Sam Brownback and Pat Roberts, R-Kan., and a panel of speakers.

Tim Parsons, pharmacist for Barry's Drug Center, said he saw clients who had Benzodiazepines covered in January and February but saw their coverage stop in March.

He said some insurance companies possibly misled people who applied for benefits based on drugs listed as covered under certain plans.

"I'm bringing up a point that they were using that, saying it was covered when they knew it would not be," Parsons said.

Before Jan. 1, the plans offered by insurance companies could arbitrarily change their formularies, said Sister Beth Stover with the North Central Flint Hills Area Agency on Aging.

Julie Govert Walter of the North Central Flint Hills Area Agency on Aging speaks at a town meeting on Medicare Plan D on Wednesday night at the Riley County Senior Center. Walter was one of several panelists who spoke and answered senior citizens' questions.

Now the companies must give 60-day notice before changing coverage of medications, Stover said.

Greg Laird, pharmacy operations manager of the Department of Veterans' Affairs Eastern Kansas Health Care System, said most of the Benzodiazepines are covered by the Veterans' Benefits Administration.

The reasoning behind the new Medicare plan not covering the drugs might be due to their misuse, he said.

"They have a history of notoriously being over-prescribed," Laird said.

Another concern raised was about the deadline to sign up for Medicare coverage, which is May 15. Enrollment began Nov. 15, 2005.

If a person already is on Medicare and doesn't sign up by the deadline, he or she will receive a penalty of one percent of medication costs, said Sandy Praeger, Kansas insurance commissioner.

"One percent will be added to your premium every month for as long as you are on the Plan D plan," Praeger said.

People who haven't signed up by the deadline will not be able to sign up again until Nov. 15 if they are already on Medicare, she said.

Kansas has 41 different plans for Medicare Plan D, Praeger said.

When asked why there were so many plans, Praeger said 16 different companies applied to the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services to insure Plan D participants.

The 16 different companies offer 41 different plans, she said.

"The plans range from $9 to $60 a month in Kansas, depending on co-pays and the plan," Praeger said.

Students create new food products

By Stacy Stecklein
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A sweet vegetable cake is just one of the ideas the Department of Grain Science and Industry's Food Product Development Team is considering for this year's American Association of Cereal Chemists (AACC) International Student Division Product Development Competition in San Francisco. The team also will be competing for the Danisco Knowledge Award, which has a first-place prize of $10,000.

"It will be high in antioxidants and vitamins, and you can eat your vegetables but it will still be a sweet cake," said Emily Bonwell, graduate student in grain science and industry.

The team of nine members also is considering high-fiber drinks.

Last year, the grain science and food science departments combined to form a team making "Gimme's Snack Stick," which took third place at the fifth annual AACC Competition in Orlando, Fla. Texas A&M University took first and second places with its "Krunchips," multicolor tortilla chips made using sorghum bran for color, and "Veggie Shells," baked taco shells containing spinach and tomato and flavored with taco seasoning.

"The 'Gimme's Snack Stick' was a whole grain-filled snack stick, which had beneficial effects like omega-3-fatty acids, antioxidants and included some almonds and cherry flavor to make the product more attractive," said Ramakanth Jonnala, graduate student in grain science and industry.

"The goal is really to try and mimic what would go on in the product development function of a company," Jon Faubion, professor in grain science and industry, said.

For the AACC Competition, each team is required to prepare a poster, oral presentation and a product sample. The poster will be judged on originality, technical feasibility, marketing plan/potential, shelf life, product and process description and completeness of report. The oral presentation will be judged on organization, clarity and interest generated. The product sample will be judged on flavor/aroma, texture/physical sensory and packaging appearance and functionality.

Aside from monetary winnings, teams win "... prestige, particularly for some of the more established competitions," Faubion said. "If you can put that on your résumé, that's a really big deal."

Research group distributes kit to improve civil discourse on social issues

By Jaci Boydston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Since its inception in 2004, the Institute for Civic Discourse and Democracy, a multi-departmental research group housed in K-State's Department of Speech Communication, Theatre and Dance, has taken on an assortment of projects that seek to improve political and social discourse among citizens.

The institute was founded by faculty members who wanted to elevate the level of political communication in local, national and international communities, said David Procter, head of the speech communication, theatre and dance department.

"ICDD was formed in response to problems of incivility, intolerance and citizen alienation that is apparent in public deliberation," Procter said. "We want to enhance democratization through improved communication processes."

A $450,000 Targeted Excellence grant from the university has allowed ICDD to partner with other groups and establish civic communications-related projects in Manhattan and across the globe.

PUBLIC FORUM TOOLKITS

The institute is in the final stages of creating and distributing a public forum toolkit, a guidebook for organizing and facilitating public discussions on social issues, said Mary Tolar, executive director of the Kansas Campus Compact and associate director for the Department of Educational Leadership. Tolar said she expects the kit will be distributed to 17 universities across Kansas this spring.

The toolkit provides information about civic discourse and gives practical instructions for organizing a forum, like how to choose a moderator, invite guests and encourage discussion. The kit addresses the issue of social discourse in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, and it provides printed information, a DVD and discussion questions related to the topic, Tolar said.

If ICDD receives positive feedback about the toolkit, it could use the model created to make kits that address different issues, Erika Imbody, project coordinator, said. One issue Imbody said the institute might incorporate in the toolkit is the Justice For All pro-life group that displayed graphic images of abortion on the K-State campus on Oct. 24-27, 2005.

DEBATE WATCH FORUMS

In addition to creating kits to facilitate public discussion, the institute plans to organize debate watch forums for the state and congressional elections this fall. These forums, like the ones ICDD organized during the 2004 presidential campaign, would allow community members to watch and discuss political debates together.

"Traditionally, the candidates for governor or president have a debate, and immediately afterward, CNN, FOX News and ABC News will have their experts come on and say, 'Well, here's what happened,'" Procter said. "We want to have a group of community people get together, watch the debates and then have our own discussion without listening to the national political experts. We find that people have really good ideas, but they're overwhelmed by these national folks who tell us how to think, so we want people to watch for themselves and then say what they think."

Procter said the institute planned to have debate forums for the fall elections but was not likely to have similar events in the spring.

FACILITATOR WORKSHOPS

About half of the institute's 16 members are trained in moderating public forums, Procter said. To increase the number of trained moderators in the community, ICDD will conduct facilitator training sessions June 4-6. Imbody said space is available for 40 people, and the training program will grow to accommodate more people in the future.

An increase in the number of trained facilitators will make it easier for people to debate social issues more thoroughly, Imbody said.

"Say an issue does arise," Imbody said. "Somebody would be trained in how to host or facilitate a meeting where you can actually hear all sides of an issue. A lot of times, either everyone agrees, or there's a lot of screaming and yelling, and we want to find a balance."

OTHER PROJECTS

In addition to several local projects, ICDD has worked with groups across the country and the world to further a shared goal of improved civic discourse. In March 2005, ICDD members traveled to Armenia with the Kansas National Guard to conduct public deliberations on emergency management preparedness, Procter said.

ICDD members are working on a grant that would allow them to travel to Ukraine to conduct a symposium on response to environmental disasters on the 20th anniversary of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant accident. Procter said he also is talking with Impact Coalition, a New York-based organization working to improve the debate and dialogue skills of inner-city youth about partnering for an upcoming project.

Student says drive, not gender, determines success

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mary Evans has spent her college career defying others' expectations.

As a senior in construction science and management, Evans is one of 12 women enrolled in a department of more than 250 students.

Despite these numbers, she said the gender issue has never been a problem for her, in classes or the professional program.

"Sometimes I don't even realize it," Evans said. "I grew up with three older brothers. I've been surrounded by men my whole life."

Since she was young, Evans said she has loved spending time outdoors, building tree houses with her best friend and playing in the dirt with her brothers.

Although she didn't know exactly what she wanted to be when she grew up, Evans said she always knew her career would be outdoors. One day, inspiration struck.

"I was riding past a construction site in the car with my mom," she said. "I asked her if I could be a constructions worker. She said, 'No, you're not going to be strong enough.'"

Evans persisted, despite her family's renewed skepticism years later when she decided to forgo her plan to major in architectural engineering and instead enter the construction science program at K-State.

"It took me a long time to convince them," she said. "My older brother told me, 'There's no way you can do this. You're going to get out on the job site, they're going to cuss you out in ways you've never even heard, and you're going to run home crying.' That was probably the hardest to take."

Evans set out to prove them wrong, and has since earned high grades and several internships in the construction industry. Furthermore, instead of shunning her, Evans said her fellow construction science students proved to be great friends and an incredible network of support.

"It took a while for us all to get used to each other and for them to treat me like one of the guys," she said. "Now we're like a close family. I know that if I need something, they'll all be there for me."

David Fritchen, head of the the Department of Architectural Engineering and Construction Science, said Evans' dedication to her work makes her a good student.

"She has commitment, aggressiveness and a willingness to succeed," he said. "She's not afraid to get out of her comfort zone."

Fritchen said the number of women in the construction science and engineering departments is growing, perhaps due to the growing support network of women already working in these fields.

"Construction has an undeserved image," he said. "There's a tremendous opportunity for women in our industry."

Evans has done a summer internship with McCownGordon Construction, a contracting company based in Kansas City, Mo., and has worked on a variety of projects, including a six-story hotel renovation and building a Ronald McDonald House, she said.

Evans said she hopes to be an on-site supervisor or project manager after earning her degree. She said regardless of gender, one of the most important things supervisors need to do is present themselves as professionals.

"CNS is a professional career, not something to be looked at lightly. When you get out there and walk onto a job, everybody will know who you are. If it's only by reputation, you'd better make it a good one," she said.

Evans' close friend and roommate, Carissa Fredrickson, senior in biology, said Evans will have no trouble achieving her career goals.

"She is well on her way," Fredrickson said. "I can really see her pursuing construction; she works hard and never gives up."

With the support of her family, friends and classmates now secured, Evans said she encourages any woman interested in construction science to pursue an education in the field.

"I would tell them not to be intimidated or give up," she said. "These skills can be learned. Just make friends and get involved. I wouldn't be nearly as successful here without the support of my friends."

Lawrence will not receive federal aid for storm damage clean-up

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE – As Lawrence residents begin to recover from the weekend's severe weather, they will have to do so without federal aid, a state official said Tuesday.

Joy Moser, spokeswoman for the Kansas Division of Emergency Management, said only 12 homes in the city sustained 40 percent uninsured damage.

The federal cutoff for a community to receive federal support is 25 homes.

"There's not going to be any federal money available," Moser said.

Three houses were destroyed by the storms, which began early Sunday, bringing strong winds that ripped through Lawrence throughout the day.

A fourth house sustained 80 to 90 percent damage, and an additional eight houses had at least 70 percent damage.

Local officials still are submitting damage estimates to state and local agencies, but residents will miss out on a variety of federal disaster aid, including rental assistance for displaced homeowners, cash grants of up to $26,200 per household and tax credits.

"It's unfortunate for those people," Moser said, "but it didn't meet the threshold."

However, the Adjutant General's Department said local governments and some nonprofit groups still might be eligible for federal assistance for damage to public infrastructure.

Initial surveys from the Douglas County Emergency Management showed property losses and local government expenses of between $4 million and $7 million, but that could reach $8 million once all estimates are in.

That figure includes damages at the University of Kansas, where officials expect $6 million in costs related to the storms.

Because the University of Kansas buildings are self-insured, Gov. Kathleen Sebelius said the state will assess the damage and submit a budget amendment for repairs to the Legislature. The university already has about $4.5 million in its repair and rehabilitation budget.

"We'll certainly have a discussion of it and see what we need to do," said House Appropriations Committee Chairman Melvin Neufeld, R-Ingalls.

"We'll have to see what they really need and make adjustments accordingly."

INSURANCE | Written documentation, planning ahead important when purchasing coverage, tours

"I remember they were stressing it a lot, and I thought it sounded like a scam," Pinsent said.

Pinsent said one of her friends had to back out at the last minute because her grandmother died.

"It was buying insurance that made it so we didn't have to make up for her not going," Pinsent said. "It refunded her money, also."

Pinsent said she thought purchasing insurance is a good idea, especially before a trip to another country.

"Most times you're in a foreign place, and you don't know everything," Pinsent said. "Insurance is just another way to back yourself up, and it makes your parents feel better."

Alberto Amaya, supervisor in the reservation center of Apple Vacations, an Illinois-based travel agency, said the company's costumers can purchase AVOK, its travel insurance. The cost depends on the length of the trip.

"If you stay for four nights, it's $49.99," Amaya said. "If you stay for five to 14, it's $69.99. Some tour operators use their own insurance and don't use what we offer."

AVOK has a three-part coverage system: pre-departure cancellation, post-departure and best-price guarantee. Amaya said that if anything happens during the vacation, it will be dealt with upon return to the United States.

"You just have to submit a claim and everything would be taken care of," Amaya said.

Amaya said having insurance is important.

"If you don't have insurance, you never know what's going to happen," he said. "Let's say the night before your trip, you can't find your proof of citizenship. You would lose all your money. The insurance companies in the states don't always cover it."

He said students need to make sure to get something in writing when purchasing travel insurance.

"Students should make sure they get some sort of certificate of coverage," Amaya said.

"I know some people have been mislead, and at the end, they couldn't do anything about it because they didn't have anything in writing. A lot of times policies change, for example."

He said that once students are on their trip, there often will be public salesmen present.

"If you are going to get tours or excursions, make sure you get them from your concierge or from your hotel," Amaya said.

Students might never see the salesmen again and have nothing to show for what they bought, he said, and it's better to plan ahead.

"There's a lot of false information out there," Amaya said.

TUITION | Consolidation, increase in utility fees raise rates

and Bruce Shubert, associate vice president for administration and finance.

Shubert said his role in the committee was to provide information about credit hours and tuition rates.

"I think it's a thorough recommendation that considers the best interests of Kansas State," Shubert said of the committee's proposal. "I am very pleased and impressed with the students that I was involved with."

Bosco said tuition increases are a way of life at K-State and at other universities across the country.

"With our student leadership, we have been able to determine how much of an increase, who is going to pay and where it is going to go," Bosco said. "I am very pleased that financial aid continues to be a high priority when looking at tuition increases."

The committee also addressed plans for FY 2007, the final year in the existing five-year tuition plan.

While the K-State administration wants to keep the tuition and fee increases less than 10 percent, Burns said he and Student Body Vice President Grant Groene's platform issue of consolidating graduation, transcript and Career and Employment Services fees into tuition increased tuition about .9 percent.

Moore said the K-State administration also will introduce a $2 per credit hour utility surcharge in response to an increase in natural gas prices. The administration has agreed to decrease the utility surcharge by $1 per credit hour at a time if utility rates decline, he said.

Shubert said K-State contracted with Chevron Corporation to spend about $20 million on energy conservation measures. The bonds for the project were issued in 2003, and the projects were finished within the last six months, Shubert said.

"We have actually decreased natural gas consumption by about 33 percent since we adopted the new energy plan," Moore said.

The total tuition increase for undergraduate residents in FY 2007 will be about 12 percent, Moore said.

The tuition committee also identified five areas for funding initiatives for the next five-year plan.

Moore said the funding initiatives are ranked in importance to the university as a whole.

"The reason that the money doesn't necessarily correlate with the initiative is because some of the projects don't require a large amount of money to be successful," Moore said.

The tuition committee also said in its proposal that it supports the proposal to build a new K-State Child Development Center. According to the Tuition Strategy Proposal, university administrators have heard reports from consultants that the current state of the center is an unacceptable facility in which to care for children.

"If it is not taken care of soon, it will shut down," Burns said. "We look at the facility as providing services different from the Rec or the Union."

The tuition committee recommended to fund no more than 75 percent of debt financing for the estimated $6 million to $8 million capital construction of the new center through tuition revenue.

"The rest of the money after, or up to, 75 percent, will have to be raised or funded through other avenues," Burns said.

The Special Committee to Study Long-Term Tuition Strategies also recommended the creation of a 12-member formal committee that would begin meeting in FY 2009.

The new committee would review the accomplishments from fiscal years 2008-09 and recommend a tuition rate for the fourth and fifth fiscal years in the rolling proposed five-year tuition plan, according to the Tuition Strategy Proposal.

Burns said creating the committee would involve introducing a bill to Student Senate. Senate must vote on its creation.

"It shouldn't be controversial," Burns said. "The administration is fully behind the concept."

Burns said the proposed tuition proposal is one step toward his and Groene's platform issue of developing a contracted tuition rate.

"Even though this is not guaranteeing students the same tuition rate for their entire college careers, it is still giving them the ability to predict the cost of getting a degree," Burns said.

COLUMN | Oakland region wide open for Final Four appearance

in the country with its four guards – Ray, senior Randy Foye, junior Mike Nardi and sophomore Kyle Lowry.

But look for Boston College to reach the Final Four where it will face UConn.

OAKLAND REGIONAL

This region is by far the most wide-open in that there is no clear-cut team that stands out among the pack to reach the Final Four.

Memphis holds the No. 1 seed, and UCLA and Pittsburgh hold second and third, respectively.

The only team that impresses me out of these three is UCLA, with its two sophomore guards Arron Afflalo and Jordan Farmar. These guys can control the tempo and are excellent shooters.

None of that will matter, however, when they face the Kansas Jayhawks in the Elite Eight. This team proved me wrong last week in the Big 12 Conference Tournament.

I thought it would buckle under Texas' pressure, but it went on to defeat the Longhorns and take the Big 12 Championship, so it is hard for me not to put the Jayhawks in the Final Four.

The Jayhawks are young – they start two sophomores and three freshmen – but have enough talent and enough determination to win close games. Plus, it doesn't hurt having clutch players like guards Mario Chalmers and Brandon Rush on your team.

The toughest match-up for the Jayhawks will be when they face off against the Pittsburgh Panthers – a team that boasts senior guard Carl Krauser and junior center Aaron Gray – in the second round.

I truly believe the winner of this game will be the team that reaches the Final Four, and the Jayhawks have what it takes to beat the Panthers.

In the end, UConn will dominate Duke to win the national championship in what should be a thriller.

March Madness is going to be sweet this year.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students gathered in the K-State Student Union Grand Ballroom, from whence the sounds of applause and a live hip-hop disc jockey resonated throughout the Union.

The event was not a concert or a dance – rather, students, staff and community members united for the second annual Diversity in Action Conference to discuss the importance of diversity in the business world.

"We want to do something to promote diversity on campus," said Jessica Smith, graduate student in business administration and president of the Multicultural Business Student Association.

The conference took place noon to 8:30 p.m. Thursday in the Ballroom. The theme for this year's conference was "Enhance It! Don't Fear It! It's Just Diversity!"

"The first Diversity in Action Conference last year was just phenomenal and everything went smoothly," Bryon Williams, junior in economics, said. "I'm expecting things to be even better this year. I'm just coming to learn and enjoy."

K-State football coach Ron Prince was the keynote speaker at the event. Prince discussed the importance of recognizing diversity in a global perspective.

"In our country we have struggled with diversity in the black-white way and have made progress in that area," Prince said. "Our definition of diversity is going to change in your lifetime. For all of us sitting here in Kansas, diversity means China, diversity means India, diversity means the Middle East.

"I get what the big deal is about being a black head coach at K-State. I get it. But I'm hoping that someday it won't matter."

Other speakers included Sondra Thiederman, who has 25 years experience as a public speaker, trainer and author on the subject of diversity.

She delivered a speech titled "Making Diversity Work: Seven Steps for Defeating Bias in the Workplace," which also is the title of her fourth book.

Mohammed Bilal from MTV's The Real World was also among Thursday's speakers. Bilal, along with long-time friend Josh Goldstein, gave an overview of 10 tools to open interaction.

This presentation, titled "The Color Orange," included audience interaction and mixed rap music with dialogue.

"My favorite part was 'The Color Orange' presentation – I think it kept a lot of people's interest and made them pay attention more," said Camey Turner, sophomore in pre-professional business administration. "It addressed issues and was in-your-face but in a fun way."

There was also a panel discussion on diversity in the work force. The panel consisted of representatives from five different businesses.

Man faces alleged rape charge

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Alexander Shane Wright Jr., Lexington, Ky., was arrested on $10,000 bond Wednesday on a warrant issued by the Riley County District Court.

The warrant was issued January 12 and related to an alleged rape that occurred on Oct. 31, 2002, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said.

"He was picked up in Lexington, Ky., on our warrant," Quintanar said.

Wright waived extradition to Kansas and was brought to the RCPD.

While at the RCPD, another warrant for Wright's arrest was found.

The second warrant, from Pottawatomie County, also was for rape, Quintanar said.

Both rape charges involve children about 13 years old, Quintanar said.

Bond for the Pottawatomie County charge is set at $50,000.

Senate supports surplus uses

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A resolution to support the recommendations for the use of excess funds in the student bond surplus account passed Student Senate at its meeting Thursday night with a vote of 39-2-0.

Six proposals for one-time allocations of funding from the $1.5 million Student Fee Bond Surplus were announced on March 1.

A large reserve had accumulated in the surplus account, and $1.5 million had been allotted for projects that benefit the entire student body.

After 47 pre-proposals were submitted by Feb. 10, the Student Fee Bond Surplus Committee chose 16 proposals for the full proposal review process.

Project coordinators for the proposals gave presentations to the committee during the week of Feb. 20, and the final proposals were chosen.

According to the resolution, funds not spent at the end of Fiscal Year 2007 will revert back to the student bond surplus account. Exceptions can be granted by Senate.

The resolution also states that progress reports for each project must be submitted to the student body vice president by March 1, 2007.

One of the project proposals that will receive funding is the K-State Challenge Course, which will provide different elements that encourage teamwork through a challenge obstacle course.

Council votes to raise permit, fine fees to fund new garage

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Council on Parking Operations voted unanimously in favor of proposed changes for the increase in parking permit prices and fines to fund a parking garage at its meeting on Thursday.

The council will present the approved recommendations during a public forum at 3 p.m. April 27 in the Big 12 Room at the K-State Student Union.

Discussion at the forum will be considered by the council, and its final recommendation will be made to upper university administration, said Gary Leitnaker, assistant vice president for the Division of Human Resources and Parking.

"Anybody can come and give any kind of input they like," Leitnaker said.

The council approved the proposed change of fines for those who have a parking permit but fail to display it properly. Instead of paying the $50 fee for no valid permit, the council said drivers would be required to properly display their permit within 24 hours and pay a one-day fee of $2.

Student Body President Michael Burns said the proposed change will be one of trial and error.

"We're going to have to learn as we go (with the charge for a one-day permit)," Burns said. "If we have to address it again a year from now, that's fine and we'll fix it."

The Finance Committee has worked on the proposed increases since November, said Bill Muir, chairman of Finance Committee and member of the Council on Parking Operations.

The proposed rate increases will take effect July 1 if they are accepted by upper university administration.

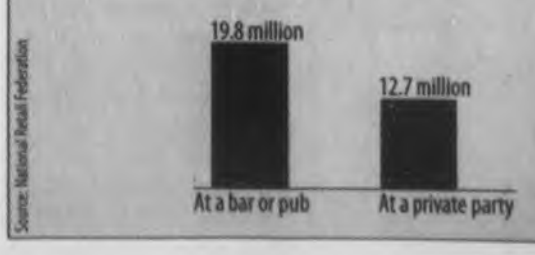
Firefighters contain fires

JETMORE, Kan. — Firefighters battled hot spots Thursday in two grass fires that scorched about 14,000 acres of rural land in Hodgeman County before they were contained. The Hodgeman County fires, each burning an estimated 7,000 acres, were the latest in a spate of wildfires across the state. On Sunday, a fire in Meade County burned 15,000 acres, and last week 10,700 acres burned in Butler County.

U.S. launches attacks

BAGHDAD, Iraq — In a well-publicized show of force, U.S. and Iraqi forces swept into the countryside north of the capital in 50 helicopters Thursday looking for insurgents in what the American military called its "largest air assault" in nearly three years. There was no bombing or firing from the air in the offensive northeast of Samarra, a town 60 miles north of Baghdad, the U.S. military said.



Contracts wasted millions

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The government wasted millions of dollars in its award of post-Katrina Hurricane contracts for disaster relief, including at least $3 million for 4,000 beds that were never used, congressional auditors said Thursday. The Government Accountability Office's review of 13 major contracts 29 offers the first preliminary overview of their soundness.

Meat reprieve granted in 2 Catholic dioceses

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two area Catholic dioceses have granted a dispensation for St. Patrick's Day.

The Kansas City, Kan., archdiocese and the Wichita diocese have lifted the Friday meat ban in honor of St. Patrick. A typical St. Patrick's Day meal includes beef.

Amy Pavlacka, director of communications at the Wichita diocese, said the bishop granted the dispensation for those wishing to celebrate.

"If the faithful wish to honor St. Patrick's Day in certain ways, they are free to do so," Pavlacka said.

Although the Wichita diocese did not require the parishioners to abstain from meat on another day next week, the Kansas City archdiocese did.

"They gave a dispensation, but said they should give another day to abstain from meat if they choose to eat meat on St. Patrick's Day," said Joyce Klingele, Kansas City archdiocese secretary.

The Kansas City archdiocese covers most of northeastern Kansas, including Pottawatomie and Wabaunsee counties and Wamego, Kan.

Manhattan, however, is part of the Salina diocese, which did not grant the dispensation.

Although the bishop did not grant an area-wide dispensation like the Kansas City and Wichita dioceses, the decision is in the hands of individual priests.

"He's not opposed to the dispensation," the Rev. Frank Coady said. "He just felt it should be the jurisdiction of the other pastors."

The Rev. Joseph Popelka, pastor at the Seven Dolors Catholic Church, 731 Pierre St., said dispensation had not been granted at his church.

"Catholics here would be required to abide by it," he said. "If the decision of dispensation had been made, it would have been made by last weekend and included during mass."

Senate introduces bill to post votes online

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A bill that would post specific votes cast by student senators on Student Governing Association's Web site was introduced at Student Senate's Thursday night meeting.

Senators' votes would be published in a Web link with the official minutes on SGA's Web site in an effort to make the information more accessible to the student body, according to the bill.

"People will be able to look up their senator and see how they voted on issues," College of Arts and Sciences Senator Josh Hersh said.

Senate is set to take final action on the bill at its meeting on March 30. Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator of OSAS, will help facilitate the postings on SGA's Web site.

Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore said previous votes made by senators before enacting the bill would be accessible to students through the secretary in the Office of Student Activities and Services or the Student Senate chair.

"We will format the document that we use as a roll-call vote so... you can read it very easily as a PDF, and that PDF would be posted to the Web site and updated every week," Moore said.

Students thank legislators with desserts

By Kelsey Noel and Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Governing Association members and College of Agriculture Ambassadors thanked state legislators for their work at the 17th annual Cats in the Capitol Wednesday at the Capitol in Topeka.

SGA Governmental Relations Committee Chair Matt King said Cats in the Capitol is an event where K-State students can thank legislators for their support of higher education.

"We let them know what K-State is doing for Kansas and what its students are doing," King said.

Jackie McClaskey, assistant dean in the College of Agriculture, said Cats in the Capitol was sponsored and funded through the president's office, K-State Alumni Association, the College of Agriculture and K-State Research and Extension.

"The whole event is designed to say thank you to legislation for their service to the state," McClaskey said.

Students in the College of Agriculture took cookies, cheese, meat and ice cream made in various departments of the college as part of the event.

"I enjoyed going because it's neat to see senators and congressmen interact with students," Mary Geiger, junior in agricultural communications and journalism, said. "We do it so they can take a break – it's a nice chance to interact and not have to worry about deadlines or work.

"Everyone gets excited about this day. As I was helping to carry in the supplies, people kept asking, 'When do we get to eat ice cream?'"

Abby White, senior in agricultural communications and journalism and a four-year ambassador, participated in the event for the first time.

"This is an event that is reserved for the older ambassadors," she said. "(Participation) is seniority-based, because it is one of those cool things that everyone wants to do."

Senate President Stephen Morris, R-Hugoton, said as a K-State alumnus and former president of the Alumni Association, he enjoys Cats in the Capitol.

"I think it's a great to have K-Staters come each year," he said. "I certainly always look forward to it, and I'm sure everyone else does, too."

White said while she enjoyed serving the legislators, that was not her favorite part of the day.

On behalf of the K-State student body, White said ambassadors presented 50 tree seedlings to the chancellor of the University of Kansas to assist in recovery from the recent weather damage on campus.

"KU's campus had been devastated, and it just so happened that they had representatives in the Capitol on the same day," White said. "So after their chancellor finished a press conference he was holding, we presented him with our gift."

TO THE POINT

Where to find the editors on spring break

The Collegian editors rarely see the outside of Kedzie Hall and this spring break, they will take the opportunity to have a life, at least for a week. Here are those spring break plans:

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Michael Ashford
Abby Brownback
Adrianne DeWeese
Zachary T. Eckels
Matthew Girard
Angie Hanson
Curtis Johnson
Owen Kennedy
Emily Lawrence
Cj Lehr
Alex Peak
Leann Sulzen
Loni Woolery

Matthew Girard, news:
Watching as many NCAA Tournament games as possible; maybe starting an illegal turtle racing circuit and chasing golf balls around with my dad.

Loni Woolery, edge:
Playing in as many online-poker tournaments as possible, so I can make enough money to retire from the Collegian early.

Zach Eckels, opinion:
Seeing how many 12-ounce curls are possible to do in the span of a week

Abby Brownback, co-copy chief:
Wrecking havoc in the nation's capitol, also known as shopping, touring the White House and visiting museums.

Michael Ashford, managing editor:
Heading to the sandy beaches of Panama City, Fla., to swim with the dolphins, go parasailing, eat seafood and practice my beach bum impersonation.

Emily Lawrence, presentation:
I'm going to try to find a cheap flight home for Easter. That way when we tell everyone what our plans are for that weekend I'll have something to say.

Cj Lehr, managing editor:
Going to my best friend's birthday party in Boulder, Colo. I am told there will be clowns there.

Owen Kennedy, co-copy chief:
Watching Wallace and Gromit: Curse of the Were-Rabbit... over and over again.

Alex Peak, campus:
Flying thousands of miles across the Pacific Ocean to paradise — Honolulu, Hawaii — where I will lounge on the beach and indulge in great food.

Adrianne DeWeese, city/gov:
Sleeping in Wamego — and trying not to think about the Collegian.

Festive indulgence

St. Patty's Day drinking a yearly tradition

EILEEN LAUX

St. Patrick's Day is a time for celebration. Why not show your pride by kicking back and having an ice-cold beer?

Some say the holiday isn't about drinking and isn't just for the Irish. True, but why not celebrate a holiday that is about having fun and letting loose in the middle of the year?

I'm half-Irish, and I don't look down on other people who are not Irish but still celebrate the holiday. It is a time to be with friends and family and just have fun.

I'm not saying the holiday is all about drinking, but I am saying there is nothing wrong with tossing back a few.

I attended the St. Patrick's Day parade here in Manhattan and witnessed the excitement and fun of it firsthand at the bars in Aggieville.

It didn't matter who was Irish; what mattered was that the student body and community could put on their green and celebrate together. I personally did not get drunk, but I will admit I had a few beers.

There is no law that says you have to drink on St. Patty's Day, as I like to call it, and you don't have to drink to have fun. But I enjoy having a couple of cold ones to celebrate my ancestors who traveled before me, and I take pride in my heritage and who I am.

Many people say we should be paying homage to our ancestors by devoting the day to more than drinking and wearing green. St. Patty's Day is a Roman Catholic feast day which celebrates St. Patrick, Christian missionary to Ireland and the patron saint of Ireland.

The holiday was brought to the United States by Irish immigrants. The first parade took place in New York City on March 17, 1762, when Irish soldiers serving in the British military marched through the city, according to www.wikipedia.org.

Yes, I agree St. Patrick's Day is a former holy day and still is, but there is no reason that just because it is holy, there is no drinking allowed.

The whole point of being Irish is to be proud of who you are and where you came from.

St. Patrick's Day wouldn't be complete without raising your glass filled with Irish whiskey, Guiness or Bailey's Irish Cream, and toasting with good friends and having a good time.

Who cares what ethnicity or religion you are? Once again, I'm not saying the holiday should be just about getting wasted, but there is absolutely nothing wrong with a few green beers.

I know many people who don't drink and have just as much fun at the bars as the rest of us. However, I enjoy looking back on the crazy times with my friends and laughing about the day's antics.

To sum up, my basic point is drinking alcohol is not the basis for having fun, but it doesn't hurt. St. Patrick's Day is all about having fun and having a few is a tradition. So if you will be going out to the bars tonight, have a green beer and wear your green with pride.

Irish-themed holiday shouldn't be booze fest

ALEX PEAK

St. Patrick's Day, a holiday people have celebrated for more than a thousand years, is rooted in Irish-Catholic culture. Seeing as the day is based on the commemoration of a religious figure – the patron saint of Ireland – shouldn't the day's festivities somehow tie into traditional ways?

According to the History Channel, there are 34 million U.S. residents who claim to be of Irish ancestry. How many of the millions of people that drink themselves into a state of inebriation each March 17 neglect to honor the day in any way that reflects its true religious backbone?

In Ireland, it's not uncommon for there to be large parades, festivities and drinking, but there also is commemoration of St. Patrick for converting the pagans to Christianity, according to the History Channel.

In the United States, it seems like St. Patrick's Day has become the love child of Hallmark and every bar district and alcohol distillery in the nation. People deck out in their green outfits and decorative shamrocks as they tote mugs overflowing with green beer foam and pretend to be Irish for the day.

Some people even take more pride in "being Irish for a day" than they do their own culture. It doesn't make much sense that people who have ancestors umpteen generations back from Germany and England, party on St. Patrick's Day like they were born and raised in Dublin, Ireland.

If you're going to have Irish patriotism and you're a U.S. citizen, why not squeeze in some American loyalty, too?

As far as assimilation and appreciation, it's good for American culture to experience other countries' holidays. But how many Canadians or Mexicans celebrate the Fourth of July? We as Americans might think it was a bit strange if the fireworks displays and festivities were more amplified during our Independence Day.

And how many native American residents who emigrate to other countries still celebrate the Fourth of July or encourage other people to celebrate American holidays?

If people are going to celebrate other cultures' holidays, they should at least make a fair attempt to not be too choosy and instead recognize all of them. Don't be flaky; acknowledge everyone's holidays or none at all.

Also, if people do choose to "be Irish for a day" they should look at it from every aspect and not just drink the whole day away. After all, it is traditionally viewed as a religious feast day, according to the History Channel.

So when you slug back your green beer or Bailey's, at least remember St. Patrick and eat some traditional Irish grub, like dilled cabbage potatoes and some spiced soda bread. But, since it's a Catholic holy day during Lent, remember to stay away from the corned beef hash patties.

Grain complex in midst of construction

By Jaci Boydston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Department of Grain Science and Industry is in the middle of a makeover that will last more than a decade.

As the only program in the nation to offer bachelor's degrees in baking, feed and milling science and management, the department is constructing a five-building, $77 million complex that will replace out-of-date facilities and help K-State remain an industry leader.

The new Grain Science and Industry Complex, which will sit on 16 acres on the north side of Kimball Avenue, will include an International Grains Program Center (IGP), Bioprocessing and Industrial Value-Added Center (BIVAC), flour mill, feed mill, and teaching, research and baking building. The IGP building and the BIVAC are completed, and the Hal Ross Flour Mill will be finished by fall 2006.

Improved facilities are instrumental in recruiting students, said Ron Madl, grain science and industry administrator.

"In the middle of the last century, K-State's grain science program was the epitome of this particular industry," Madl said. "As we neared the end of the last century, we began to see a decline in our enrollments."

Madl said the decline was linked to out-of-date facilities. For example, the current feed mill is more than 40 years old and does not have many of the technological advances necessary to make it an industry leader, said Joel Newman, American Feed Industry Association president.

Since the IGP building and the BIVAC opened in 2004 and 2005, respectively, grain science enrollment numbers have increased. Spring 2006 enrollment increased 16 percent from the previous semester, with 47 undergraduate students in baking science, 75 in milling science and 40 in feed science, Virgil Smail, grain science department head, said.

The creation of the BIVAC addresses a new field, and brings K-State in step with peer institutions with similar centers, like Iowa State University, the University of Nebraska and Oklahoma State University.

BIVAC research involves turning agricultural products into higher-value products, like ethanol and other bio-fuels.

Faculty began planning the new complex in 1997, and the final building is expected to be complete by 2009.

The department still needs to raise $50 million to build the teaching, research and baking building, which is five to 10 times the estimated cost of each of the others in the complex.

The grain science department is soliciting donations from people and businesses in the industry – it needs $60 million to complete the feed mill and the teaching, research and baking building, according to the building prospectus.

The department has previously received financial support from the Kansas Wheat, Corn and Soybean commissions and private donors like Wichita attorney Hal Ross, for whom the flour mill is named.

"The complex already is improving our reputation and our ability to address some key new technological areas," Smail said.

K-State to use electronic billing

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students will soon be viewing their tuition statements online when the university switches to its new electronic billing system.

Beginning April 15, all university bills will be available exclusively on the Internet and will be accessible to students through their KATS accounts.

Jim Badders, assistant director of student services, said the university adopted the new billing system to provide better service to students.

"There is increased access – students can look at their bills anywhere they want," he said. "And the system is more secure and more timely – the bills are available online almost immediately."

Badders said electronic billing would eliminate the delays caused by outdated contact information in university records.

"Students won't have the hassle of changing their address when they move," he said.

While only students themselves will have access to their electronic bills, Badders said they could choose to extend viewing rights to their parents. Parents would view their students' financial information on an e-bill Web site, and would not have access to any other information on their child's KATS account.

A direct link on students' bills will allow them to pay with a credit card or electronic check online. Electronic bills can also be paid by sending a check in the mail.

"The electronic bill will be exactly the same as it is currently. You can print it out and send it in with your payment," Badders said.

Those who do not have computers in their homes can still access their bills. Badders said students can use computers at Hale Library or campus labs, or a kiosk at the Controllers Office, to view and print their bills.

Ashley Zeller, senior in family and consumer education, said the new system could be a cost-cutting measure for the university.

"It will be cheaper for K-State," she said. "They won't have to pay for postage or paper."

Since receiving a bill in the mail had always been a good reminder to pay her tuition, Zeller said students like herself might need some time to adjust to the university's new electronic system.

"It will be more convenient for students once we get used to it, but it will be less convenient now, since we're used to getting the bill in the mail," she said.

Krister Johnson, junior in computer engineering, said the convenience of the new system depends largely on students' access to the Internet.

"It will be convenient for me, since I have access to it," he said. "But for people who don't have home Internet it would be a pain."

K-State tennis heads to California

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team will have to wait a little longer to enjoy their spring break.

First, they must travel to California to play San Diego and Long Beach State.

The change of scenery will be good for the Wildcats, coach Steve Bietau said.

"I think they're looking forward to going to California, maybe not just for the tennis but also to go to California for spring break," Bietau said.

However, they still remember the reason for the trip.

"We're going there to play and kick their butts," sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia said.

K-State has not played San Diego since 2002 and will meet Long Beach State for the first time.

Bietau said his knowledge of the two teams is limited.

"You could tell me who's playing No. 3 for one of these teams, and I wouldn't even know what she looks like," Bietau said.

Even though the opponents will be new to the Wildcats, the matches will play a big part in how they finish their season, Bietau said.

"It doesn't directly impact the conference race, but I think it does indirectly, because we can become a better team because of these matches," Bietau said.

California will be a nice change, but the real vacation will start when K-State returns home, senior Jessica Simosa said.

"Every time we travel we practice a lot and don't have a lot of time off," Simosa said. "I think the vacation will be when we get back from the trip, because we will have five days off from practice."

San Diego is 6-4 this season.

Long Beach State is ranked No. 20 in the nation with an 11-2 record. It is led by freshman Hannah Grady, ranked No. 69 in the nation, playing at No. 1 singles.

BKC | Arena evacuated before NCAA game

LOS ANGELES — Police evacuated Cox Arena at San Diego State University on Thursday, hours before a first-round NCAA championship basketball game, after a bomb-sniffing dog signaled a potential problem at a hot dog stand.

Cox Arena at San Diego State was cleared while police tried to determine if there was an explosive device in the hot dog stand, assistant vice president for marketing and communications Jack Beresford told Reuters.

NFL | Eagles sign ex-Texans receiver Gaffney

Gaffney

PHILADELPHIA — The Philadelphia Eagles have added another solid player to their young wide receiver corps, a group that collectively will try to compensate for the departure of Terrell Owens, by signing unrestricted free agent Jabar Gaffney to a one-year contract.

A four-year veteran, Gaffney had played his entire career with the Houston Texans, either as a No. 2 or a No. 3 wideout.

He figures to compete for the No. 2 job with Philadelphia, where the Eagles coaches will use mini-camps and training camp to better define the roles of its young wide receivers.

COLUMBIA, Mo. — An outside investigation of the Missouri basketball program has concluded that Director of Athletics Mike Alden did not send a radio announcer to fire former coach Quin Snyder.

According to an 11-page report released Thursday, Tigers broadcaster Gary Link — who also is an assistant to Alden — told a pair of investigators hired by the university that "Alden gave him no directive or order to talk with Snyder" on Feb. 9, hours after Snyder told reporters he would finish out the season.

MLB | U.S. eliminated from World Baseball Classic

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Roger Clemens was a loser in what might have been the final start of his outstanding career, and Mexico eliminated Team USA from the World Baseball Classic.

Oliver Perez and seven relievers combined to pitch a three-hitter Thursday night as Mexico beat the Rocket and the United States 2-1, giving Japan another shot at Korea in the WBC semifinals.

The outcome was a stunner, considering Team USA fielded a lineup loaded with All-Stars even without Derrek Lee and Johnny Damon, sidelined with sore left shoulders.

South Korea had a 3-0 second-round record in Group One, with Team USA, Japan and Mexico all going 1-2. Japan earned the second semifinal berth from the group by allowing the fewest runs in games between the tied teams.

Wanted: high-profile candidate

MARK POTTER

Give Director of Athletics Tim Weiser some credit.

After six seasons of mediocrity, former men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge needed to move on.

Wooldridge was supposed to lead K-State back to the NCAA Tournament. Unfortunately, he couldn't even guide us to the National Invitation Tournament.

Thankfully, Weiser's standards for K-State basketball exceed Wooldridge's achievements.

"We expect our teams to compete at the highest level, and we believe that is reflected by participation in the NCAA Tournament," Weiser said.

Look, I supported Wooldridge until the end.

He was an above-average recruiter and a stand-up guy who ran a clean program. The program is undoubtedly more reputable now than it was six years ago.

Still, the change was necessary. Wildcat fans had become restless, and at times, disinterested. If Weiser chooses the right coach, there will be a new buzz surrounding K-State basketball.

A number of coaching candidates have been mentioned, including former K-State guards Steve Henson and Tim Jankovich, Northern Iowa coach Greg McDermott and Davidson coach Bob McKillop.

Each of these candidates could potentially succeed at K-State, but if Weiser is serious about K-State's long-awaited return to the Big Dance, he should pursue at least one of the following individuals: Indiana coach Mike Davis, former Cincinnati coach Bob Huggins or former Utah coach Rick Majerus.

I think K-State could land one of these high-profile candidates, if the price is right.

Before you decide I'm crazy, let me explain.

I can count the number of appealing and semi-appealing Division I coaching vacancies on one hand – Arizona State, Indiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Rutgers, Temple, K-State and potentially, Cincinnati.

Well, not quite on one hand, but you get the idea.

Of those, only Rutgers, Cincinnati and Indiana posted better overall records than K-State this past season.

Plus, the Wildcats will return a good amount of talent, assuming most of the players decide to stay.

If Davis, Huggins and Majerus decide to coach somewhere next season – I'm not sure about Majerus, but my guess is Davis and Huggins will – K-State has a realistic chance at signing one of them.

Weiser has not discarded the possibility of considering a big-name coach like Huggins, whose tenure at Cincinnati was tarnished by player arrests, poor graduation rates, NCAA probation and a DUI.

"If a candidate comes along that, perhaps along the way, hasn't had the graduation rate that we want, I don't know if that is necessarily going to

Wildcats open North Dakota State series with doubleheader

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team will face North Dakota State in a doubleheader at 2 p.m. today at Tointon Family Stadium, to kick off a three-game series against the Bison.

The series was originally scheduled to begin with one game tonight at 6:30, but coach Brad Hill announced the schedule change Thursday, citing the potential for bad weather this weekend. The third game is still scheduled for 2 p.m. Saturday at Tointon.

"We want to get three games in, and we want to try to give us the best opportunity to do that," Hill said. "We're watching the weather forecast ... we need to try to knock two games out tomorrow before the rains come, and try to find a window in the next two days to get that other one in."

The Wildcats (13-1) are riding high after a 6-3 win against No. 19 Wichita State Tuesday for their 12th straight win of the season, continuing the best start in school history. Hill said he's trying to keep his players' minds on the games ahead, however, rather than on the streak.

"Obviously the coaching staff, we're trying to keep them in the right frame of mind, and obviously the older guys too, you know, it's just we keep talking to them," Hill said.

He said the coaching staff has put up sayings, such as, "You're only as good as your next game," around the locker room to keep the players focused.

North Dakota State (1-13) has lost its last 12 games, but has faced such teams as Creighton, Kentucky, Minnesota and Wichita State.

"They (North Dakota State) played Wichita State three games close, so if you don't come out ready to play, you could be in trouble," he said. "Those games weren't just blow-outs."

Senior outfielder Joe Roundy said the Wildcats will try not to dwell on the win against WSU but instead at the games at hand.

"It's hard, but this team so far this season has been really good about that, just coming back and just forgetting about it, because the game is over, Tuesday's over, don't worry about that, just come out and keep doing exactly what you've been doing, playing hard all the time," Roundy said.

K-State junior Eli Rumler tries to make an out Tuesday evening in the Wildcat's win over Wichita State.

Roundy leads the Big 12 Conference in hitting this week, with 27 hits and .754 batting average on the season, something else he says he's trying not to focus on.

"That's when you start having your problems, is when you start worrying about that kind of stuff," he said. "I mean, it's awesome that I'm up there, and we have two other guys that are up there leading the Big 12 too, but you just have to keep doing exactly what you've been doing."

Senior pitcher Chase Mitchell* said one thing that differentiates this year's squad from last year is the level of focus the team has brought to every game and practice that they might have lacked last season.

"That's helping us go ahead and play to our level of baseball every game, every time we step on the yard," Mitchell said. "We've been playing with a lot of confidence all year, and I don't think anything's going to change, we just try to come out every day with intensity and focus. We're just going to keep doing the things we've been doing – all the little things we've been doing all year to make us successful."

Rowers begin spring season at Longhorn Invite

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State rowing team will start its spring season this weekend in Austin, Texas, at the annual three-day Longhorn Invitational.

At the invitational, K-State will take on top crews in Iowa, Duke, Miami and No. 8 Wisconsin. The team won't compete against host school, and Big 12 Conference rival, Texas.

"Since it is our first event, it'll be our learning process," freshman Michelle Higgins said, referring to the Longhorn Invitational. "Coach (Patrick Sweeney) will swap people around to see how smooth we can row together. I feel as if we are entering strong."

K-State is coming off of its best fall season in school history. The First Novice Eight set a K-State record when it placed first in three different meets.

The team won the Head of the Oklahoma and the Head of the Iowa, where they beat perennial Big Ten Conference powers Minnesota and Wisconsin. The team also finished first at the Sunflower Showdown in Manhattan when they beat in-state rival Kansas.

Last season, the Wildcats topped Southern Methodist, Creighton and Tulsa in head-to-head races during the Longhorn Invitational, while the 1 Novice 8+ and 2 Novice 8+ boats claimed victories against Duke.

The Wildcats have many new members to the team this spring season.

Junior Kaci Williams said she doesn't see that to be causing any major troubles for the team so far this season.

"We might struggle at the beginning due to some inexperience," Williams said. "Once we start to row together, I think we'll begin to become a good team. I feel like this season should be good – I have some excitement for the season."

Facebook fakes

They stand out like a sore thumb while browsing Facebook. Coaches, celebrities and historical figures signed up with K-State e-mail addresses and gimmicked profiles. Their Facebook friends around America can reach the thousands, with most not even knowing the creators' real name.

By Zachary T. Eckels | KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

WILLIE THE WILDCAT

Sarah Hurd, sophomore in kinesiology, used her K-State e-mail twice in order to create such an account. Hurd said she is now the most popular Willie the Wildcat out of the three listed on Facebook.

"I'm not really sure why it works, but if you use ksu.edu, then you can add another one under k-state.edu," she said.

Hurd said it was not hard for her to set up the account or keep it updated. She said the only thing she found annoying was keeping up with friend requests.

"He has a lot of friend requests, so every time I get on I have to go through 30 to 50 friends requests," she said. "He's a popular guy."

A recent addition to Facebook that provides even more fun for those with fake names is friend details, she said.

"Mr. Kitty is my son, and that's kind of a fun one," Hurd said. "Jim Wooldridge and I are married."

SEAN CONNERY

Another way to get a fake account is to use the second e-mail your school may give to you.

"I got mine through the physics department. It was assigned to me," said Matthew Prascher, junior in physics and K-State's Facebook Sean Connery.

He said that with the second e-mail he decided to have a little bit of fun with something that was not too offensive or out of the ordinary.

"I figured just a little bit of comical inspiration for the masses," he said.

Prascher said he didn't expect his account to become as popular as other fake Facebook accounts.

"I really didn't expect it to take off and run as much as it has already," he said.

He said the most fun he's had is having people with fake Connery accounts from other universities adding him and the comments that people make on his wall.

"My favorite have been people who stick me on inconsistencies of getting Connery's actual biography mixed up with James Bond information," he said. "It will be inconsistent in the occupation and the actual historic knowledge of Sean Connery."

He said the students who are bored and feel like having a good laugh should give a fake Facebook account a try.

"Why don't you try it?" Prascher said. "It's fun as long as you're not purposely harming someone else by using harsh language or berating them with mean words."

KITTY WHOMPESS

Not everyone chooses to create a fake Facebook account with a public figure, though. Amanda Beasley, junior in elementary education, said she used her K-State account for her pet, Kitty Whompess.

"I have my facebook under my KU address because I transferred here," she said. "I had an extra one, so I thought I'd make one for my cat."

She said she enjoyed becoming friends with a lot of people who she wouldn't have met otherwise.

"All the cats that people have made for their account are all friends with my cats, and they'll post things up there about things like playing with catnip and fishing," Beasley said.

She said it was also fun for all her friends at K-State.

"People always ask me about it because all my friends know my cat, so they get to talk to my cat instead of talking to me," Beasley said.

She said she recommended using a fake Facebook for any student with a pet.

"If you have an extra e-mail address you should make one for your cat," she said. "I love kitties, so I'll be your friend."

'The Hills Have Eyes' is unoriginal but worthwhile

"The Hills Have Eyes"

Movie review by Brendan Praeger

"The Hills Have Eyes" is an exciting and gruesome movie that should please all fans of horror films.

French director Alexandre Aja's remake of Wes Craven's 1977 film breaks the trend of many recent remakes in that it actually improves upon the original.

The plot revolves around a suburban American family stranded in the desert and is being stalked by a group of psychotic cannibals. But these aren't your average movie cannibals – they have been genetically mutated by nuclear testing in the New Mexico desert.

From the original footage of nuclear testing that opens the film, to the ambiguous ending, the movie is stylish, bloody and creepy. The classic country music sets the perfect tone, and the desert provides a great background for some senseless violence.

One area where the film does not succeed is originality. The family takes a wrong turn after stopping at a gas station in the middle of the desert. They panic, split up and then some of them die.

Any fan of horror movies has seen this plot before, but sometimes a movie doesn't need to break any barriers to keep viewers happy.

The character development also leaves something to be desired. The family is well-developed. Each character has their own personality, and it is genuinely upsetting to watch them die.

The mutants, however, are not explored enough. I'd love to know more about the mutant leader who coordinates attacks on his walkie-talkie, or why the gas station attendant is eerily eager to send the tourists into harm's way.

Sometimes horror villains don't need motivation (zombies like brains, no need for characterization), but in this case, the fact that they're isolated cannibals just isn't enough.

Horror fans will love this movie. It has more than enough style and gore to entertain an audience for 107 minutes. However, if you're looking for something smart and original, "V for Vendetta" might be a safer choice this weekend.

Riley County to implement touch-screen electronic voting system by August 1

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County residents will submit their votes electronically for the Aug. 1 primary election, using touch-screen technology that will be implemented in all voting precincts.

The county purchased 175 new iVotronic electronic voting machines that will make polling booths more accessible to all citizens, said Stephanie Wing, public information officer for the Kansas Secretary of State's office.

"For the first time in the state, everybody with any kind of disability will be able to vote with an unassisted ballot," Wing said. "I think it's a great thing for making the system more accessible."

Previously, residents with vision or hearing impairments required the assistance of a poll worker to cast their vote.

The new technology provides alternate methods, such as complete audio capabilities for residents who cannot see.

It also allows for a sip-and-puff method, which allows people with disabilities to communicate by breath, said Rich Vargo, Riley County clerk and election official.

Riley County has received one machine so far and expects the rest of the order to arrive by May, Vargo said.

The county is using a demonstrator model to educate county staff, poll workers and voting residents about the new technology. The machine is available for public use, and voters are encouraged to go to the Riley County Courthouse and become familiar with it, Vargo said.

With the exception of the ballots the courthouse mails to citizens who aren't able to vote at their assigned precinct, all votes will be cast electronically.

The machines were purchased in accordance to the 2002 Help America Vote Act. This federal mandate requires all voting precincts to have this technology in place before the 2006 elections.

The total cost for this project, which was approved by the county in December 2005, was $548,870. Federal grants paid for $288,430, leaving Riley County to cover the remaining costs, Vargo said.

While this technology is new to Riley County, it has been around for quite some time.

"A lot of people aren't really aware, but it's been used in the United States for 30 years, and very successfully," Vargo said. "Johnson County has been using it for 18 years."

The new technology is also well-tested and safe, and citizens have no reason to be concerned about casting their vote, Vargo said.

The equipment will be tested prior to elections to ensure that votes are being recorded properly.

People can come in and fill out a practice ballot, and Riley County will make sure the vote is recorded in the system's microchips, Vargo said.

"People have also been concerned whether people would be able to hack electronic voting – they're individual, stand alone systems that are plugged into one outlet," he said. "They're not plugged into the Internet or anywhere. It's a very secure system, and four poll workers will be present to supervise."

The technology does have a paper audit trail in case a recount is ever needed.

The memory of the machine will record the number of votes, and can actually print out each individual ballot, Wing said.

Fewer than 10 counties in Kansas have implemented a demo voting machine, but it is hoped that all counties will have the technology installed by May or June, Wing said.

Eli Heerman, sophomore in political science, said he has no preference in voting methods.

"It makes no difference to me," Heerman said. "I can fill out a bubble on a ballot or push a button."
